Cigarettes.

Every parent should send 10 cents to Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, and get a copy of his new pamphlet on "Cigarettes, and Other Forms of Tobacco Using." Every boy should read this little book, for the reason if he uses cigarettes, he will stop their use, and if not, he will never commence smoking them. This booklet will be of great value to all who use tobacco in any form. Get it.

CROSSING THE BRIDGE.

"I don't like to have you cross on that railroad bridge, James."

"Why not, mother dear?"

"I don't think it safe.'

"Safe? Ho—it's only such a dear old anxious mother as you could think of such a thing as danger. How could there be danger?"

"It is such a narrow track, if trains should come."

"But trains don't run at the time I am crossing."

"Still they might. You never can tell what trains may do. I wish you would give it up, James.'

"Seriously, mother, I don't see how I can. I can't fit in my time any other way. If I go away round the bay, it takes me half an hour. If I cross the bridge, I can get my work done at the office and whip over in time for school."

"Well, dear, be careful," was all that mother could say.

"I'll take all the care in the world," you may rely on that," said the boy, putting an arm lovingly around her. "And do keep your dear heart at rest. As if a big fellow like me couldn't be trusted to look out for himself even if an emergency came—and I don't mean to get in the way of emergencies."

But emergencies get into our way sometimes, as James was obliged to realize not long after the little talk with his mother.

The town in which they lived was situated near the extremity of a considerable lake, which extended further in a bay or arm of some length. The bridge, a long one, was built over the entrance to this bay, and was a great convenience to pedestrians and wheelmen who made up their minds to risk any peril which might exist in the crossing of it, as the town straggled on both sides of the bay.

James was helping himself through high school by working mornings and evenings in the office of a business man on the other side of the town, and felt unwilling, as we have seen, to give up the advantage in time afforded by the bridge.

It lay straight for a certain distance, then made a sharp curve. A narrow walk at one side gave ample room and good wheeling to those of sure footing and steady brain. James had taken many a swift ride across it and scorned the idea of there being any peril connected with it.

But, turning the curve one evening on his way home, he saw something ahead of him which caused him to slacken his pace.

"Who's that? Some young one out here—as good as his life's worth." Oh, it's Billy Harmon—poor little chap that nobody ever takes any care of. Now, what am I to do about it?"

Slowly approaching the little fellow, whose small steps had led him into such real danger, James crowded a great deal of thinking into a very small space of time. On one side of the narrow pathway lay the railroad with an open network of timbers between the tracks; on the other side the deep water below. The way was so narrow as to make it inconvenient either to dismount from his wheel or to take Billy up with him as he would have done on terra firma. To lead both Billy and the bicycle would be difficult. He could not well pass him, or he might then have coaxed him to follow him to solid land. The best way would be to urge him to go before him.

"Billy," he called, "turn around and go back."

Billy smiled as he saw who was approaching, but made no motion towards obeying.

"Don't you see I'm coming, Billy? I can't pass you. One of us would go down into the water. See, now—we'll go back together.'

Still the small boy lingered, and James began to get a little out of patience.

"Go on, Billy. Don't you hear me?"

And in that same moment came a sound, mingling itself with his voice, which struck a cold chill to his heart.

It was as he had maintained in reassuring his mother, no trains were due at the times in which he crossed the bridge. But he had made no calculations for extras—excursions and the like. A quick glance behind him showed a train coming at a good rate of speed, and in the next moment the shaking of the bridge and the fast approaching roar told of the nearness of the appalling danger.

James threw up his hands in hope of signaling the engineer, but realized the impossibility of the engine being brought to a stop in time. Again he wildly shrieked to Billy, who now, catching sight of the advancing terror, stood as if paralyzed with fear.

Again the whistle screamed its warning as the rumbling came nearer. There was only one thing to be done. First pushing off his wheel, that its fall might not be complicated with his own James seized the small boy in his arms and sprang into the water fifteen feet below.

Then began the hardest tug his life will probably ever know. He was a good swimmer and could easily have looked out for his own safety, but in wild terror Billy clung to him in a way which greatly crippled his efforts.

A number of people had quickly gathered at sight of his peril, and if the train had gone promptly on its way, help would have soon reached him. Men came running with ropes to throw him from the bridge. But the engineer had done his best to stop the train, and it now stood still, while the windows were full of heads of those who gazed excitedly at the brave struggle for two lives.

Holding the small boy with one arm, James with the other struck out for the shore, which fortunately was not far distant. But Billy was a dead weight on him and his strength was almost gone by the time a boat, brought from some distance, could reach him.

"Pretty near done up, I guess," came in tones of sympathy as at length he and his charge were helped over the side of the boat.

"It's my wheel that's done up, I'm afraid," said James in great concern." I should get over it if I was hurt, but my wheel won't.'

Before long he had joined those who with poles and hooks assembled on the bridge to fish for the bicycle. As he had anticipated, it had been the worst sufferer by the fall. But those who had witnessed the boy's heroic saving of a life enthusiastically made up a purse and bought him the finest one which had ever been seen in the town.

Of course, mother could not forbear the "I told you so."

"The danger did come, James, as I foretold,' she said.

"It did, showing that you were right, as you always are. But, mother, if I hadn't crossed that day, what would have become of Billy?"

DON'T HURRY

Haste makes waste. If you have but five minutes to do a thing, it may pay to take one minute to plan how it shall be done. Hurry and worry go together, and they often result from idleness and carelessness.

"You didn't run fast enough," said a bystander to an Irishman, who came puffing into a railway station just after the train glided out.

"Yes, I did run fast enough," said Patrick, "but I did not start soon enough."

Dawdle in the morning causes hurry at night. The man who is up betimes, and gets an early start, does not need either to hurry or worry.

"Time enough" is always little enough, and the time lost in idleness and neglect is not to be made up in frantic haste. Says a judicious writer:

"We can spoil more work, do more damage to all concerned, and create more needless delay by anxious, unseeming and precipitate haste than in any other way. Our powers of perception become dimmed, our spiritual discernment becomes less acute, our reason is more sure to be at fault, our memory refuses to fulfill her office, our tempers become unmanageable, our whole nature—physical, mental and moral—becomes incapacitated for the best quality of work. So much that we have so done would be so much better left undone, and still more will require to be done over again, that we will find that the old motto will repeat itself in our hurried experience, 'The more haste the less speed.' So there is a profound truth in Wesley's apparently singular statement, 'I have no time to be in a hurry;' and an older writer, conscious of a self-poise of the trusting soul which rests upon a sure foundation, has said: 'Thus saith the Lord God, behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste.'"—Christian.

CIGARETTE SMOKERS NOT WANTED.

The railroad companies, steamship corporations, and nearly all the organizations that employ men, are teaching morals these days. It isn't because men of money have any special love for their fellow-men, or feel philanthropic thrills and a desire to benefit humanity.

It is business. It is because a better class of employees is wanted.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railway Company has placed a ban on habitual cigarette smokers. There are no places for them. Those in the employ of the company who make a practice of smoking cigarettes will not be retained.

"Because," said H. A. Ives, an official of the company, "the habitual cigarette smoker is almost sure to be more or less color blind."

One good thing that can be said of the present system of trade competition is that it has raised the standard of men, and the time is coming when only the clean-limbed, bright-eyed, well-developed and well equipped man can secure or hold a position of trust.

It is possible for all men to be good. It is probable that more men will be good when the lash of necessity stings them, for such is the way of the world.—Exchange.

NO TIME TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

I say to my friend, "Be a Christian." That means to be a full man. And he says to me: "I have not time to be a Christian. I have not room. If my life was not so full! You don't know how hard I work from morning till night. What time is there for me to be a Christian? What time is there, what room is there, for Christianity in such a life as mine?" But does it not seem to us so strange, so absurd, if it was not so melancholy, that man should say such a thing as that?

It is as if the engine had said it had no room for the steam. It is as if the tree had said it had no room for the sap. It is as if the ocean had said that it had no room for the tide. It is as if the man said that he had no room for his soul. It is as if life said it had no time to live, when it is life. It is not something that is added to life. Life is the thing we seek, and man finds it in the fulfillment of his life by Jesus Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

GOD'S LIGHT.

A beautiful story is told in the Lutheran World of a little girl, whose faith in God may teach us all a lesson.

The lamp had just been put out, and the little girl was rather afraid of the dark. But, presently she saw the bright moon out of the window, and she asked her mother, "Is the moon God's light?"

"Yes, Ethel," the mother replied; "the moon and stars are all God's lights."

"Will God blow out his light and go to sleep, too?"

"No, my child," replied the mother: "God's lights are always burning."

"Well, mama," said Ethel, "while God's awake I'm not afraid."

An Indian baby was dying. It lay in its father's arms, while near by stood another little daughter, a few years older, who was a Christian.

"Father," said the little girl, "little sister is going to heaven to night. Let us pray."

As she said this she kneeled at her father's knee, and this sweet little prayer fell from her lips:

"Father God, little sister is coming to see you to-night. Please open the door softly and let her in. Amen."—Western Christian Advocate.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. HARRIETT POSTELL PIPES died in Wichita, Kan., May 14, 1901, and was buried by the side of her beloved husband, John Pipes, May 17, in Grand Cane Cemetery, Louisiana. She was born in Charleston, S. C., July 23, 1826, and married to Rev. John Pipes, June 24, 1849. Such is the brief record of the outward events of this most beautiful life. On fairer pages than these is recorded the long self-sacrifice and devotion to others which shed such a radiance about her, and made even a stranger exclaim, "I consider it a privilege to have known her." It was during the long year of awful suffering which preceded her death that we felt that we had never truly known her. By nature she was timid and shrinking as a child; yet, when she was called upon to pass through the deep waters of physical and mental torture, her brave, heroic spirit never once faltered. With a fortitude—nay, a brightness and unconquerable cheerfulness—she bore the agony of a thousand deaths, coming out of hours of pain always with smiles and words of hope and comfort to others. When her conscious mind had wandered away from all scenes of pain, and she thought she was a girl again, her spirit with wonderful prescience foretold to our agonized hearts her coming release. "Doctor," she said, smiling up to him, "I am on the river; I hear the splashing of the waves," and another time, "To-morrow I shall be more pleasantly situated," and again with unutterable joy, "In the morning I am going home." A very child of nature, loving with boundless adoration her sunshine and her flowers, with almost her last conscious breath she asked to have the curtains drawn, saying, "I want to see the sun rise." What sound struck upon her ravished ear, what vision upon her astonished sight, we shall never know; but that some wonderful surprise greeted her as she stepped across the threshold, none can doubt who looked upon her face after death, and saw its re-established youth, and its eager and astonished joy. It was through nature's May festival of flowers that we carried her home, and, covered with the roses she loved, we laid her down to sleep by the side of him who held her next on earth for more than forty years. God grant it was his hand held out to her that gave her such rapture and surprise. KATE J. JONES.

Webster Groves, Mo.

MRS. JULIANNA HARPER, daughter of Aaron Pierce and Mary Anderson, was born in Virginia, Aug. 20, 1812, and died at Wellon, La., Feb. 28, 1901. Her parents moved to Shelby county, Ala., and here she was married to Henry W. Harper, Aug. 14, 1835. They moved to Union parish, La., and there the last fifty years of her life were spent. She was a member of the Methodist Church about seventy years. She and her husband helped organize the first church near them in Louisiana, and she was the last of the number to leave it for the "church above." She was a careful reader; read good books, but her one book was the Bible, and in it did she "meditate day and night," and her life was an impressive and instructive commentary on its saving truths. She was truly a lover of home; seldom absent from it, except when ministering to the sick and sorrowing, and in such ministry she was excelled by none; with a clear, discriminating mind; rare, practical sense; with judgment seldom wrong, and intuitions that seemed almost certainties. She had indomitable will and great executive force that made her the leader in anything in which she participated. She was a widow many years; for some time quite feeble, but her faith was always strong. She never murmured; was never impatient or discontented, but quietly, peacefully ebb lived out her days here, as a benediction to those about her. Industrious, frugal, systematic in everything her's was a model home. She was the mother of five sons and two daughters. The eldest son sleeps in a soldier's grave at Corinth, Miss.; one is a member of the Louisiana Conference, and the others reside near the old home—all Christians and members of the church their parents loved. She was a devoted wife, a loving mother, a steady, strong Christian, and by her godly example and triumphant death she taught us how to live and how to die. She lives in her children, and they "rise up and call her blessed." Her influence and memory abide. She is still our mother.

J. D. HARPER.

J. S. NOEL, JR., son of Jas. S. and Fannie Noel, was born Sept. 4, 1877, and died April 15, 1901. He was a young man of excellent qualities of heart and mind, and of whom "all spoke well." He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, while a student at Centenary College, Jackson, La., and ever lived an exemplary Christian life. His parents had trained him to do right from childhood. The influence of a truly Christian home did much to develop in his life those elements of a noble young manhood which all through his young life so distinguished him. His parents prayerfully and carefully trained him to "abhor evil and choose the good," and he was an obedient son. He was taken seriously ill with congestion of the brain, and was never conscious, save to momentarily recognize his weeping sister and once again the writer of this notice; but, although he could not know and speak to his heart-broken father, mother, and other loved ones, yet his pure, guileless life speaks louder than words. It speaks of heaven and of love, and as angels speak above. So pure and blameless was his life, Jimmie was never absent from church when it was possible for him to attend. He always had a word of cheer and encouragement for his pastor, and would speak hopefully of the outlook. We shall miss him at the church; we shall miss him at his place of business. The community has lost one of its brightest jewels, the parish one of its best citizens, the preacher one of his best friends, and the bereft family one of its most valued and loved members. May the good Lord comfort them, and may all meet him in heaven! M. G. J.

MRS. MILLIE ELLA (nee Ryan), wife of J. S. Deseil, was born in Copiah county, Miss., May 20, 1857, and died at her home in Hazlehurst, May 8, 1901. This is the third time death has "left an aching void" and a vacant seat in that home circle (two children having preceded her), and each one touched its own cord in the heart and produced its own sensation of loss; but in the death of the true wife and loving mother the innermost sensibilities of the heart are stirred as never before. The subject of this sketch leaves behind her a beautiful memory. She joined the church in early life, and ever held inviolate her consecration vows. Beneath a reserve and shrinking delicacy there shone a beautiful character. She silently spread around her that soft, pure light, the preciousness of which was fully understood when the angel of death took her. Her gentle sympathy, calm wisdom, serene humility constituted her a spirit of good, diffusing a tranquilizing influence too Christly to be overlooked and too vital to be fruitless. She was a model wife, lovingly true to all the claims of the marital relation. She was a self-sacrificing mother, tenderly devoted to her children; but she has been taken from us. The loving eye which has so long brightened the home sheds its mild beam no more; the voice which so sympathetically inquired into the husband's labors and whispered sweet approval is silent; the loving hand which so tenderly pressed his aching head is still. In vain we prayed with bitter tears: "Oh, linger! Take her not yet, not yet!" She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. To them we tender deepest sympathy.

HER PASTOR.

MRS. MARY MABEN was born in Yazoo county, Miss., in 1845, and died in Learned, Hinds county, Miss., in her fifty-fifth year. She was the wife of Mr. Thomas S. Maben, who died some years ago, leaving her with seven small children. She raised her children in the fear and love of God. The majority of these children are Christians. A few days before her death she said, "I am still praying for my boys." She was a kind and gentle mother and a devoted Christian. Her faith in her Savior was great; great enough to triumph over all the temptations and troubles incident to human life. She never doubted the power of grace to sustain her under all the trying circumstances of life. She joined the M. E. Church, South, and remained faithful to her vows until her Lord said, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." She is gone to her bright and glorious reward in heaven. She left two sons and five daughters to mourn her death. May they emulate her virtues and finally meet her in heaven! HER PASTOR.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. Health and Beauty

For generations women have been taught that "beauty is only skin deep," but, like many proverbs, that will not stand. Beauty is blood deep. There can be no beauty without health. Our grandmothers lived closer to nature than we do, and they were so sheltered by their home life that health and beauty were theirs naturally. Skin foods, freckle lotions and face bleaches were unknown commodities. But there has been a great change in the life of women since then. With broader education and larger opportunities, she has developed mentally at the expense of her health. From the quiet duties of home she has gone forth until now we find her in many avocations of life, which prove too great a tax on her vitality. How sad it is to see the cheek robbed of its color and the eye of its fire. These symptoms nearly always show derangements in the delicate feminine organism. They don't call for bleaches or paints or powders, but for a remedy that will make the afflicted organs strong and well. Wine of Cardui is just such a remedy. Women broken in health and spirit have been made healthy and happy by this Wine. No one should give up to the "blues" until this reliable remedy has been tried. It has proven a blessing to other women and will not disappoint you. It brings that buoyancy of spirit, elasticity of step and lightness of heart which is the corner stone of beauty. A healthy woman is always beautiful.

Westville, February 4, 1899.

I feel that I must say a few words in praise of the Ladies' greatest friend, Wine of Cardui. It is the most wonderful remedy that I ever tried. I have been a sufferer for years, at times being confined to my bed two or three days each month. A friend recommended Wine of Cardui, and since I have taken it I have been greatly relieved. I intend to continue to take it, for I know it is as recommended. I will use every effort to get others to use it. Mrs. MARY E. COOLEY.

An Experiment Worth Trying!

When you next order biscuit, crackers or wafers tell your grocer you want the kind that comes in the In-er-seal Patent Package. When you get them, serve them from the package. Don't put them in a cracker jar—keep them in the package! You will be surprised to find them as fresh as to-day's bread, as delicate as a piece of pie crust just from the oven, and you will pass a resolution never again to buy any kind of biscuit not protected by the In-er-seal Patent Package.

Soda, Milk, Graham and Oatmeal Biscuit, Vanilla Wafers and Ginger Snaps come in the In-er-seal Patent Package. Don't take a substitute. Look for this seal on the ends of the package.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

General Eugene May died in this city on June 17.

The Boers have captured 200 British soldiers at Steenkoolspruit.

The city of Nashville will be asked to subscribe $1,000,000 for a new railroad.

An English company capitalized at $2,000,000 will operate in the Beaumont field.

A contract to construct a cruiser for Turkey has been awarded to a British firm.

The Chinese in the United States are organizing to fight the Geary exclusion act.

Gen. Cailles, the Filipino insurgent leader, will surrender at Santa Cruz, Laguna Province.

The Bismarck statue in Berlin was unveiled in the presence of the Emperor and an enormous gathering of people.

Wm. B. Schmidt, for over fifty years of the mercantile house of Schmidt and Ziegler, died on last Sunday.

D. B. Henderson, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, called on President Loubet in Paris.

The commencement exercises of the Southwestern Louisiana Industrial Institute were held at Lafayette. Gov. Heard made an address.

The ministers have agreed on the details of the Chinese indemnity. Payment of 450,000,000 taels, with interest at 4 per cent., is contemplated.

The twelfth annual session of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress will meet at Cripple Creek, Colo., on the 16th of next month, and will remain in session four days.

The news dispatches from Peking convey the belief that what is known as the British-American plan of settling the indemnity question is making headway, and that it will in the end be adopted as the only feasible scheme.

It is reported that the Holland submarine boat interests will make a strong fight to secure the authorization of a number of the Holland boats during the next session of Congress. Such an effort was made last year, but it was stubbornly fought by the Navy Department.

The brewers of Indiana have gotten a fit of economy of late. This fit may lessen the number of saloons in the State, but it is open to question as to whether the consumption of beer will be in any ways diminished. They have agreed that after July 1 they will cease the practice of starting men in the saloon business, furnishing fixtures and licenses, on consideration that the saloon thus established should sell only the beer brewed by the promoter.

A constitutional amendment has been approved by the California Legislature and is to be submitted to the electors at the next election, which would substitute a State commission for the railroad commission, a bank commission and the insurance commission. The new body would fix telegraph and telephone rates, as also rates on gas, water and electricity; would supervise railroad and sleeping-car companies, banks and insurance companies, and in general would control all quasi-public institutions and all public utilities.

Gratitude.

Dr. H. Mozley—Dear Sir: Since using your Lemon Elixir I have never had another attack of those fearful sick headaches, and thank God that I have at last found a medicine that will cure those awful spells.

MRS. ETTA W. JONES,
Parkersburg, West Virginia.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

I suffered with indigestion and dysentery for two long years. I heard of Lemon Elixir; got it; taken seven bottles and am now a well man.

HARRY ADAMS,

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured my husband, who was afflicted for years with large ulcers on his leg and was cured after using two bottles; and cured a friend whom the doctors had given up to die, who had suffered for years with indigestion and nervous prostration.

MRS. E. A. BEVILLE,
Woodstock, Ala.

A CARD.

For nervous and sick headaches, indigestion, biliousness and constipation (of which I have been a great sufferer) I have never found a medicine that would give such pleasant, prompt and permanent relief as Dr. H. Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc.

30TH ANNUAL CAMP MEETING

Seashore Camp Grounds.

WILL OPEN (D. V.) ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, NEXT AND CONTINUE FOR 8 OR 10 DAYS.

The Grounds are opened April 1 and closed Nov. 1, for occupying cottages and reception of visitors. Modern and ample accommodation have been provided for the multitudes that annually visit this refreshing and delightfully cool and bracing place of rest, free from malaria and contagious diseases.

The sea bathing is unsurpassed by any resort on the Mississippi Sound, while the supply of pure, sparkling drinking water is furnished by one of the finest of artesian wells, whose waters possess rare virtues.

The exhilarating sea breezes refresh the fatigued, and act as a tonic to the debilitated visitors from our smoke enveloped and dust-stifling cities and towns. Boats for sailing and fishing always on hand. The drives along the seashore present magnificent views, and are over ten miles in length. Visitors are not expected to arrive or depart on the Sabbath day.

The L. and N. R. R Company will place on sale the reduced rate of fare during the season, from all points on their lines, and secure a corresponding rate from all connecting lines. Tickets will be placed on sale July 7 to 21, inclusive, and be good to return on until Aug. 31. Two daily mail trains stop at the camp grounds, besides the accommodation and excursion trains, during the entire Summer season. A fine hotel with a frontage of 175 feet, equipped with electric lights and all modern conveniences, has been erected.

All itinerant preachers of the Southern Methodist Church will be admitted into the grounds and provided with lodging accommodations in Wesley Hall free of charge.

The usual entrance fee will be in force this season. No charge will be exacted for entrance on the Sunday of the camp meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to attend the camp meeting and spend a while on the camp ground.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before and during camp meeting, or rent cottages for the season, will please communicate with W. L. Via, superintendent Camp Ground (Biloxi, P. O. 42, Miss.) or any of the following officers:

Hollins Institute

Established 1842 for the Higher Education of Young Ladies

will open its 59th session on the 11th of September, 1901. This is a school in which all the solicitude, watch-care, supervision and inspiration of a cultured Virginia home were enrolled. Literature, Languages, Histories, Sciences, Music, Art, Elocution, etc., are taught under high standards. The Faculty and management is composed of 12 gentlemen and 23 ladies. The Eclectic system is used. Diplomas are issued in all departments, each of which is presided over by a University graduate. The school is located on the N. & W. Ry. (Shenandoah Division) 7 miles north of Roanoke City—in a region abounding in scenery beautiful beyond description, and redolent of health. There are six main buildings, all of brick, with extensive verandas, all connected by covered ways. It owns 500 acres of land and valuable mineral springs—Sulphur and Chalybeate, which conduce largely to the health and vigor of growing girls. For illustrated catalogue address

AN APPEAL FROM THE BISHOPS FOR OUR JACKSONVILLE CHURCH.

On May 3 the city of Jacksonville, Fla., was visited by one of the most disastrous fires in the history of our country. The conflagration swept bare of all buildings one hundred and thirty blocks in the heart of the city, inflicting a loss of property to the amount of $10,500,000, and leaving over 10,000 people homeless.

The congregation of our McTyeire Memorial Church suffered much. The homes and business houses of many of our people were destroyed, and their beautiful house of worship was consumed. Insurance falls far below their losses.

They are entirely unable to restore the church, bearing the revered name of McTyeire, and which is so vitally related to the success of our work in the city of Jacksonville and the State of Florida. It is of the last importance that the house be replaced without delay. The amount of money required for its re-erection, above what the congregation can supply, is $20,000.

These facts have been brought to our notice by the presiding elder, pastor, and official members of the church, with the request that we give them counsel, and help to meet the urgent needs of their trying and perplexing situation. After considering the whole case, with all possible sources of relief, we conclude that the emergency calls for the help of the whole church. The magnitude of the losses and the urgency of the need demand liberal and immediate response to the request of our brethren for aid.

We beg, therefore, that our pastors in every part of the church will present this matter to their congregations and take collections within the next thirty days to rebuild our McTyeire Memorial Church, forwarding money without delay to Rev. P. H. Whisner, D. D., secretary of the Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky. It is important that the money be secured as promptly as possible, that the work of rebuilding may proceed immediately. We suggest that Sunday, June 30, be set apart for this appeal and collection, it being understood, however, that if for any cause it should be found impracticable in some places to use that day, the matter receive attention on a day as near thereto as possible.

Let all our people everywhere come to the help of our stricken brethren in Jacksonville, remembering the words of the apostle, "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Twice before attention has been called in these columns to the great misfortune of our Jacksonville brethren. To what extent they have been aided we do not know, but this appeal of our Bishops is an indication that the help received has not amounted to a great deal. We hope this appeal will be heeded, and at the earliest moment. The very name, McTyeire Memorial, ought to appeal strongly to our Louisiana Methodists. Responses ought to be prompt and generous.

A LAYMAN SPEAKS.

MR. EDITOR: The "local-preacher" question which has been exciting some of the brethren of that fraternity, and inciting some to air their views in your columns, is evidently not a dead issue, if it is apparently an obsolete one. So far as pulpit ministrations are concerned, the day of the local preacher's usefulness has passed. He is no longer wanted, or needed, or expected to take any part of the pastor's work. The increase in population and wealth, the building of many churches, the constantly diminishing size of the circuits, the improvement and increase of general intelligence among the people, have relegated him to the rear.

When Bishops Asbury and McKendree, and the brave itinerants who followed them, were planting Methodism here and yonder, the right arm of the local preacher was strong. He was needed to guard the line; not so now, as to pulpit work. The itinerant ranks have filled up, and the man of "one business" is in demand. The assertion is generally true that local preachers are deficient in educational training, and that the common people are no longer ignorant. The pew is no longer willing to listen to untutored, untrained, and unwise men. This applies to the itinerant as well as the local preacher. The people demand an educated as well as a sanctified ministry. Our church, as well as all others, had better take heed. About one-fourth—may be more—of our young preachers now on trial ought to be at school. They can't learn too much too soon. To tarry at Jericho till their beard grows out is not too great a demand for the church to make upon her youth who propose to assume the role and don the robe of the prophets. The same precaution is necessary in the local as in the active ranks. There is too much ignorance in the pulpit and too much indolence. We say this after mature reflection, and after years of close observation, with no spirit of criticism or censure. Untutored youth can not teach, can not preach. We once heard a good old pious, devoted, generous steward heave a sigh of pleasurable relief, and almost shout for joy, when he heard that his circuit was to have an experienced, thoughtful, solid-thinking old preacher, who enjoyed "the old-time religion" and preached it. He said they had been breaking in the young horses for years, and he was tired of the school-boy sermons, the crude thoughts, speculative notions, freshness, greenness, and longed for food upon which to feed his soul and mind—not that he loved the boy less, but because he could not feed him.

Preaching to-day is not what it was one hundred years ago. Conditions have changed; "the world do move." With a school-house on every hill-top and dotting every vale, with colleges springing up everywhere as by magic touch, there is bound to be an increasing tide of intelligence flowing into every home and community, and the pulpit must get to a quick step, and keep pace with—yea, run ahead of—the pew in order to be able, "in season and out of season," to "preach the Word." We know a real country church, far from any railroad or river, that has in its congregation and membership thirty educated men and women, graduates of universities, colleges, normal and high schools. Lawyers, legislators, preachers, doctors, merchants, farmers and teachers constitute the class of people who fill the pew; and more than once has an humble steward of that congregation been made to blush for the ignorance and weakness of the pastor and local brethren. If the ministry expect the church to move on to victory, there must be a turn in the old lane, and consecrated, educated, zealous men stand behind the sacred altar.

Christ enjoined the apostle to feed his sheep and lambs. The idea and purpose of feeding is to give relief and comfort. To relieve hunger food must be substantially nutritious.

But, like some preachers, your readers may think we have wandered off from the text. The local preacher can exist, perhaps grow, if he is willing to study and equip himself, and be sure that his work among men in the world is exemplary and upright. As organizer of prayer meeting, Sabbath-schools, Epworth Leagues, class meetings, and leading and working, he might do effective work. A benighted corner which the pastor can't reach by buggy or railroad might be a field for pulpit effort. May the good Lord save us all!

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: This institution closed the most prosperous session in its history since the war on June 12. There were more boarders than ever before, reaching nearly the limit of the buildings.

Dr. Moore, of Monroe, preached the commencement sermon, which was very highly spoken of to the writer, who came in too late to enjoy it.

Monday night was given to the graduating class essays, there being twelve who had to be limited to only five minutes each, which was filled with highly creditable essays; then the prophetess gave us the occupations and successes of the class just twenty years hence.

On Tuesday night there was the annual concert, which consisted of vocal and instrumental selections rendered with skill, and showing musical talent ready for the development of some conservatory; but the selections rendered by the orchestra of stringed instruments was to the unscientific ear of the writer the most enjoyable of the evening exercises.

Then Wednesday came, with the finale of sending forth twelve fair young women as graduates. After some few selections of music the writer had the privilege to give a plain, practical address to the class, exhorting them to remember the highest calling of a woman in the world was to be a home-maker; that all other vocations would be full to overflowing, but that the world and nation would never have a surplus of Christian home-makers. President Sligh made a very appropriate address to the class, presenting them the diplomas, accompanied with a beautiful Bible—a custom which is worthy of adoption by all of our Christian colleges. Dr. Sawyer, president of the Board of Trustees, gave a stirring speech on the needs of the college, urging larger development and new building, adding an exhortation to the young women who were sent forth to be true to the instructions received there, and go forth to preside over a Christian home, or to be molders of public opinion for Christianity wherever they should live.

Five years ago Brother and Sister Sligh assumed the positions of president and vice-president of the college when it seemed to be only a shadow. The college had reached such low-water mark that it seemed to be hopelessly stranded. Assisted by the most strenuous efforts of Bro. Sheppard, then president of the Board of Trustees, the work of renovating and building up the college began, in the face of all obstacles, till now, with all the buildings in perfect repair, after the expenditure of fully three thousand dollars in repairs and about fifteen hundred in equipment, the college is in better condition than for years past. The boarding capacity has been enlarged, all the buildings have been re-roofed, a large tank for water facilities installed in the attic and kept filled from the roof, an elevator will be put in this Summer, and the main building was freshly painted just before commencement, and everything indicative of a thrifty management and successful session.

Mansfield College, though not listed by the august body of the Board of Education as a college, is doing as fine work in educating our young women as any of those who, for technical reasons, are in that selected circle. It is of first moment for the Methodists of Louisiana to rally to their own college, and hasten the day of such prosperity that a new wing shall not only be a much-hoped-for fruition of success, but the real beginning of larger usefulness, with more complete outfit for all the work of a Christian college.

All praise to Brother and Sister Sligh for their admirable work, which has brought this success. Let all our pastors give them full opportunity in the canvass this Summer, in every way facilitating them in this work of educating our own young women, and sending them forth with religion as well as an education. The twelve young women sent forth this year are all members of the church and active workers in the church.

Brother Sheppard has put the Conference under lasting obligations for his untiring efforts in collecting money for this institution and putting it in such fine repair. Let our watchword be, On to the fullest development of this college for young women.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

The commencement exercises of Whitworth Female College were inaugurated on Friday evening, May 31, 1901, with a pleasing entertainment given by the Preparatory pupils.

Sunday dawned upon us brightly, and gave early promise of a beautiful day—a day in harmony with the joyous young life that animated the college campus. The Rev. John J. Tigert, D. D., LL.D., our Book Editor and editor of the Southern Review, was present by invitation, and preached the annual sermon at 11 o'clock A. M. Calisthenics Hall was filled with an intelligent and appreciative audience, who listened in rapt attention to the Doctor, who for an hour held his audience at will, while he eloquently and learnedly discoursed on "The Ideal Woman." The text was I. Peter iii, 3, 4. The sermon was all that one who knows Dr. Tigert could expect. It harmonized in all its parts with the rules of logic, practical and systematic theology, and scriptural exegesis. It met the demands of the occasion, and won the commendations of the people. His sermon in the evening of the same day before the Epworth League was a strong exposition of Psalms cxxiii, 2. The sermon, which was thoughtful and earnest, abounded with many beautiful and inspiring passages. Dr. Tigert always meets well any demand made upon him.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held Monday afternoon. There was an unusually large attendance of the members of the Board at this meeting. Some very important business was transacted. Some plans were put in operation looking to the future welfare of the college, which, when completed, will put the college on vantage-ground never before occupied. Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Yazoo City, Miss., was elected a trustee of the college, and Mr. Swep Taylor, of Jackson, Miss., was elected a member of the Board, vice Rev. W. W. Simmons, resigned. President Watkins reported 302 students as having been in the various departments of the college during the session. He presented the names of twelve young ladies who had completed the course of study for graduating degrees.

Vice-President Burton made an exhibit of the financial affairs of the college, which was most gratifying. He reported all monetary obligations as having been promptly met during the session, with a neat balance in the treasury to the credit of the college. There have been expended $1,300 this session for repairs and improvements. The dormitories have been renovated. The addition of three or four more porcelain-lined bath-tubs will increase the pleasure and comfort of the students. The buildings are now lighted by electricity, and supplied with water by the city water-works.

Suitable resolutions of appreciation of the generous donation of Capt. J. F. Powell were adopted by the Board. Some changes were made in the faculty which increases and strengthens the teaching force for next session. The Board will comply with the resolutions adopted by the last session of our Annual Conference.

The Alumnæ held their annual meeting on Monday. It was a most enthusiastic meeting, and was more largely attended than for several years.

The gold medal contest in music and elocution, on Tuesday morning, and the grand concert, on Tuesday evening, were of a high order of culture and refinement.

The annual address and graduating exercises took place Wednesday morning. Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., of Jackson, Miss., delivered the address. His subject was, "The Botany (?) of the Stars." He handled his subject in his usual masterful manner and eloquent style, and soon convinced his audience that the dry and incomprehensible figures which relate to astronomical distances could be enlivened and made attractive by a liberal distribution of flowers, clustered here and there in rhetorical bouquets. The conclusion was a strong and impassioned refutation of infidelity. The baccalaureate address of Dr. Watkins was appropriate and eloquent, after which he delivered the diplomas and medals.

It is gratifying to the friends of the college to know that the past session has been satisfactory in all its details, and quite a success in its general results. The present management has given eminent satisfaction to the patrons, and received the unqualified endorsement of the church. The trustees are to be congratulated on having secured the services of Messrs. Watkins and Burton, who have shown themselves worthy successors of worthy predecessors, and capable to stand at the head of this time-honored institution. The management is upon a firm basis, and gives promise of a success that will eclipse the most flattering record of many years. The prophecy and promise of to-day is, that under the leadership of Presidents Watkins and Burton, cultured and practical, Whitworth College will soon take her place among the foremost institutions of Methodism for the education of the girlhood of the twentieth century.

A NOBLE ENTERPRISE.

The Mississippi Orphans' Home at Water Valley is one of the most Christly enterprises of our Mississippi Methodism. It cares for the fatherless in their affliction, and keeps them unspotted from the world, until they have grown up with earnest Christian characters formed within them. At present we have sixty-one children in the Home. We are responsible to God for them, body and soul. Most of these children are trying to live for Jesus. They deserve the very best we can do for them. These boys and girls are exposed to diseases, and liable to have them just like other children. At present, were scarlet fever, measles, or diphtheria, to break out in the Home, the sick children could not be kept away from the others; every child in the Home would be exposed. The scourge would go through the entire home, and the lives of little ones whom God has committed to our care would be lost. We ought to have a small infirmary at the Home, and have it at once.

Early in the year the directors of the Home began to plan to erect such a building, but have been hindered by lack of funds.

At the meeting of the Epworth League Conference of the Grenada district, in April, a collection was taken for this cottage infirmary, and over $50 was raised. The Home is in the Grenada district. This Conference suggested that the need of the Home be brought before the Leagues throughout the State, and that the Leagues be allowed to build the cottage by free-will offerings, and that it be called the "Epworth League Cottage." The Orphans' Home directors readily granted this, and the secretary of the Grenada district was asked to bring the enterprise before the Leagues. The response was immediate and enthusiastic. Wood Street, Water Valley, held a rally, and a large and sympathetic congregation greeted the movement with an offering of $85. One hundred and thirty-five dollars was contributed by the people of Water Valley. Other Leagues have responded, and we have in sight over $300. One thousand dollars will build the cottage, and this amount the Leagues can raise with very little effort. Some of the weakest Leagues have made the largest offerings. No League is bound to contribute, but every League is asked, in the name of Jesus, to help provide protection for the lives of his little ones at the Home. No nobler monument could be erected to our League work.

Brother Leaguer, read this article to your League, and fill out this blank and mail it to

What Our Editors Say.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION FOR COLORED WOMEN.

We have been informed that at the annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, Miss Belle Bennett announced that the Board had determined to establish at Paine Institute a woman's annex for the industrial education of colored girls and women. Subscriptions to the enterprise were made—several of them in the name of the old nurses of subscribers. We are glad to note the new movement. Whatever may be the case in the education of our people, it seems that with our colored neighbors industrial training offers the greatest promise. That is the line on which Booker T. Washington is operating, and he appears to have already had much success. We do well to follow paths that promise the best results, and the good women are, as usual, showing us the way. The new enterprise will hardly meet with the opposition which would have been certain twenty five years ago. As soon as it is fully understood, it will disarm opponents, and as the years pass it will win friends. Southerners honestly wish to see good things to the negro, and most of them will think industrial education best meets the need. But encouraged or not, our good women will succeed in their endeavors. They have somehow "the swing of success." That woman's annex will be established. And it will be a factor in helping to work out our race problem. The ladies already have $3,000 of the $5,000 they need. The rest will come. May God speed the noble women who have put their hands to this work. May he guide them, not only in raising money, but in the plans they and Dr. Walker must arrange. And may we all see larger good than now the most sanguine can dream.—Southern Christian Advocate.

INSIDE THE CABINET.

If our preachers could only see the inside workings of a "cabinet," they would be more careful about every condition of itinerant life. Everything comes into the account: education, culture, dress, habits, social powers, preaching ability, pastoral work, manhood, tidiness of a wife, behavior of children, care of a parsonage, and so on. A failure at any one of these points often unfits a man for an appointment. And the man sometimes lays it all up against a presiding elder, who, of course, is to blame! And the poor elder not infrequently lets it go at that rather than tell the whole hurting truth.—Midland Methodist.

WHEN WE NEED MORE RELIGION.

If we do not feel right toward God's providences connected with us, and we become resentful in the least and restless and sore under what he sends upon us, we need more religion. If we do not enjoy peace of mind and do not feel a forgiving disposition and do not show a sweet Christian spirit, we need more religion. If we speak evil of our brother behind his back and throw blame upon him without mentioning his view of the case, we have not religion enough. If our brow becomes clouded and our countenance indicates a disagreeable feeling within when we come into the presence of one with whom we differ in some respect, we have not enough religion to constitute perfect love. If we get out of the way, hasten out of church, or resort to any plan to keep from meeting and speaking to some one, we ought to know that we have not religion enough. If we unjustly condemn, if we minify excellences of character, if we withhold honor where honor is due, if we inflict injury and grieve those who live in the daily enjoyment of God's love, if we detract from the influence of one who shows that the Holy Spirit is upon him and using him: in either of these cases there is not enough in us and we need more. And it is hardly necessary to say that if we do not honestly pay what we owe and deal fairly in business and stand on the side of right and truth, there is a sad defect in our religion.—Florida Christian Advocate.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

We are neither "a prophet nor the son of a prophet," but we venture a prediction: There will be more pastoral charges in Kentucky that will pay all their assessments in full this year than for many years past, if ever before. On all sides we see and hear of signs that indicate that there is a waking up on the part of our pastors and people, and a number of those that have not paid all assessments in full for years will do so this year, while many others will pay more than they ever did, though perhaps will not be able to pay in full. If it will not be considered as telling tales out of school, we will state that in less than a week we have heard the three pastors of Chestnut Street, West Broadway and Lander Memorial Churches, in Louisville, express the confident belief that all assessments against their churches will be met dollar for dollar. Best of all, they stated that there is a growing spirit in their congregations that they could not afford to do less than the full amount required of them. This is good news, and it cheers us to report it. One of these fine days we are all going up to Conference and report no deficit anywhere. Then will the Master say: "Well done, good and faithful servants." — Central Christian Advocate.

SHEKELS AND SOULS.

The Northern Methodists have wisely connected their call for an offering of twenty million dollars for education with a summons to the pulpit and people to bring in two million of converts. It means a Pentecost. And when the heart of the church throbs with the pulsing dynamics of the world to come, then Barnabas will convert ancestral acres into a sacred fisc. And then Ananias is discovered. The divine flame is a refiner's fire, to reveal a knave and purify the sincere, parting dross from gold. Herodotus in one of his books, the Enterpe, probably, tells that a fire enveloped a mountain. The wooded heights roared. Presently there were discovered rills of gold, melted out of the flinty and cold cliffs. Let the enthusiasm kindle and leap from "high steeple" to mission chapel. The yellow joy will soon flow down.—Richmond and Baltimore Christian Advocate.

THE HISTORICAL NOVEL.

There is at present quite a rage for what is called the historical novel. Looked at analytically, this style of fiction is either a description of the scenes of a particular age, the home life of a people anterior to our day, or the excuse for a series of narratives of battle and slaughter, of feast and carnival, the love-story serving merely as the thread on which these scenes are strung. "Quo Vadis" is probably the most conspicuous example of the latter style; the former is illustrated by anyone of half a dozen different novels dealing with the revolutionary period of our own history. There is in the world of fiction a wealth of instructive literature. There is also, unfortunately, a great deal of matter unfit for public reading. To discriminate between the two classes is a work of no small difficulty. In general, however, when a reader finds the pages of a novel interspersed with profanity, when it is obvious that the story is merely a means of exhibiting scenes which no one is benefited by contemplating, it is safe to lay the book aside, no matter who may be the author.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM OKLAHOMA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Will you kindly grant me a little space in your paper in which to write a short letter to my many friends in Mississippi into whose homes your paper goes? I have so lately left the old State that I still feel vitally interested in everything there, especially the North Mississippi Conference and Millsaps College. I came out here last Fall by invitation of Bishop Key, and was stationed here at Guthrie. I found a beautiful church-building, nice five-room parsonage, and as clean and loyal a little membership as any man ever served.

Guthrie, the capital city, has a population of about eleven or twelve thousand; is beautifully situated in a rolling country. It is cut into by the Cottonwood river, which is bridged at all the principal streets. It is a growing city. There are about fourteen large two- and three-story stone and brick business houses either just finished or in course of construction now, and the city the other day voted $155,000 for sewerage and other improvements. We have already four large brick public school buildings, and one more soon to be built. The country around about is one of the prettiest and most fertile I have ever seen, and especially at this season is it pretty, when one can see the magnificent fields of wheat just turning yellow. We raise everything here except the extremely tropical products. Although the country is only eleven years old, it is already better developed than most of Mississippi, owing to the fact that it is divided up into 160-acre farms. The farmers got their land free, and five successive good farming years have enabled them to pay for their implements and stock, and most of them who came here without a cent eleven years ago, now own beautiful and well-stocked farms, and have money in the bank.

Everything out here prospers better than religion. Bishop Candler never made a truer statement than when he said that emigration for money's sake always brings the worst element of people. And one trouble out here is that people who were seemingly religious back there in the old churches come out here and are swept off their feet by the wild scramble for wealth, and they allow their religious affiliations to go by default. We have more people out here belonging to "trunks" than in any other locality I ever saw.

But we are making progress, and gradually, by the expulsive power of the gospel, we are eliminating the lawless element.

I am more encouraged for my own church than ever before. We have just closed our revival; had Bro. Joe M. Ramsey with us for two weeks. The church was powerfully awakened. A great many of those who have been holding back put in their letters with us, and we had several old-time conversions at the altar, and accessions on profession of faith. I brought Bro. Ramsey out here because I knew his work was not superficial. The curse of the church to-day, in my humble opinion, is that we are allowing too much superficial work. Bro. Ramsey preaches the great doctrines of atonement, conviction, repentance, faith, regeneration, good works, and, thank God! his ministry is attended by fruit. We had him with us in our home, and learned to love him more than ever. He has now gone to Oklahoma City to be with Bro. L. M. Broyles for about two weeks. Bro. Broyles is another North Mississippi boy, and is doing a wonderful work in the metropolis of the Territory. He is mobilizing all his forces, and is wielding a powerful influence, through his pulpit and church, over that city of twelve or thirteen thousand inhabitants.

I had the pleasure of preaching, two weeks ago, to about twelve hundred people, in the opera house of our city, the commencement sermon to the graduating class of our city academy.

Now, Doctor, I will leave it with you about publishing this—either all or part of it. I know that your columns are in demand, and you can't have much space for the boys.

Yours, J. B. MITCHELL.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

It is a damp, foggy Sunday morning in a beautiful city in California. I, the servant of the Lord, would go forth to give religious literature to those who stir in the early hours. There is more hope of this class. But often there are temptations to overcome, and it is so this morning. When ready to leave my room the tempter said, "It's too early; some sandbagger may knock you down." Now, the Scriptures are good in moments of trial, and this text came immediately to mind, "There is a lion without; I shall be slain in the streets." And I said, "These are the words of the 'slothful man;' it is but a temptation." And it was gone. Passing down the stairway, and opening the front door, here is another temptation, "It is raining; I can't go." This is only momentary, and soon on a corner, I look south, east, north, west. No one in sight. While I stand under an awning, two unsheltered dairy boys stop their wagon in front of a house half a block away, deliver a can of milk, and are quickly gone. Just across the street passes a poor woman in work-day dress, carrying a heavy box that fills both her hands. Now, these thoughts come into mind: If I go out into the rain, the papers will get wet. These people do not care for tracts—indeed, they are too busy to take them. Now, there appears on the opposite corner a man in blue coat, with a brass star on it, who, after eyeing me for a little time, said, "It's a wet morning." And his manner seemed to ask, What are you doing there? With literature under my arm, I started for him, but before I had gone half across the street, he had, doubtless, answered his mental question, and quietly, but without loss of time, turned and walked away, as if to escape without showing any signs of fear. Morning papers tossed inside unfastened doors was an evidence that the distributor had gone through rain and darkness. I stand; I hesitate; I walk to and fro; I wait. Oh, why do we, who know sweet rest, not tell of it to the weary? Why do we not hasten to invite the hungry to the great feast? Why not quickly extend a hand to those who are tottering to the fall? Encouraged by the Holy Spirit, who used the diligence of the dairy boys, the patience of the toiling woman, the watchfulness of the policeman, and the promptness of the newsman, as means, I move on with more courage and hope and faith, and soon meet a man with pleasant face and sweet voice, who said, "Got something good there?" "Yes," said I; "leaves of the Bible. Will you take one?" "Give me two," said he; "I'll give one to somebody else." The next was a man in uniform again, who said, "I haven't time to read this morning."

Oh, there is so much to be done, if only we will see it; and there is a goodly number to do it, if only we will be diligent and wise and loving. Following the example of Him who said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work," and suiting his actions to his words, "he went about doing good." O thou gracious Redeemer, loved of the Father, and who lovest us, help us to receive largely of thy Spirit, that we may present our "bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service." Make us to love one another, that we may seek to bring all men unto thee. R.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE, MERIDIAN, MISS.

Many of your readers will be glad to know that the East Mississippi Female College has just closed by far the most prosperous of any session in the thirty years' history of the institution. We have enrolled this session 381 students, 210 boarders, 257 in music, 54 in elocution, with 35 teachers and officers. This, as you can see, is now one of the largest colleges for young ladies in the South. We also have, perhaps, the largest conservatory of music in the South, with 257 music students, 9 music teachers, with a great German pianist as director. We have also elected for next session Prof. Geo. E. Kersey, A. B., as director of the Department of Voice, String and Wind Instruments. Prof. Kersey is an A. B. graduate of a college; was trained in music under Prof. Tillotson, of the New England Conservatory of Boston, and Prof. Goetz, a graduate of the Conservatories of Leipzig and St. Petersburg. Prof. Kersey was at one time dean of a school of music in the State of Kansas, editor of several excellent song books, composer of some beautiful songs, and has been for twenty years a successful teacher of voice, string and wind instruments. He will, doubtless, place this department in the high position which the piano and other departments have already reached. Prof. Kersey is a local preacher in the Methodist Church, South; is a man full of the Holy Ghost, and will be quite an addition to our force.

Dr. M. A. Beeson, brother of the president, who has had the chair of science, goes to study in Johns Hopkins for his post-graduate degree, and his place will be filled by Prof. E. A. Roads, Jr., of the A. and M. College of Virginia, and a teacher of several years' successful experience. He is also a local preacher in the Southern Methodist Church, highly recommended by his pastor; a man filled with the Spirit of God, and a strong religious worker. He, too, will add much strength to our faculty, which now numbers thirty-five teachers, assistants and officers.

We have erected this session a science lecture-room and laboratory, and equipped it with an expensive outfit for science work. We have also erected another recitation room, additional water-works, bath-rooms, with steel enameled tubs with hot and cold water, and have made other improvements and expenditures for the college to the amount of $3,855.01.

We have also, through the blessings of God, been enabled to assist about fifty, or more, worthy, struggling girls in different ways; some with scholarships of free tuition, others with some industrial work.

We have been led by the Spirit to open next session, adjoining the college, an Industrial Home, by means of which we may be enabled to assist more of the very many working, struggling girls who write to us for low rates. We found it impossible to lower our prices, and at the same time give first-class board and furnish the best talent; so we were led to open this Industrial Home, in which girls can live on simple fare, and do their own work; get through on a little more than half as much as it will cost them in the regular Boarding Department of the college. This Home will be presided over by one of the teachers, who will live in the Home with the girls, and see that they observe the same regulations as the other students. It is only about fifty yards from the college, well equipped and well furnished. This will enable these worthy girls who want to help themselves to get a college education, who would not otherwise be so blessed of God. Our hearts have gone out to this class of girls. They generally make the best students and the noblest workers for God.

The Lord has been wonderfully good to us in a spiritual way this year. We have had over 200 professions of salvation among the students and teachers during the session, and when school closed there were but six or eight boarding students in the buildings that were not professed Christians, and most of them on fire for God, full of the Holy Ghost, ready to work, testify, pray, lead a prayer meeting, or do anything for God they could. They will be a great power for good wherever they go, and can be of great help to pastors if properly utilized. The Lord is truly doing a great work here. We give him right of way, and he does the work. He makes the machinery run smoothly. To him be all the praise. We ask those everywhere who know how to get hold of God to pray earnestly for our work here. We, doubtless, make many mistakes, and, of course, are not pleasing everybody; yet God knows our hearts. We are trying to please him, and somehow he honors our feeble efforts.

Yours in Christian love,

J. W. BERSON, Pres.

DR. D. P. CALHOUN.

Dr. D. P. Calhoun was called from the church militant to the church triumphant May 7 1900 He was born in Abbeville district, S. C., Dec. 24, 1819. He was the son of Nathan and Martha (Pucket) Calhoun. His father was closely related to John C. Calhoun, of historic fame.

After graduating in Greenwood College, S. C., which gave him a finished education in all the English branches, higher mathematics, Greek and Latin, he attended medical lectures in Charleston, S. C., graduating in 1842. He at once began the practice of medicine in his native State, which he continued for five years before coming to Louisiana.

He moved to Louisiana in 1847, and settled in Catahoula parish, in the little town of Trinity, on the banks of the Onachita. Five years later he purchased a large plantation eight miles south of town, where he became a large and successful planter. Here he remained till his death, with the exception of three years, from 1863 to 1865, when he enjoyed a large practice in Washington county, Texas.

In 1850 he was married to Miss Ellen Neely, a native of Louisiana. This union was blessed with six children, four of whom are now living—three sons, two of whom are successful physicians in Catahoula parish, and the other a splendid lawyer of Vidalia, La. His daughter is married, and lives in North Carolina. His children are all Christians, and members of the M. E. Church, South.

On Jan. 4, 1866, he was again married to Mrs. Ann Otis. Death separated them on the twenty-third of July, 1877. But God was good to the doctor, and in September, 1878, he gave to him another most excellent, cultured, refined and religious wife in the person of Mrs. Mary Oswalt. This union was indeed a happy one. Miss Emma Oswalt, the only living child of his last wife, is well known in the State of Louisiana, having for ten years been a teacher in the State Normal College at Natchitoches, and is now teaching at Monroe, La.

Dr. Calhoun was soundly converted and joined the Methodist Church over sixty years ago. He loved the church, and was ever a consistent, loyal, faithful member. His large, spacious home was the preacher's home. To him it was a perfect delight to do for the church of God and her ministers. For years no one took any interest in the church but himself, and he received no encouragement in his community; but he stood like a great Gibraltar for the cause of his Lord. As a result of the untiring efforts of this good man, the old Trinity circuit (now the Jena and Jonesville) is in a prosperous condition, and the very best circuit in the Conference.

While he was a very busy man, yet he always had time to serve God. His friends knew him to be a devout man, several of whom have told me that he said his prayers night and morning, whether on the steamboat en route to New Orleans, in the city, or at his home. No wonder God honored him. His life was a living testimony of the power of God to save, and the God of Israel was his strength and comfort in his old age. No stain was ever upon his manly character. His experience was rich, and his knowledge of man and things broad. How beautiful was his faith, simple and child-like his trust! I loved to talk with him of his Lord, his mercy, love, and grace; and it was evident that he spoke out of the fullness of the heart.

In person, Dr. Calhoun was tall and commanding; a broad forehead, suggesting the classical; a bright, quick eye, and a countenance beaming with intelligence; affable and courteous, bright and cheerful, well balanced and consistent, modest and refined, benevolent and sympathetic, and over his private life these virtues scattered their sparkling jewels with more than royal profusion, and it was impossible to know him without feeling for him admiration and love.

His faculties were all remarkably well preserved. His last day on earth was spent in visiting the sick and looking after the interest of his farm. He practiced medicine for fifty-eight years, and the last act of his long and useful life was to prescribe and fill a prescription to relieve suffering humanity. He filled the prescription sitting in his arm-chair. He remarked that he had a very strange feeling, and said, "I feel it coming again," and after a few short breaths he was gone.

The Lord thought too much of his aged and faithful servant to let him suffer in the hour of death. So his end was in perfect peace, and he fell on sleep as an infant upon its mother's breast, going from labor to eternal rest. D. E. KELLY.

Some people do not know the meaning of the word fellowship. It means partnership. Our partnership is with Christ, the Son, and when we come into it everything we have belongs to the firm; we can do nothing by ourselves without consulting Christ. We must be like Peter—willing to leave the city and all we possess, if necessary, to follow him. —D. L. Moody.

All want to go to a better place when they die, but the trouble is, so few are willing to make this a better place while they live.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

LECOMPTE, LA.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, writing from Lecompte, says: "My work is progressing nicely. Have had seventeen additions to the church to date. Have paid the last note on our parsonage. Sunday-schools well attended; congregations large. I will make a more extended report soon."

FLORIEN CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRETHREN: Perhaps some of you would like to hear from this part of the work. We are thankful to say that we are getting along very well. The Lord has been good to us in many ways. I thank God that he is a very present help in time of need. So we feel encouraged to move on in the Master's work.

Our presiding elder, Dr. Sawyer, held our second Quarterly Conference for us at Negrete, the fifteenth and sixteenth instant. He preached two rousing sermons for us. Oh, it was a great feast to all! Sunday, at 11 A. M., we took Conference collections. The people responded liberally. They gave us the full amount we called for. We are thankful to be able to say we are getting along very well on the line of missions. We hope soon to report missions up in full, or more. May God move the hearts of the people to give cheerfully, and according to their ability, to the cause of Christ! So, brethren, let us take new courage, and move on in the grand and good cause. Let us not become weary in working for the Lord. May the Lord give us souls for our labors, and lay the weight and burden of souls upon our hearts more and more! Let us do our whole duty.

Yours in Christ,

E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

RUSTON, LA.

Children's Day was a pleasant occasion with Ruston Church. Bro. H. W. Bowman, of Coushatta, had spent the preceding week with us, preaching a series of strong, practical, and helpful sermons. On Sunday morning, after the baptism of several infants, the Sunday-school rendered its programme of songs and recitations and readings, with a short address by the pastor. Then twenty-five persons, young and old, came to the altar and united with the church on profession of faith, and six more by letter. This gives us fifty since Conference.

The ladies of the church have organized themselves into twelve circles of about twelve members each, and meet every week to plan work for a week ahead. This work consists in visiting strangers, visiting the sick, securing pupils for the Sunday-school, hunting up absentees from church, and any special work that may be brought to their attention by their pastor.

Miss Markey, of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school of Kansas City, has been engaged to assist the pastor in his work, and has entered into it with a great deal of zeal and consecration. We are doing our best to keep Ruston Church from the stagnation or cessation of interest usually attendant upon the coming of Chautauqua season.

Our missionary collections now run $250 over the assessment for the year, and there are a few more members to be interviewed. God speed the day when we shall give more for outside work than for the work of the local church!

The Senior League received some fifteen new members at their June business meeting, many of them experienced workers. The Junior League, with thirty members, under the management of Miss Markey, are pledged to the support of a Bible woman in China.

The Arcadia District League Conference convened here June 11-13, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the people of Ruston. The address of Dr. I. W. Cooper and the sermons of Bro. B. Wright, of Farmerville, were especially enjoyed.

We are expecting the editor of the ADVOCATE to attend our District Conference at Arcadia, Aug. 1. Our district has more members than any in the Conference, and who knows but a whole bushel of subscribers await you? S.

What are Humors?

They are vitiated or morbid fluids coursing the veins and affecting the tissues. They are commonly due to defective digestion but are sometimes inherited.

How do they manifest themselves?

In many forms of cutaneous eruption, salt rheum or eczema, pimples and boils, and in weakness, languor, general debility.

How are they expelled? By

which also builds up the system that has suffered from them.

It is the best medicine for all humors.

CROWLEY, LA.

MY DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have recently passed through a season of revival at Crowley. Rev. Clarence B Stronse came to us on May 3, and remained ten days, preaching a deep, clear gospel, attended with evidences of divine power, and was blessed of God to the quickening of spiritual life in many dead professors of religion. No accessions were noted as the result of this meeting, but the meeting was not a "church-joining" meeting, as many meetings which pass for revivals evidently portray, in their superficial nature and transient results, this modern character! Prof. W. A. Hemphill led the music, and did it well, assisted by our own singers and the congregation.

It was the intention of the pastor, in the first place, to hold the meetings with the assistance of Prof. Hemphill, but because of sickness in his family, and the accessibility of Bro. Strouse, he was secured to do the work. His preaching was of a high order, spiritually, and for a young man without systematic training in theology and homiletics, the matter and order of his sermons were both remarkable. His methods were perfectly transparent, and his deportment impressive and pleasing.

After one week of rest, the health of family permitting, and convinced that further work was necessary, the pastor undertook the difficult work of lifting the revival up again by the leverage of abiding interest, and some special themes and messages of the gospel. Though the task was Herculean, he fairly succeeded, by overwhelming displays of divine power, in the last week of the revival; and the working force of the church was brought very much nearer God, and the work of the Stronse meeting very much deepened. Among the special services we conducted was an "Overcoming Consecration" service. This was signally blessed of the Holy Spirit, and we think the mission field will secure in the not far-distant future some of the fruit of this blessed service. The following evening we had a "Family Religion" service, in which many consecrated themselves to family prayer and Bible study. The next evening our best service, over which the Holy Ghost rolled in waves of power, following the pastor's sermon, 'The Holy Ghost in Soul-winning,' led many to come to the altar to consecrate themselves to soul-winning. This service affected the unsaved very visibly, and many of them have since promised to think on these things. The interest reached the highest mark the last night of the meeting, which was attended by a large audience, and many promised to lead a new life. If the meeting could have proceeded without interruption for two weeks more, there would have been, perhaps, the deepest revival in the history of this church. It will yet come.

Our people have been very kind to us in a thousand ways, and we have some of the salt of the earth, but too many have gone after the god of this world. For them we groan in the agonies of pastoral solicitude.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

GRAND REVIVAL AT FITLER'S LANDING, MISS

DEAR MR EDITOR: On Sunday, the sixteenth instant, we closed a five days' protracted meeting at Fitler's Landing, Miss., which was signally blessed of God in the conversion of sinners and in the revival of the church membership. Bro. W. M. McIntosh was with us in the power of the Spirit, and his searching sermons were delivered with telling effect. There were twenty, or more, conversions, several reclamations, and eleven applications for church membership, among the candidates being eight bright and promising boys and girls. A number of professing Christians who had never been fully satisfied with their experience obtained the definite witness of the Spirit. Three persons who had lost their membership came forward and reassumed the vows of the church. Several of the services were a veritable Pentecost, nearly everyone present being made to rejoice in the love of God. The writer was never in a meeting where the presence of the Holy Spirit was more convincingly manifest than in this one. One gracious result of the meeting was the settlement of differences between several church members who for sometime had not been on speaking terms. Bro. T. J. Norsworthy rendered us splendid and appreciated service as the leader of song, and also preached once for us. Two gifted and consecrated young ladies from Rolling Fork, who kindly came over to assist in the music, contributed no little to the interest and success of the meeting by their soulful singing and playing.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, the efficient and popular agent of our Orphans' Home, spent three days with us, greatly to the delight of many of his former parishioners. After obtaining a good collection for the orphans, he went on his way rejoicing.

Our worthy predecessor, Rev. J. G. Cammack, of Rolling Fork, also favored us with his presence for one day.

We feel deeply grateful to God for the great blessing he has poured out upon us.

MCKENDREE M. BLACK, P. C.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BATESVILLE CHARGE.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have just closed a meeting at this place by which we have been very much strengthened. The preaching was done by our brother, L. M. Lipscomb, who is a power in the pulpit. A useful future lies out before him. He is another illustration of what a young man can do who is willing to pay the price for development.

Our work is only moderately prosperous. The devil is not dead yet, neither has he conquered us. We will fight him in the last ditch, "and come off more than conquerors through him that loved us and gave himself for us." We have some valiant soldiers of the cross here, and hope to enlist others in this noble warfare. God bless you evermore.

Fraternally, D. W. BABB.

Sometimes a stormy wind of temptation blows from hell and tosseth the branches in Christ, the true vine; but their union with him is their security; moved they may be, but removed they never can be.—Thomas Boston.

Affection

Exhales from children as fragrance from flowers. The little lips are always puckered to give or take a kiss. In homes where there are children, love reaches its fairest and sweetest proportions. In childless homes the kiss of wife and husband grows formal, and presently is neglected; the springs of love in the heart become choked for want of use and exercise. Childlessness is a great sorrow to many women. It is like a curse from Nature, who bids all creatures to be fruitful. It is not a curse but a misfortune. Often the conditions which cause childlessness are removable. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has brought joy to many a woman by giving her the happiness of motherhood. It gives to the womanly organs vigor and vitality, removes local obstructions, and practically does away with the pains and pangs of maternity.

There is no alcohol or narcotic in "Favorite Prescription."

"I have never written you how grateful I am to you for your help in securing good health and one of the sweetest, dearest, thirteen pound girls that ever came into a home," writes Mrs. M. Vastine, of 647 South Liberty St., Galesburg, Ill. "I took six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.' Before I had taken four bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I was a new woman. I cannot make pen describe my heart-felt gratitude."

To keep the bowels regular use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1901.

AN APPEAL TO OUR PREACHERS.

DEAR BRETHREN: The revival season is upon us. Already many persons have been converted and added to the church. You can do no better for young converts than put into their hands a good Christian newspaper. It will carry to them every week news from the churches, besides giving them helpful reading matter of a religious character. They ought to begin their religious life by a determination to inform themselves and become useful. Many of them will never know anything of the church paper unless their attention is called to it by their pastors. Help us circulate the ADVOCATE!

The paper business, at this time of the year, is dull. We are not receiving enough money to pay our printers—to say nothing of getting a living. We hope our brethren will remember this, and get us as many subscriptions and renewals as possible, and thus tide us over until Fall. Call attention to our Bible offer, and our rate to clubs of ten—$1.50 a year. Brethren, let us hear from you!

Dr. A. C. Dixon says, after having read the books and studied the subject quite thoroughly, he has come to the conclusion that "Christian Science is the art of making sensible people feel and act as if they were deranged." Well-balanced and thoroughly-informed people who believe in the Holy Scriptures agree with Dr. Dixon.

Men do not impair their reputation for truthfulness and honorable dealing by correcting mistakes they may have innocently made. On the contrary, they magnify their love for these noble qualities of manhood, and increase the respect of their fellow-men. Some men, however, hesitate; a few entirely decline. We know not why, unless it be that by so doing they acknowledge their fallibility and partial ignorance—a dreadful thing to do, especially for editors.

When St. Paul said, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance," he did not intend to say that only these tempers and affections are produced by the Spirit. There are other fruits, the product of the Spirit, just as essential. Christians are "to do good, be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Unless these fruits appear, men are apt to say the individual making profession of godliness is deceived, or is attempting to perpetuate a fraud. Willful deceivers, we think, are comparatively few.

CHURCH SCHOOLS—WHY?

The State taxes her citizens to support public schools. The common school is everywhere, and affords all children the opportunity of at least the advantages of a primary education. Those who so desire may attend the high school, and leave it comparatively well fitted for active life. The State University is also open to all, and those who are able to pay their board, and to meet incidental expenses, may complete a thorough course of study. Many very poor people, white and black, non-taxpayers, have at their doors creditable educational facilities, absolutely without cost, save the expense for books, and even that expense is likely to be borne by the public in the near future. Why, then, should the Church, or corporations apart from the State, go to the additional expense of maintaining Church, or undenominational Christian schools?

Were the question one of economy, considered only in the light of dollars and cents, we would be justified in saying that money invested in church schools is capital thrown away. But, viewed in the light of our responsibility to God and our children, every dollar spent in church schools is not only well invested, but absolutely demanded at our hands. We do not, as Christians, half-way measure up to our ability, which is the measure of duty and responsibility. Dollars should not be considered when it comes to determining a question that involves the welfare of our children and our church.

No public school of any grade can meet the demands of enlightened Christian sentiment. In saying this we bring no accusation against the public school. It is by no means the "godless institution" it is represented to be by Roman Catholics, for God is recognized, and it is conducted on moral principles. None but teachers of good moral character are employed. Notwithstanding, the public school is insufficient to re-enforce home-training, except in the matter of discipline, and powerless, by virtue of its relation to the State, to impress any distinctively religious thought. It follows, therefore, that State education leaves the heart untouched.

Early in life we were impressed with the idea that "education, sanctified by religion, is the safeguard of Republicanism." We have never been convinced to the contrary. Indeed, we are fully persuaded that our free institutions, solely in the hands of anti-religious men, no matter how highly educated, would be unsafe. And to turn our children over to the higher institutions of learning, from which religion is excluded, would be to run the risk of having them returned to us either agnostics or confirmed infidels. That they are saved from such a fate now is due to two facts: Our State institutions have religious environments, being located in communities with all necessary religious advantages; and the faculties, though debarred the privilege of teaching the peculiarities of any form of religion, are, as a rule, men and women, not only of high moral character, but exemplary Christians. The students have constantly before them evidence of the fact that "the Christian is the highest style of man."

But, giving the State institutions the benefit of every advantage, it is a fact, account for it as we may, that they do not begin to compare with our Church schools as conservators or promoters of the religious character and life of students. Some one who has taken pains to gather statistics gives us the following facts: Of fifty-four schools canvassed, thirty-five are Church schools, and nineteen are undenominational and State institutions. In the Church schools an average of 74 2-5 per cent. of the seniors were enrolled as Christians, in the undenominational an average of 62 per cent., and in the State schools 47 per cent. In the Church schools 21 per cent. of the seniors were studying for the ministry, in the undenominational 8 per cent., and in the State schools only 2 per cent.

The above figures are not startling. Christian parents, and Christian boys and girls, naturally select Christian schools, while a few naturally select the State schools, or are influenced by motives of economy. But the figures are significant. Especially are they significant, in that they show largely to the disadvantage of the boasted undenominational school. But both the Church and undenominational schools, judged by the percentage of Christians in the attendance, are far ahead of the State schools as suitable institutions for the training of our sons and daughters.

The fact that three-fourths of the students at Church schools return to their homes confirmed in the faith is a strong argument in their favor. To give them up, and turn over to the State both the primary and higher education of our children, would be the worst policy possible for Christians to pursue. While we make no war on the State schools, but uphold them for the sake of the common weal, we plead for our Church institutions. They are necessary, in a large measure, to the prosperity, if not the very existence, of the Church.

Within the bounds of the patronizing territory of this ADVOCATE there are Methodist schools of high grade, judged by any standard. They are turning out young men and women mentally and morally qualified for life's duties. They are "sons and daughters polished after the similitude of a palace." They reflect honor upon their parents, and upon the skilled hands and consecrated hearts that have labored with them in the school-room, and prayed for them at the throne of grace. These schools must be sustained. There are two ways to do this:

First: Let men who have a surplus of money, much or little, contribute to the endowment of these institutions. This once done, our Church schools could furnish free tuition, and become less expensive than the State schools, which require annual taxation to keep them up. Let the call for the Twentieth Century Fund be heeded. The money is needed.

Second: Patronize our schools. Fill the rooms with students. Let every preacher in our bounds feel under obligation to work; put in a word on all occasions in their behalf. Loyalty to our institutions demands this, and no man's conscience will hurt him for doing it. Our preachers can also do much by preaching on Christian education. Let them not forget their duty.

AN OUTRAGED PUBLIC.

We called attention last week to the promptness of Gov. Heard, of Louisiana, in offering protection to prisoners charged with complicity in the murder of a good citizen, and who were threatened with lynching. The excitement apparently passed away after a day or two, and fears of violence subsided. But the wrath of the public was not pacified, and all of a sudden the sheriff was overpowered, and the prisoners were taken from jail and put to death. We are sorry to make such a record, and can but feel that a great wrong was committed. We may say, however, without intending our remark as an apology, that the case presented some peculiar aspects, among them this: a conspiracy was believed to exist in a formal organization, of which one of the men was head and leader, to murder young Foster. Between the time of the first demonstration against the prisoners and the day of lynching them, the citizens thoroughly investigated the question of a conspiracy, and deliberately came to the conclusion that the rumor was well founded. Having satisfied themselves on this point, they agreed that the good of society demanded that these men—two in number—as well as the man who fired the fatal shot, and who was still at large, should be put to death. They were afraid to trust the courts, and determined to take the law into their own hands. With sorrow we write these things. Protests do no good. An outraged public will have its way. We can only pray and hope that the day for such things will soon pass away.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

The Southern Churchman, organ of the Episcopal Church in Virginia, is decidedly of the opinion that the "purely intellectual education" of the negro will prove unwise and do great harm. That nobody will dispute. Nor will it be denied that along with secular education the negro "needs moral and spiritual uplift and development." This he can not get in the public schools so freely provided by the State. Instruction in morals and religion must be furnished by the churches. They must sustain schools for the negroes, presided over by negro instructors, or must provide schools for them under their own supervision. Whether this method or that is preferable, the Southern Churchman does not say, but it does insist that, of all denominations, the Episcopal Church is best qualified for the work. The exact language of the Churchman is this: "And of all forms of Christianity for this work, we say deliberately, after intimate acquaintance and long observation, our own church is by far the best fitted. Its conservatism, its separation from politics, its liturgy, its educational methods, its culture, its refining influence, its high ideals of Christian character, it rigid teaching of good morals, all go to make it the ideal missionary agency for this work."

Then, by all means, the Episcopal Church ought to undertake the work. It can not begin too soon. The obligation resting upon it is great.

MISSION WORK IN JAPAN.

The mission work in Japan is succeeding wonderfully, especially the school work. The Girls' School at Hiroshima, under the management of Miss Nannie B. Gaines, has an actual patronage of five hundred pupils—the largest mission school, it is said, in Japan. The buildings are not sufficient. Bishop Wilson, who but recently returned from the field, said at the meeting of the Board of Missions, on the thirteenth, that there is "immediate and imperative need of $10,000 for a main building" for this school. "The children of the highest officials in the province attend this school, including the children of the governor and several of the military officers."

Here is another open door. Here money may be invested for the Lord that will yield immediate and bountiful returns. The ten thousand dollars needed ought to be given forthwith. This is the earnest desire of the Board of Missions, and the prayer is that the Lord may put it into the heart of some one to give it. The Missionary Secretaries announce that they prefer no public collection be taken for this object.

A STRANGE REFORMER.

Reform is again all the talk in New York political circles. It comes every fourth year, when a mayor is to be elected. A very large class of citizens are heartily sick of Tammany rule, and "Boss" Croker, who rules Tammany. Perhaps the city never suffered more, save when Tweed was in his glory. Candidates, of course, are not lacking. Among them is one who claims to be in favor of reform, but his reform ideas take a strange turn. He is not in favor of interfering with the gamblers—rather favors letting their establishments "run wide-open," not because he does not believe gambling can not be suppressed, but because gambling is the natural outlet for men of sporting proclivities. So far as principle is concerned, a man had about as well say: Men steal; stealing is the natural outlet for men of thieving instinct. Just let them alone. A thief is not a tenth part as dangerous to the community as a gambler. The idea of reforming city government by protecting gambling is preposterous.

THE EPWORTH ERA.

In a personal note in the Epworth Era, of June 13, Dr DuBose says:

The Era is not our personal organ. We have never written for its columns anything of a controversial nature, nor do we intend to do so in the future. It is the young people's medium of thought, and is the champion of peace. We will suffer wrong rather than make it a medium of contention. Our motives are sincere, and our work is for God and the church, not for ourself.

The judgment of the church will commend the course of Dr. DuBose. Other papers of less weight, but of far more self-importance, might follow the Era's example with profit. Our young people ought to rally to this "champion of peace," and give it the circulation it so richly deserves.

MAGAZINES.

The July St. Nicholas for Young Folks is what its name indicates. A leading article for the number is, "A Boy of 1000 Years Ago." It has a dozen other articles of the very best quality. This is a high-toned monthly magazine, worthy of wide circulation. $3 a year; single copies, 25 cents. The Century Co., New York.

Ainslee's Magazine, for July, is on our table. As usual, it is filled with pleasant reading. It contains a number of short stories, and also matter of solid worth. The printer has done his part with great skill. It is profusely illustrated. Price, $1 a year; 10 cents a number. Street & Smith, 238 William street, New York.

The highest type of African eloquence which has been heard in this country died with the Rev. John Jasper, the famous negro preacher. If eloquence is the power of suiting your words to your audience, few Americans have surpassed him. It would be a pity if the famous "Sun-do-move" sermon, with all its imagery and fantastic imagination, were lost, and it was a happy thought to print it, together with an account of the preacher, in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for July.

The Ladies' Home Journal has been received. It is a waste of time and space to comment at large on the merits of this periodical. It is an old, well-established journal, known all over the United States. It goes everywhere and pleases everybody. It is a thing of beauty. May it remain a joy forever. One dollar a year; ten cents a number. The Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Among the solid magazines of the country is the Century. It stands close up to the front in all particulars. The July number, in matter, make-up, and general good characteristics, is no exception. The leading article for the month is, "Working One's Way through Women's Colleges." This will interest and, doubtless, inspire many young girls who are not blessed with an abundance of this world's goods. There are other articles of value besides the fiction, which is of a high order. The Century Co., New York.

PERSONAL.

Dr. S. A. Steel has been elected to the presidency of the Athens (Ala.) Female College, and has accepted the position. Dr. Steel is at present pastor of one of our churches in Petersburg, Va.

Rev. H. S. Johns writes that Rev. A. C. Smith, of Abbeville, La., has been with him "in a revival at Berwick, where his excellent sermons pleased all, and greatly edified and revived the church."

Dr. John T. Sawyer, presiding elder of the Shreveport district, spent two or three days in the city last week. The Doctor is giving close attention to his district, and reports the work in good condition.

The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. T. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, by Emory and Henry College at the recent commencement. The college honored itself in thus honoring Brother Holloman.

Dr. F. N. Parker preached the commencement sermon at Johnston Collegiate Institute at Greensburg, La., on the sixteenth instant, and Dr. W. H. LaPrade delivered the literary address on the eighteenth. Both efforts are spoken of in the highest terms by a correspondent of the Times-Democrat.

We thank Rev. E. H. Monnger, of the Vicksburg district, for a cordial invitation to attend his District Conference, July 11, but we are under obligation and promise to attend the Holly Springs District Conference, which meets at the same time. We hold membership in the latter, and feel that we ought to be in place, if possible.

Invitations are out announcing the marriage of Mr. St. Elmo Massengale, a prosperous advertising agent of Atlanta, Ga., and Miss Elizabeth Smith, of the same city. This event is scheduled for June 26, at the Park Street Church, West End, Atlanta. We acknowledge receipt of invitation. May the blessings of Providence be upon this union!

We deeply sympathize with our brother, Rev. L. J. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, who has been called to mourn the death of his beloved son, Henry. He passed away on the evening of the nineteenth in great peace and triumph. May the Lord comfort the sorrowing hearts of the family. Bro. Jones is deeply grateful to the good people of his charge for their kindness in his trouble.

Dr. Atkins announces in the July number of the Sunday-School Magazine that Dr. H. M. Hamill has arranged to come South and take work under the direction of our Sunday-school Board. He will continue his work in the Normal Department of the Magazine, and have charge of the Institute work, and will also superintend the Bible Teachers' Reading Course. Dr. Hamill will be cordially welcomed back to his native South.

We have received an invitation to the marriage of Mr. Thos. K. Monntjoy and Miss Nina Mande Hill, both of Little Rock, Ark. We are not acquainted with the young folks, but the bride is the daughter of our old friend and fellow-laborer, Rev. Geo. M. Hill, formerly of the White River Conference. The marriage was announced for the twenty-fifth instant. We presume by this time the vows have been taken, and the young people are happy. May a life of joy and prosperity be theirs!

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss.
EDITOR.

State League Conference of Mississippi.

The seventh State League Conference of Mississippi has just closed a most profitable and pleasant session. About seventy-five delegates and preachers were present, and all seemed to enjoy the occasion. The Conference was entertained by the hospitable people of Columbus, and it goes without saying that the entertainment was all that could be desired. The spacious Methodist Church was decorated with the League colors of white and gold, and palms and potted flowers were in abundance. Hon. J. I. Stordivant, a rising young lawyer of Columbus, delivered the address of welcome, and Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, of Grenada, responded. A delightful social hour was spent the opening night of the Conference, and everybody was introduced and made to feel at home. Prof. J. M. Barrow, principal of Franklin Academy, Columbus, presided the first night. He is president of the Columbus Senior League. So the League lays its hands upon all classes, the old, the middle-aged and the young, and sends them forth with a definite work to do.

In the absence of the State president, Prof. H. A. Hayes, Mr. W. D. Hawkins, a young laymen from Meridian, presided. He gave eminent satisfaction. He was neither tedious nor careless, but held the reins with a steady hand. Upon calling the roll, it was ascertained that a great many whose names were sent in as delegates were absent. There was not a preacher from the Mississippi Conference present. From the North Mississippi there were present three presiding elders, five station preachers, four circuit preachers, one superannuate; and one visiting preacher from North Alabama. This does not include the three eloquent gentlemen from out of the State who took a leading part in the Conference. Of the sixteen district secretaries in the State, only one was present, Miss Ida Curtis, of Meridian. This certainly is a poor showing. What is the matter with our preachers, and what is the matter with our people?

Prof. J. N. Powers, principal of the Grenada schools, delivered a capital address on "Opportunity." Prof. Powers missed being a preacher by a very narrow margin. His father is an honored member of the Alabama Conference, and he is related to the ministry by the ties both of affinity and consanguinity.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, of the Aberdeen district, read a most helpful and instructive paper on "Importance of Missionary Information." T. Y. Ramsey spoke fluently on "The Responsibility of the Young People in the Evangelization of the World." Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Rev. T. W. Lewis, Rev. J. C. Park, Mrs. G. H. Mathis, Miss Lena Smith, and others, were present to fill their places on the programme.

The important hours were assigned our distinguished guests from abroad. Dr. W. K. Piner spoke Thursday night on "Unlivested Capital." It was an eloquent and powerful appeal to the young life of the League to make a full investment of all the powers God has given us. Dr. Piner is versatile, eloquent, musical and powerful. Surely his address will bear fruit. Rev. F. P. Culver, president of the State League Conference of Alabama, uttered many wise and timely truths on "The Reading League." Bro. Culver is a Greensboro boy, and has the stamp of Dr. Allen S. Andrews upon him. Four or five of those on the programme sat at the feet of this prince among teachers.

On Friday night Dr. DuBose, the General Secretary, was present and spoke in his usual happy style. Among many other good things he said, "We may go on building colleges and endowing universities for 1,000 years; we may go on building churches and sending men out to preach; we may go on sending missionaries across the seas; but unless we teach and save the children, the whole thing will be a whited sepulcher." This is as true as it is beautiful.

The officers for the new year are as follows: Dr. H. F. Tatum, Meridian, president; Hon. J. G. McGowan, Water Valley, first vice-president; Miss Mary Belle Lewis, Vicksburg, second vice-president; Prof. J. N. Powers, Grenada, third vice-president; R. S. Lewis, Columbus, recording secretary and treasurer; Miss Carrie Lon Foose, Kosciusko, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Janie Klein, Vicksburg, junior superintendent.

Brookhaven, Miss., June 17, 1901.

First. This resolution was one of thanks, and because of its personal nature, will not be published.

Second. We are gratified to learn of the prosperous condition of the Epworth League cause in many parts of the State; the devoted spirit has grown among our Leaguers; the desire to aid the poor, relieve the sick, and comfort the sorrowing, has taken possession of many of our young people, and flowers, provisions and messages of sympathy have gone into homes to bless and comfort. The Literary Department is claiming more attention, and is being more successfully and intelligently operated than ever before. But we deplore the lack of interest in other sections of the State. Some of our preachers do not seem to know that the obligation to care for their part of the work is upon them, while others seem to have no proper conception of the League.

Third. We must deplore the disposition in some quarters to deflect the League from its original and legitimate purpose. It is neither a missionary society nor a prayer meeting, but it is an opportunity for the employment of our young people, which means the preservation of their lives from the blight of worldliness, and their training for successful Christian service. Hence, your committee would commit the League in Mississippi to a more definite and positive effort to cling to the true League idea—holding to and training our young people for Christ and the church. We do not believe that the Leagues in the State should at present undertake any outside work; that in view of the undeveloped condition of the work, we would advise all our Leagues to further stress upon the main idea of the League, knowing that whenever our young people are saved and trained, they will meet all church obligations.

Fourth. We express the hope that at our next State League Conference at least fifty young laymen will be present, and we urge upon the Leaguers present to work to this end. But we can not hope to secure their attendance unless we hold and train them in the local Leagues. We plead for the co-operation of more of our older members in this work, and we desire to concentrate our efforts upon the one point, that we may save our young men.

Fifth. It affords us great gratification to watch the healthy growth of temperance among us, and we again pledge ourselves in undying devotion to this cause, praying and longing for the coming day, when no saloon nor blind-tiger will live among us to curse our boys and blight our homes.

The Mississippi Orphans' Home.

MR EDITOR: I desire to say to our ministers and friends of the Home that the Infirmary is now under course of construction, and will soon be completed. I understand from our Bro. Spencer, of the Building Committee, that they will need several hundred dollars during the month of July, with no funds in sight to meet same. I can not urge too strongly upon all who may read this article the importance of soliciting contributions at once, and forward to Rev. M. L. Burton, treasurer, Brookhaven, Miss. There is not a more worthy cause than this institution. The children it has taken up and cared for now number over a hundred.

We have a just right to be grateful and thankful for the many ways in which our efforts have been blessed. We have never yet had to go in debt for the Home, and I believe if we could but place this matter before the friends of the Home throughout the State, they would respond with that hearty liberality that has characterized them in the past.

Cures Weak Hearts.

Palpitation and other heart irregularities are nearly always caused by a weak stomach and a disordered digestion. Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy cures weak stomachs, regulates the gastric juices, builds up the appetite, and invariably cures palpitation, intermittent pulse, and other heart irregularities. For this purpose it has no equal. It cures all stomach troubles and insures good health and sweet refreshing sleep.

A Governor's Opinion.

Governor Robert Taylor, of Tennessee, says: "I find Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy an admirable aid to digestion. It imparts a vigor and easiness of feeling which is very desirable. It is a first-class remedy for aiding digestion."

Price 50 cents per large bottle. For sale by druggists. Six bottles for $2.50 or sent by express on receipt of price by TYNER'S DYSPEPSIA REMEDY CO., 107½ S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga.

WHAT PEGGY LENT.

"O Mama," Peggy said, "I wish I could lend something to somebody, too!"

"Well, why not?" Mama said, cheerily.

"Truly?"

Peggy hurried to the door, but Mrs. Toomey's calico dress was just a little blur of dingy red in the distance. It was too late to call her back.

"And there is n't anybody else with seven little mites o' children and a landlord," Peggy said, coming back into the kitchen slowly.

"Besides," she added, as a sudden afterthought, "I spent my ten cents—I forgot!"

Mama smiled. She had just taken out a pan of sugar cookies, and she selected two of the golden-brownest ones and tucked them, all warm and spicy, into Peggy's hands.

"Never mind, dear heart," she said, "there are other people to lend to, besides Mrs. Toomey, and plenty of other things to lend besides money. Now run out on the piazza steps and eat your cookies."

It was cool and shady out on the front piazza, but just outside the reach of the great leafy branches of the linden-tree, how sunny and hot! Peggy munched her cookies and pitied the people going up and down the street. She made believe the avenue was the Desert of Sahara, and it really did make a good one. There was such a wide stretch of glaring white dust to cross, from curb to curb. Only, of course—Peggy laughed at the idea—of course, there was n't a steady procession of camels going up and down the Desert of Sahara! On the avenue the cam—I mean the horses and the cars—went back and forth always.

"There goes that blind music-teacher—he's going to cross the Desert o' Sa'rah," mused Peggy lazily. "He always stops the longest time and listens, first. I should n't like to cross the Desert o' Sa'rah in the pitch dark, either—my, no!"

Out on the curbstone the blind man waited and listened. His face was turned toward Peggy, sidewise, and it looked anxious and uncertain. There were so many wheels rumbling by! The hot sun beat down on his head pitilessly.

"He's going to give Tillie Simmons a music les—;" but Peggy never finished that word. A sudden wave of pity swept over her. The next moment the blind man on the corner felt a little cool hand slip into his and a shy voice was saying something in his ear.

"It's me—I'm Peggy," it said. "I'll lead you 'cross the Desert o' Sa'rah just as soon as that 'lectric car goes by—there, now!"

Together they crossed the wide hot avenue in a whirl of dust. Peggy's bare yellow head caught the sunlight like a nugget of gold. Her earnest, care-stricken little face was red and moist. On the further curbing she slipped away and ran across again, back to the rest of her cooky on the piazza steps. By and by she remembered the return trip the blind man must make.

"I'm going back there and wait for him, so's not to miss him," she decided, promptly, and away she flew.

But it was hot—my!—on the other side of the avenue! There was no linden-tree over there, and Peggy thought it would n't be polite to sit on other people's doorsteps.

"Tillie Simmons takes pretty long music lessons," she thought, with definite sympathy for Tillie, and a general compassion for everybody else who had to wait

The return trip across the Desert of Sahara was made safely and the blind man plodded his careful way home with a happy spot in his heart. And Peggy—Peggy went home with a glad spot, too. She had never thought to be glad for her eyes before.

Mama opened the window and beckoned to Peggy. "Well, was it as nice as you thought, dear?" she said, smilingly.

"What?—was what as nice, Mama?" asked puzzled Peggy.

"Lending things to people."

"Why! why, I have n't lended a single thing to anybody, Mama!"

"No, not a single thing—two things, dear. I think you must have enjoyed it very much."

Peggy looked decidedly astonished. What in the world had she lent to anybody?—two things Mama said—Mama said such funny things.

"O!" cried Peggy suddenly, laughing up at Mama. Then her face sobered and grew gentle.

"Yes—O, yes, I liked it, Mama," she said.—Annie Hamilton Donnell, in Congregationalist.

THE TEACHING WE DO WITHOUT A TEXT-BOOK.

Twenty years ago a disconraged young doctor in one of our large cities was visited by his old father, who came up from a rural district to look after his boy.

"Well, son," he said, "how are you getting along?"

"I am not getting along at all," was the disheartened answer. "I am not doing a thing."

The old man's countenance fell, but he spoke of courage and patience and perseverance. Later in the day he went with his son to the free dispensary where the young doctor had an unsalaried position, and where he spent an hour, or more, every day.

The father sat by, a silent, but intensely interested spectator, while twenty-five poor unfortunates received help. The doctor forgot his visitor while he bent his skilled energies to the task; but hardly had the door closed on the last patient when the old man burst forth:

"I thought you told me you were not doing anything,' he thundered. "Not doing anything! Why, if I had helped twenty-five people in a month as much as you have in one morning, I would thank God that my life counted for something."

"There isn't any money in it, though," explained the son, somewhat abashed by his companion's vehemence.

"Money!" the old man shouted, scornfully. "Money! What is money in comparison with being of use to your fellow-men? Never mind about money; you go right along at this work every day. I'll go back to the farm and gladly earn money enough to support you as long as I live—yes, and sleep sound every night—with the thought that I have helped you to help your fellow men."

"That speech," I said to a friend of mine, one who has spent many years as a conspicuously successful teacher, "went into the bones of the young doctor's life and strengthened him for a life of unselfish usefulness."

"Ah," said the professor, "that one speech was worth years of text-book teaching! And yet it was made without a minute's preparation."

"Far from it, I answered, quickly. "It had taken sixty years of noble living, struggling against sin and self, pressing forward in paths of righteousness, bearing the cross, following hard after the Perfect Man, to prepare that old Christian to make this speech. Then the moment came, and he was ready to teach the glorious lesson."

For this teaching without text-books, fellow-teachers, life's normal school holds daily, hourly-classes.—Sunday-School Times.

NEDDY LONG'S WORD.

"Remember, Neddy," said mother one day, "always to accommodate every one that you can."

"Yes'm," said Neddy, heartily, "I will." Mother felt sure he would, for Neddy is one of the very best boys you ever saw to remember things.

The next day Mrs. Camp called to him as he was running down the street. "Neddy, Neddy! come here a minute, please."

Neddy heard her and stopped, though he didn't much want to. He was going over on Wilson Pond, and was in a great hurry; but he went up to the door where Mrs. Camp was standing, and pulled off his cap with a polite little bow, which pleased the lady very much.

"Will you run down to the store for me, dear?" she asked. "I want a spool of twist, and I have no one to send."

Neddy's eyes closed up the least bit in the world, but Mrs. Camp was looking in her purse for the right change, and didn't notice; and, before she found it, the bright sun of good-nature was shining again in Neddy's eyes, and he answered, "Yes'm," as cheerfully as could be.

It didn't take long, after all. The store was not a great way off, and there were no other customers; and in less than five minutes Neddy was back again with the spool of twist.

"Thank you," said Mrs. Camp, smiling at him. Then she took a bright new dime from her purse. "Here is something for you to buy peanuts with," said she, kindly; "and I'm very much obliged, besides."

But Neddy shook his head at the dime, though he liked peanuts as well as maple sugar, which is saying a good deal.

"You're as welcome as can be," said he; "but I can't take pay for going, Mrs. Camp, 'cause you know, mother tells me always to a—bominate every one I can!"

Didn't Mrs. Camp laugh! She couldn't help it, though she tried so hard that she choked, and frightened Neddy, who could not think what the trouble was.

"Bless your dear heart!" said she, as soon as she could speak. Then she went to the corner closet and took out a little pyramid of maple sugar—more than Neddy could have bought at the store with two dimes. "There," said she, "I know you like sap sugar, don't you? And this isn't pay: it's a present."

"Oh, thank you,' cried Neddy, eagerly, "I'll go right home and show it to mother!"

So he did; and Mrs. Camp sat down by her window, and laughed and laughed. "Bless his dear little manly heart!" said she.—Exchange.

THE RIGHT KIND OF A BOY.

The other morning we were in the midst of a three days' rain. The fire smoked, the dining-room was chilly, and, when we assembled for breakfast, papa looked rather grim, and mama tired; for the baby had been restless all night. Polly was plainly inclined to fretfulness, and Bridget was undeniably cross, when Jack came in with the breakfast rolls from the baker's. He had taken off his rubber coat and boots in the entry, and he came in rosy and smiling.

"Here's the paper, sir," said he to his father, with such a cheerful tone that his father's brow relaxed; and he said, "Ah, Jack, thank you," quite pleasantly.

His mother looked up at him smiling, and he just touched her cheek gently as he passed.

"Top of the morning to you, Pollywog," he said to his little sister, and delivered the rolls to Bridget, with a "Here you are, Bridget. Aren't you sorry you didn't go yourself this beautiful day?"

He gave the fire a poke and opened a damper. The smoke ceased, and presently the coals began to glow; and five minutes after Jack came in we gathered around the table, and were eating our oatmeal as cheerily as possible. This seems very simple in the telling, and Jack never knew he had done anything at all; but he had, in fact, changed the whole moral atmosphere of the room, and had started a gloomy day pleasantly for five people.

"He is always so," said his mother, when I spoke to her about it afterward, "just so sunny and kind and ready all the time. I suppose there are more brilliant boys in the world than mine, but none with a kinder heart or a sweeter temper, I am sure of that."—Our Dumb Animals.

When your burden is heaviest you can always lighten a little some other burden. At the times when you can not see God there is still open to you this possibility—to show God. Let this thought, then, stay with you, there may be times when you can not find help, but there is no time when you can not give help. —George S. Merriam.

The setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone. Shadows of evening fall around us, and the world seems but a dim reflection—itself a broader shadow—we look forward into the coming lonely night. The soul withdraws into itself. Then stars arise and the night is holy. —H. W. Longfellow.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

Mrs. MARY ELLEN, wife of Bro. E. T. Cheek, of Madison county, Miss., died June 6, 1901, in her sixty-eighth year. She was the daughter of Jack Magruder; was born in Georgia, and moved with her parents when quite a child to Madison county, Miss., where she was reared to womanhood. In April, 1855, she was married to E. T. Cheek, a native of North Carolina. They settled in Madison county, Miss., where they reared a family of children, who easily took rank in the first circles of Madison county society, and reflected honor upon the name of their parents. Sister Cheek joined the M. E. Church, South, while a young lady, and gave her heart and life to God, and from that time she grew in grace and knowledge until she developed into and maintained one of the purest, strongest and most beautiful Christian characters it has ever been my privilege to know. Her profound devotion to God and her loyalty to her church were impressed upon all who knew her. She was a paid-up subscriber and reader of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for over twenty years. There was no ostentation in anything she did, no flourishing of trumpets, but an evident shrinking from public notice and a fixed purpose to do right. She was true to her convictions, her family and society. Though for twenty-four hours just preceding her death she was unconscious and not permitted to give any expression as to her spiritual state, her life is a more blessed assurance, pointing heavenward to all who knew and loved her. What an inheritance she has left the church in Madison county (for she was extensively known), but especially to her bereaved husband and devoted children. I thank God that I ever knew Sister Mary Cheek. She was always an inspiration to me in preaching the gospel whenever I recognized her presence. She will be missed in Madison county, and especially at Millville; but, thank God! we know where to find her. May the benedictions of Heaven rest upon the bereaved ones! is the sincere prayer of her former pastor,

F. M. WILLIAMS.

Miss SALLIE W. SMITH was born Feb. 24, 1884, and died Feb. 20, 1901. Sallie joined the M. E. Church, South, when only seven years old, and showed through all her life the evidences of her conversion. How strange it seems to see such a devoted young Christian drop from the stage of action at a time when workers are so much in demand among the young people. She would pray in public, work in Sunday-school, and was always ready to speak a word for the Master. She died of dropsy; was sick four months, during which time she endured her affliction with perfect patience, often speaking of the consolation that the abiding presence of the Master gave her. The night before she died she raised her hand and bid friends and loved ones good-by, asking them to meet her in heaven. Perhaps her life was so pure that God wanted her for a higher realm. She leaves a host of friends and loved ones to mourn their loss—mother, brother, and many others who loved her much. Just one week from her decease little Emory C. Jones, her motherless nephew, passed over to still enjoy the company of her pure spirit who loved him so much in this world. Emory was only five months old. Sallie's mother, the grandmother of Emory, had charge of Emory since his mother's death; has now many lonely hours, but she can take courage. They are just watching and waiting her coming.

H. M. BANKS, P. C.

Mrs. GEORGIA A. LINDER (nee Wilson) was born in Panola county, Miss., June 4, 1862, and died May 13, 1901, within two miles of where she was born. She was married to Dr. F. B. Linder, June 17, 1894. She was a member of the Methodist Church from early womanhood, and was an exemplary Christian. Too much could not be said of her beautiful character. None knew her but to love her. She was the sister of Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, of the North Mississippi Conference, and a niece of the late Rev. John F. Markham. She was the mother of four children, all of whom, with her husband, survive her. Her death was very unexpected. She was in the prime of womanhood and the picture of health up to three days before she died. She was taken with pneumonia on Friday, and died the following Monday. We can not understand it, but "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

T. H. PORTER.

Mrs. JAMES SANDERS died April 17, 1901. She was born in Gallatin, Sumner county, Tenn., Dec. 31, 1830. Her maiden name was S. E. Latimer; married Jan. 24, 1852, by Rev. H. H. Montgomery. In 1851 she joined the M. E. Church, South, under Rev. J. B. Walker. To her were born four children. Her devoted husband and two children survive her. She was a faithful subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. She loved to entertain the ministers in her own home long ago. She often visited me, and would speak of the sweet religious experience and of her faith in Christ, and would assure me all was well with her soul. She loved to read the Bible, and did read it through a great many times. She found comfort there when nothing else would avail. Her hymn book was marked in many places where she loved to sing the songs. One was, "Commit thou all thy griefs and ways into his hands." Her lamp was found trimmed and burning when God called her to the "Rock on high." May our mother's Savior lead the father and brother to that home! I miss thee, mother, in my sadness and my joy, but God's will be done. Peace to thy slumbers until the resurrection morn!

DAUGHTER.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his unerring providence, to remove from a life of usefulness our friend and co-worker, Mr. FRANK W. WATERS; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Amite City Sunday-school of the M. E. Church, South, recognize the fact that we have lost an earnest, constant and faithful member of our school; one in whom we saw the fruits of a Christian life; one whose presence and whose words were helpful to us.

Resolved, That the church and community have sustained a great loss in the death of Brother Waters.

Resolved, That we tender to the stricken wife and orphaned children our tenderest sympathy, and commend them to the God whose special care is promised to the widow and the orphan.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, and that they be printed in our local and church papers.

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. J. A. ELLIS,
MRS. M. R. DUNCAN,
A. G. COOK.

Bro. JOSEPH TRIPLET was born in Henderson county, Ky., Feb. 15, 1844. May 26, 1881, he was happily married to Miss Laura A. Whatley, of Catahoula parish, La. In 1898 he was converted under the ministry of Bro. Robert Randle, who was then pastor at Melville, and united himself with the M. E. Church, South. Since that time he has lived a consistent Christian life until his death, which occurred May 17, 1901, in Muse, Ark., with dropsy, whither he had resorted in search of health. Bro. Triplet had been in poor health for a year, or more, but was a patient sufferer, and complained but little. Thinking that Hot Springs would prove beneficial, he had gone there for treatment, and from there was traveling through the State, and was overtaken with a fatal illness at Muse, Ark., and left this life away from home and among strangers. He leaves a wife and seven children, all of whom are under majority. Great is their comfort to know that he was prepared to meet his Savior, and that they may meet him again in a brighter and better world.

His pastor, J. W. LEA.

Mrs. SOPHIA ANDAUE (nee Adams) was born in Georgia, September, 1850. Her father, an itinerant Methodist, Rev. J. D. Adams, then moved to Louisiana, and joined the Louisiana Conference. Here her mother left her an orphan at nine years of age. After teaching school a year or so she married Mr. T. P. Andrue, Sept. 2, 1868, and became the mother of eleven children, four of whom survive her death. She joined the church early in life. In 1896 she became personally acquainted with God, and kept in close touch with him until she died. God then took her to himself. May the dear Lord comfort her bereaved ones, for she is surely missed!

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

We are not sent into this world to do anything into which we can not put our hearts. We have certain work to do for our bread, and that is to be done strenuously; other work to do for our delight, and that is to be done heartily; neither is to be done by halves or shifts, but with a will, and what is not worth this effort is not to be done at all.—Ruskin.

Seashore Camp Grounds.

WILL OPEN (D. V.) ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 10 NEXT, AND CONTINUE FOR SIX OR TEN DAYS.

The Grounds are opened April 1, and closed Nov. 1, for occupying cottages and reception of visitors. Modern and ample accommodation have been provided for the multitudes that annually visit this refreshing and delightfully cool and bracing place of rest, free from malaria and contagious diseases.

The sea-bathing is unsurpassed by any resort on the Mississippi Sound, while the supply of pure, sparkling drinking water is furnished by one of the finest of artesian wells, whose waters possess rare virtues.

The exhilarating sea breezes refresh the fatigued, and act as a tonic to the debilitated visitors from our smoke enveloped and dust-stifling cities and towns. Boats for sailing and fishing always on hand. The drives along the seashore present magnificent views, and are over ten miles in length. Visitors are not expected to arrive or depart on the Sabbath day.

The L. and N. R. R. Company will place on sale the reduced rate of fare during the season, from all points on their lines, and secure a corresponding rate from all connecting lines. Tickets will be placed on sale July 7 to 21, inclusive, and be good to return on until Aug. 31. Two daily mail trains stop at the camp grounds, besides the accommodation and excursion trains, during the entire Summer season. A fine hotel with a frontage of 175 feet, equipped with electric lights and all modern conveniences, has been erected.

All itinerant preachers of the Southern Methodist Church will be admitted into the grounds and provided with lodging accommodations in Wesley Hall free of charge.

The usual entrance fee will be in force this season. No charge will be exacted for entrance on the Sunday of the camp meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to attend the camp meeting and spend a while on the camp ground.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before and during camp meeting, or rent cottages for the season, will please communicate with W. L. Via, superintendent Camp Ground (Biloxi, P. O. 42, Miss.) or any of the following officers:

J. B. LEFTWICH, President, Mobile, Ala.
W. B. THOMSON, Treasurer, New Orleans La.

The whole island of New York was originally bought of the Indians for an equivalent of about twenty-five dollars. To-day New York has a population of about 3,500,000, which is exceeded by only one other city—London. Its wealth is enormous; its annual expenditures are more than twice those of the Republic of Mexico, and almost one-third as much as those of the German Empire with its population of 52,000,000. And it has become the financial centre of the world.—July Ladies' Home Journal.

OUR ALASKAN OUTPOST.

The Alentian Islands constitute our Alaskan outpost. It is officially announced that some of them contain gold. If the find proves to be rich, very important events may follow, for the islands, being much farther south than the Klondike, will more readily attract settlers. We find a short account in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, which may prove interesting to our readers. "The islands, numbering nearly 100, extend southwest from the Alaska peninsula to a point full 3,000 miles west of Oregon. The more important islands represent a territory 15,000 miles in extent, which, when the Russians occupied Alaska, had a native population of 25,000. While the islands are mountainous, grain and vegetables are grown, and cattle grazing is as profitable as in our Northwestern States. Up to this time the islands have been neglected, except by those interested in the fur and fishing trade, but if attention is called to them by the existence of gold in paying quantities, their development will be in accordance with their strategic and commercial importance. They lie on the main ocean route from San Francisco, Portland, and Tacoma, to Japan and China. They form a sort of half-way station between our Pacific coast and the Orient. They extend in a nearly straight line two-thirds of the way across the North Pacific Ocean to Asia. The larger islands are capable of sustaining a considerable population. Unalaska is 125 miles long by 30 to 50 wide, and has good harbors. The Winters are not nearly as severe as those of the cattle-growing States of the Northwest, and it is claimed that cattle and sheep could be kept on Unalaska at less expense and with lower percentage of loss than in either Montana or the Dakotas. Looking forward to the control of the commerce of the Pacific, the Alentian Islands are as essential to our success as is the possession of Hawaii and a harbor in the South Pacific. They are on the very highway of ocean traffic between the two continents. They stand as a guard line along Behring Sea, and are the key to the North Pacific. They reach out as an outpost toward Asia. All that they need is an enterprising, hardy, and industrious population. There are very few natives in the way of settlers, and if history repeats itself, Unalaska may develop as rapidly as did California, and become one of the most important outposts of the United States."

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

News from South Africa is not very encouraging to the British. The Boers are few in number compared to the thousands of English in the field; yet they not only manage to evade the English as they please, but to pounce upon them in small squads, seemingly, whenever they get ready. They have even invaded a large section of country which for some months past has been under the control of their enemies. A correspondent of the London Mail gives a gloomy picture of the situation. He says, as given out by the Press dispatches, that "the Boer invasion of Cape Colony is developing in a rather serious manner. The Boer bands are getting recruits, and what is more, they are getting horses. They picked up no fewer than 500 at the remount camp near Colesberg less than a week ago. The invaders are swarming all over the eastern and midland districts. They number anywhere from 7,000 to 10,000, and are having a merry time. They wreck trains, kill colonists, and play havoc generally. A glance at the map will show that a large portion of the colony is virtually in the hands of the enemy. From Dordrecht to Willowmore, and across to Kenhardt and on to Namaqualand, the Boer is the man in possession. The slow progress of the campaign from the British point of view causes deep dissatisfaction. The authorities allow next to no news to be published, and it is only by interviewing recent arrivals from the front that one can get any real conception of what is taking place. Unfortunately, we do not appear to have troops available for so huge a movement. Quite 60,000 men, half of them mounted infantry and cavalry, would be required to cover the vast area described. Where the 240,000 odd men now in South Africa are distributed is a mystery to all except those at headquarters. But the enormous extent of country now held by us, the large number of posts, and the very extensive lines of communication which it is necessary to maintain in the military operations from one end of the country to the other, doubtless explain the paucity of men available for action on a large scale. Lord Kitchener might have 100,000 additional men at his disposal, and yet have none too many to spare for mobile work."

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

THE REPORT OF THE VISITING COMMITTEE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A more pleasant task has scarcely been committed to me by the Mississippi Conference than the one I have just engaged in and am now concluding — visiting Millsaps College and reporting the progress of this splendid institution of learning. In saying this, I am sure I voice the sentiment of my colleague, Bro. W. F. S. Tatum. We chose the closing days of the session as furnishing us the best opportunity to discharge our duty. We were accorded a most cordial welcome by President Murrah, and here we would acknowledge our indebtedness to him and to Bro. J. C. Cavitt, at whose delightful Christian home we were domiciled, for many courtesies extended us during our stay in Jackson.

It affords us very great delight to report a year of marked success in the history of Millsaps College. President Murrah and Bishop Galloway both declared it the most prosperous year the institution has as yet enjoyed. This was the unanimous opinion of all who were in a position to know. There were during the year 223 matriculates. This is a fine record, but the energetic faculty are reaching out for larger things, and declare that they can not be satisfied with less than 300 enrollments for the coming session. (Let every member of the Mississippi Conference applaud.)

We were deeply impressed with the fine moral tone of the student body. This was manifested not only in courteous Christian deportment, but every oration it was our privilege to hear was permeated with a high order of morality. Indeed, the speech of Mr. L. W. Felder could easily be classed as sermonic literature, and would answer well as a tract to circulate among the people.

Another very commendable feature was the manly bearing of the students. Those who looked upon the healthful glow of the faces, and robust, finely developed muscular forms of the graduating class, could never charge Millsaps with turning out "intellectual weaklings." Once during the exercises there was quite an exuberant manifestation of the spirit of athletics, when a medalist was borne upon the shoulders of his fraternity colleagues from the platform, but which we could not find it in our heart to severely criticise.

By invitation of President Murrah we attended the sessions of the Board of Trustees. Here we learned some very interesting facts about the college. The one which we now give you we think will not come as a surprise to Mississippi Methodists, viz.: that Major Millsaps is not only the largest benefactor, but does annually gratuitously for the college a work which would cost $1,000, and possibly more, if the Board of Trust were forced to employ some one to discharge it.

Quite a little breeze was stirred over intercollegiate athletics. A committee consisting of W. C. Wells, Jr.; Stephen L. Burwell, and Geo. B. Powell, from the Alumni Association, and B. E. Eaton, from the student body, appeared before the Board, and, after reading resolutions adopted by their respective bodies, they urged the Board to grant the students the privilege of engaging in intercollegiate games, whereupon the Board passed the following resolutions, viz.:

Resolved, That the Board of Trustees has heard with interest the resolutions of the Alumni Association, and the present student body of the college, and the accompanying statements of their committee with reference to intercollegiate contests. We appreciate the earnest college spirit which has prompted this action, and hereby assure them of our sympathy with such manly exercise under wise restrictions and careful faculty guidance.

Resolved, That we reaffirm the action of last year in committing this whole matter to the faculty of the college, assured that they will so direct and protect the students as to avoid the criticisms usually made upon such contests.

Resolved, That we recognize with profoundest respect the admonitory resolutions of our two patronizing Conferences, and we pledge our faculty to shield the college from the dangers against which we are wisely warned.

It was thought by some of the trustees that a method must be immediately devised to increase the endowment fund, which is some little over $100,000. But another advance movement superseded this suggestion, viz.: the raising of $25,000 to build a much-needed dormitory on the campus. A committee was appointed to devise plans for the early inauguration of this movement.

The Freshman contest for the Millsaps medal, the debate between the two literary societies which took place Friday evening, the seventh, and the Sophomores' contest for the Oscar Kearney Andrews medal Saturday morning, it was not my privilege to hear; but those who were more fortunate report the young gentlemen as acquitting themselves well. The Freshman medal was won by M. A. L. Hopkins, the debater's medal was awarded to Mr. M. A. Thompson, while the Sophomore medal went to Mr. C. H. Alexander.

The commencement sermon was delivered in the college chapel by Dr. Collins Denny, of Vanderbilt University, in lieu of Bishop Goodsell, of the M. E. Church, who, to the regret of all, was detained through sickness. Dr. Denny chose as his text Phil. iii, 10, "That I may know Him," and dwelt at large upon the power of ideals to mould character and destiny. The sermon was replete with splendid thought; a little too metaphysical, possibly, for a promiscuous audience and for students, who feed all the year on similar diet; yet, nevertheless, the Doctor sustained his reputation as an impressive preacher and fine pulpit orator.

The sermon before the college Young Men's Christian Association at the First Methodist Church, Sunday night, by the Rev. J. E. Carpenter, of Natchez, on the "Man of Vision," was in the usual style of that very happy orator.

The Alumni Association held its annual meeting Monday, June 10, at 11 A. M., when Rev. Herbert Watkins, in a speech filled with epigrammatic sentences and the richest of humor, welcomed the class of 1901 into their ranks. The response was made by Rev. R. A. Clarke in a short speech of flowing periods, after which President J. C. Hardy, of the A. and M. College, delivered the address of the day. His speech was well received and roundly applauded.

One of the most pleasing incidents of the commencement exercises was the presentation of the James Observatory to the Board of Trustees and faculty of the college. It will be completed at a cost of five thousand dollars, and was given by Mr. D. A. James, of Yazoo City, as a memorial to his revered father, Mr. Peter James, who for many years was an honored member of the Board of Trustees of the college, and also to a beloved brother lately deceased. Mr. Terriberry, a distinguished young lawyer of New Orleans, delivered the presentation speech, which was in the happiest style, sparkling with choicest sentiment, and containing a glowing eulogy upon the character of the lamented Mr. James. Bishop Galloway, the readiest of men, made a most apt and touching response in behalf of the trustees and faculty, after which for an hour Dr. W. C. Black entertained the audience with a lecture on astronomy.

The commencement exercises closed on Tuesday, at 11 A. M., with the orations of the graduating class, and the awarding of prizes and conferring of degrees. The speeches of the Seniors were of a high order, reflecting honor upon their alma mater. The writer is not a prophet, but as he "looks into the future far as human eye can see," he predicts a large place for the young men who received their degrees from Millsaps this year. The Senior medal was won by Mr. E. B. Ricketts, of Jackson. A class of twenty-eight received their diplomas from the hands of President Murrah, which closed the most brilliant session in the history of the college—a foregleam of a brighter day yet to come, a prophecy of larger things in the future.

Report No. 2 will be made to the Board of Education of the Mississippi Conference at the next session of the Conference.

NOLAN B. HARMON,
For Committee.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Board of Missions met in Nashville at 9 A. M., June 13, and adjourned at noon on the fifteenth. Bishop Wilson presided.

The Secretaries presented their annual report through Dr. Lambuth. It contains much valuable information, and may be had in printed form upon application. The Treasurer's statement included in it shows an increase in the regular collections from the home Conferences for missions during the fiscal year closing April 1 of $19,330. Aside from the regular income of the Board, the Treasurer received and forwarded for the relief of famine sufferers in India the sum of $11,707.50. Many presiding elders' districts throughout the church had paid the missionary assessment in full, among them a district in one of the Mission Conferences of Mexico.

Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, Secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, presented a report of the work of her Board. The report showed $82,718.96 contributed to its work during the year, besides about $40,000 given for the Twentieth Century Fund. It contains the following summary of work abroad: Mission stations, 29; missionaries, 55; teachers and native helpers, 164; boarding schools, 18; day schools, 62; pupils, 4,736; Christian pupils, 445; buildings owned by the Woman's Board, 19, valued at $336,500. Including the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, in Kansas City, Mo., property owned by the Woman's Board amounts to $401,500. Bible women employed, 65; scholarships, 185; hospitals, 2; Bible colleges, 2.

At the recent meeting thirteen candidates had been accepted—four for China, four for Brazil, two for Mexico, two for Cuba, and one for Korea.

Rev. Young J. Allen, D. D., of China; Rev. T. A. Hearn, of China; Rev. W. A Wilson, of Japan; Rev. E. A. Tilly, of Brazil, and Rev. G. B. Winton, of Mexico, missionaries of the Board, were present, and, as occasion arose, spoke to the interests of the work in their fields.

Dr. James Atkins, chairman of the Executive Committee of the General Missionary Conference, presented a report of the work of his committee, comprising a history of the Conference. The report recommended, as growing out of the Conference, that action be taken to promote a closer correlation of the Conference Boards and their work with the General Board, some changes in the membership of the latter making larger use of the lay element, and the reorganization of the office force looking to a more aggressive activity upon the part of the Board's executive officers. As these recommendations contemplate General Conference action, they were ultimately referred to a Committee on Memorials to the General Conference, to be reported with other similar matter next year.

The appropriations recommended by the Committee on Estimates were made, including the special for Soochow University, which, in cash and subscriptions, now amounts to more than $100,000. The Board of Trustees of that institution was incorporated under the laws of Tennessee. They were authorized to proceed at once with the construction of the main building, to cost approximately $30,000.

The Book Committee was requested to have Mr. D. D. Smith visit China in the interest of the branch Publishing House to be established in Shanghai.

The Secretaries and Bishops in charge were empowered to put on the most satisfactory basis possible the titles to church property in Japan and Mexico. In the former country a Board of Trustees to hold property will be constituted. No definite plan has been devised for Mexico as yet, but Rev. G. B. Winton has been detailed to act as the Board's agent, and as the situation is both complicated and urgent, he has been released for the present from other duties.

The question of opening work in Africa, in conjunction with the Colored M. E. Church, was deferred for a year.

The action of the Secretaries in launching Go Forward, a new missionary paper, was, after some debate, approved.

The next meeting was ordered to be held at Nashville, at a date to be determined by the Executive Committee.

During the year Rev. H. B. Walker, D. D., a member of the Board, and Rev. M. B. Hill, one of the missionaries in China, together with Mrs. C. F. Reid, wife of the superintendent of the Korean Mission, had passed from earth. A suitable memoir was prepared and spread upon the Minutes.

The following list of appropriations is taken from the report of the Committee on Estimates, which was adopted. Apportionments are the same as last year. Bishop Candler, at his request, was authorized to raise $5,000 in specials for Cuba, and Bishop Wilson $10,000 for the girls' school at Hiroshima, which has grown so as to be greatly cramped for room.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Brazil Mission Conference, $36,800; China Mission Conference, $33,416; Korean Mission, $10,802; Japan Mission Conference, $36,254; Central Mexico Mission Conference, $22,327; Mexican Border Mission Conference, $15,950; Northwest Mexican Mission Conference, $14,300; Cuba Mission, $11,400; Indian Mission Conference, $10,948; German Mission Conference, $2,268; Pacific Conference, $3,900; Los Angeles Conference, $4,092; Columbia Conference, $2,630; East Columbia Conference, $2,630; Denver Conference, $4,529; Montana Conference, $3,231; Western Conference, $1,593; New Mexico Conference, $4,176; expenses, $18,000; total, $239,246.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The regular Preachers' Meeting was held at Carondelet Street M. E. Church, South, July 1, at 11 A. M. Dr. S. S. Keener presided, with C. D. Atkinson, secretary. The hour was given to hearing reports from the local pastors.

Pastor Wynn, of Louisiana Avenue, reported that he had received five persons into the church since last report. Ladies' societies in fine condition.

Rev. F. N. Parker, of Carondelet, spoke in very encouraging terms of the spiritual life of his church. He reported four additions.

Bro. Fontaine, of the City Mission work, said the conditions of church life are about the same. One addition.

Rev. W. W. Drake, pastor of Felicity, reported four additions. His Epworth League is improving.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster, of Burgundy, reported his Epworth League improved in its spiritual life. Sunday-school in a good condition. Financial condition good. Additions, two.

Dr. LaPrade, of Rayne Memorial, reported his congregations fine, as compared with last year. The attendance in Sunday-school very good. Additions, seven.

Rev. G. D. Parker, of Carrollton, reported his church in a very fine condition. Financial condition good. There will be some improvements on church-building. Sixteen additions.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, pastor of Parker Memorial, reported the conditions of his church good.

Revs. W. W. Drake and C. D. Atkinson reported their visit to the Institute of Theological Study at Vanderbilt University.

Rev. H. W. Rickey, pastor of Clinton, La., was present and spoke of the late District Conference in the Baton Rouge district.

Mr. T. J. Reams, of Baton Rouge, was present and made a talk.

Dr. F. N. Parker will leave for London in August to attend the Ecumenical Conference.

Rev. J. F. Foster will attend the Epworth League Conference in San Francisco.

THE UNFORGOTTEN DEAD

G. W. D. HARRIS, D. D.

The name of G. W. D. Harris was a household word among the early Methodists of the West. His fame was by no means local. He was known throughout the church, and wherever known he was respected by all who had any appreciation of great and good men. In the midst of towering men in the Tennessee Conference sixty years ago he was no inconspicuous figure. His ability was recognized and he was honored with a place among the foremost. He consecrated his young and vigorous manhood to Christ and his cause, and never for a moment did he withdraw the sacrifice. During his long and eventful career nothing occurred to blemish his character or tarnish his fair name. The future historian of the church will have no cause to blush when he enrolls his name among the soldiers of the cross. He will gladly put it among the honored and faithful. Thousands were brought to Christ through his ministry. They will rise up in the great day and call him blessed. He was "wise," and "will shine as the brightness of the firmament;" he "turned many to righteousness and will shine as the stars for ever and ever."

The General Minutes of 1873 tell us that George W. D. Harris "was born in Montgomery county, N. C., Jan. 25, 1797, and was married to Miss Elizabeth Davidson, Sept. 19, 1819, with whom he lived in love and peace for over fifty-two years." We have no information with regard to his parentage or boyhood. The date of his conversion is not given. He was licensed to preach by Rev. Wm. McMahon in 1824, and the same year joined the Tennessee Conference. His itinerant course, which continued without interruption, covered a period of forty-eight years. During these years no man labored harder or more earnestly "to spread scriptural holiness over these lands." His rise was rapid. Within six years of the time he entered the traveling connection he had filled some of the best circuits in the Conference. There were no stations then. The last circuit he traveled was the Nashville circuit, in 1830. In 1831, his seventh year, he was appointed presiding elder. This office he filled continuously for forty years, save one, when he was active financial agent for Andrew College. He was first elected to the General Conference in 1832, then in '36, and again in '44. He was also a member of the Southern General Convention which organized the M. E. Church, South, in 1845, and was elected to every General Conference of his church from that date to the time of his death. In 1840 he was laboring in that part of the Tennessee Conference which went to form the Memphis Conference, and he identified himself with the latter body, and was at the beginning recognized as the leading member, or as one of our Bishops put it: "G. W. D. Harris naturally found his place at the head of it, and his brethren had the wisdom and the grace to keep him there." He died Dec. 9, 1872.

In stature Dr. Harris was slightly above medium, without surplus flesh, and in all physical respects a well-made man, capable of great endurance. His forehead was high; his eyes clear and penetrating; his nose prominent and of the Roman type; lips thin, finely chiseled and compressed. His whole appearance indicated a man of iron will and invincible courage, and these two characteristics were predominant. He was noble and dignified in his bearing, and generally impressed strangers as being a man of cold and distant nature. This impression was worn away by contact and conversation with him in the social circle. There he was genial and companionable, but never light and trifling in his talk. He had but little about him of what is called personal magnetism, but men were drawn to him on account of his ability to entertain, instruct and edify. In these respects he excelled. The place he occupied so long and filled so well clearly show that he was a prince among men. The reasons for his prominence and promotion are apparent.

He was a man of great mind. It was naturally strong and grasping, but was strengthened by reading and observation. It was also penetrating. He looked into matters and readily comprehended. He investigated thoroughly, produced his reasons, and was so gifted that he made clear to his hearers the subject he had in hand. He was a profound reasoner, but clear in his propositions and train of thought. It was no trouble to follow him. He was not a college-bred man, but a far better scholar, and knew better how to use language to advantage than thousands who boast of college honors. He graduated in the curriculum of the itinerancy, and read and studied much of men and things. Nature made him an orator, and by constant and painstaking use of speech he acquired an elegant style, and became one of the readiest and most fluent of speakers.

He was a great preacher. We do not mean to say that he was a popular preacher. As that term is now used, he was not, but the public came together to hear him. He was a great preacher because he realized what was required to constitute a great preacher, and tried to the best of his ability to measure up to the standard. Not one man in a thousand comes as near reaching the standard as he did. The vital and foundation principles of the gospel were his favorite themes. He was, to a great extent, a defender of the faith, but not a controversialist—at least, he never engaged in public debates with men of other communions. He preached the gospel from the Wesleyan standpoint, and, having made a study of the doctrines of Methodism, he was able to present them forcibly and to edification. He was thoroughly furnished for the business. The educated said he was profound, the common people said he was deep. His talents did not restrict him to any particular time or place, like many of his contemporaries. He was adapted to all times and places alike. Whether in the city before cultured hearers, on the frontier preaching to the unlearned, or at a camp meeting before a mixed assembly, he was equally at home, and always at his best. His ability as a preacher not only brought him to the front, but made him one of the most successful ministers of his day. He brought sinners to Christ, and "went throughout the country confirming the churches." A memoir printed in 1873 says "he had few peers and fewer superiors. In gigantic thought, in forcible utterance, in authoritative delivery, in spiritual unction, he was a powerful preacher." His natural force as a speaker and his sonorous voice remained unimpaired almost to the last.

He was a man of great administrative ability. Under this general term we mean to include his ability to organize and lead the forces, and to execute the discipline of the church. The data for a full showing of his fitness for these important duties are not at hand. The confidence imposed in him by his brethren and the authorities of the church in putting him in the lead, and keeping him there, is sufficient testimony to the fact. To this may be added his great success. More than once, in the absence of a Bishop, was he elected president of his Conference, and satisfactorily discharged the difficult and delicate work of the position. As presiding elder, he was diligent and faithful—looking carefully after the spiritual and temporal interests of his charge; and it is said that "seldom did his district fail to bring up an honorable report."

He loved Methodism. He espoused the cause in early life as the best exponent of vital Christianity, and her itinerancy as the most efficient method of spreading the truth. He was the devoted champion of the church for forty eight years. He gloried in the doctrines of Methodism. He was tolerant of other churches, but allowed no man to pass unchallenged in his church who was suspected of heterodoxy. He did not believe Methodists were infallible, but he had no patience with any man claiming to be a Methodist who spoke lightly of her tenets. He knew what orthodox teaching was, and long before the honorary title of D. D. was formally conferred on him, the church and the people knew he was a doctor of theology. Next to his love for Methodist doctrines was his devotion to the usages of the church. No man was more aggressive against sin, or forward in establishing the cause of Christ, but he believed the work could be done best by clinging to the landmarks. Adaptation to times and circumstances in minor details he recognized as necessary, but he was persuaded that all could be accomplished under general established principles. Hence his devotion to the General Rules, an independent General Superintendency, and to the ministry as the governing power in the church. He sided with the Southern delegates in the General Conference of 1844 in their efforts to preserve intact the Episcopacy as bequeathed to us by Mr. Wesley and the fathers of 1784. He was a member of the memorable General Conference of 1866, when so many revolutionary measures were introduced. His "righteous soul was vexed from day to day" as he witnessed the upheaving of the foundations. One day, on the way to his lodging, after a particularly stormy session, he held his peace for a long time. At last, breaking silence, he said to his companion, the now sainted Dr. Thos. L. Boswell, "I believe there are half a dozen men in this General Conference that would ruin any church God ever made, if such men as M—— were at the head of it."

The radical measures of that Conference, with one exception, triumphed, and many of the participants lived to see them, if not thoroughly vindicated, at least work without friction. Whether Dr. Harris ever became fully reconciled, I do not know. I think it doubtful. When his Annual Conference met, and the constitutional question—the introduction of lay delegation—was voted on, at the call of his name he arose and said: "I just can squeeze out, Yes." This was in 1869, showing that, after three years of study on the subject, he was scarcely willing to accept the innovation. The "old paths" in polity and government, as well as in doctrines, suited him well enough.

A word concerning Dr. Harris as a citizen will not be out of place in this short sketch. He took no active part in politics, but he was thoroughly informed, and patriotic to the core. When it is understood that he was a brother of the late Senator Isham G. Harris, his political affiliations may be determined without hesitancy. He was Southern in his feelings, and though not offensively partisan, he did not hesitate to express his sentiments. When the Federal Army occupied the country in which he lived, it was taken for granted by the army officer in command that he was a dangerous man, and ought not to be at large. He was accordingly arrested and held in camp. Dr. Harris took his arrest and imprisonment philosophically. He was treated courteously, but as a "rebel," which the Doctor resented. The general in command was somewhat given to controversy, and undertook to reason with his distinguished prisoner. He "calculated without his host." The rebel preacher was too much for him. He was silenced after a round or two, and though the Doctor invited him to "come again," he had no more to say. Such was his dignity, and outspoken honesty, that the commander set him at liberty and gave him no more trouble.

"Uncle George," as everybody called him, died at a good old age. The outer man perished day by day, but the spiritual was renewed, and to the last his mental faculties remained unimpaired. He left not only a good name, but two sons in the ministry, a third having preceded him to the better land. Dr. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, is widely known as a preacher of great ability and usefulness. He has also a grandson in the ministry—a man of brightness and promise. "The righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance."

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

It was my privilege to attend the commencement exercises of this old and well-known institution. I was favorably impressed. The site is excellent, the campus pretty, and everything was neat and clean. The main building is well adapted to the purpose. If the school continues to grow, enlargement will be a necessity in the near future. Already Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, the capable financial agent, has plans in mind for an addition which will have a modern auditorium on the first floor, the music department on the second floor, and sleeping apartments on the third.

It will be exceedingly unwise for the Louisiana Conference to allow the Twentieth Century Movement to expend its force without doing something substantial for the education of its girls.

The school has had the most prosperous year of its history under the present management. Mr. and Mrs. Sligh seem to have been designed for the place they occupy. They are capable and wise-hearted, and deserve the confidence reposed in them. Their faculty impressed me as worthy and capable. There is a distinctively religious atmosphere pervading the school. Every one of the graduates, I was told, is a professing Christian. Two things impressed me most favorably: I saw only one decollete costume during the commencement, and there were no amateur theatricals. Many of our church schools are feeders for the theater.

Twelve young ladies received diplomas. Their graduating essays were well written and gracefully read. There was an entire absence of masculinity. Louisiana has much to hope for from such classes. The more of such young ladies sent out, the more hopeful the future.

The address to the graduating class by Dr. S. S. Keener was timely and appropriate. He said many things that might profitably be said to any audience. His subject was the duty of women to make homes. A celebrated jurist once said: "The home is the foundation of government. The State is but the aggregation of the homes. Whatever impairs the home hurts the government." It is to be feared that a false ideal is being created. The making of professional women is the unmaking of the home. The scramble for money is at the bottom of the whole thing. Whenever the women become thoroughly imbued with this spirit, venality will be the result. The church is the true conservator of public morals. The sentiment outside the church never rises higher than the standard in it. If church people run wild after schools whose ideals are utilitarian, what is to be expected of the masses? The small college is the hope of the country. When they are frozen out, the large ones will die of atrophy of the heart. The Christians usually come out of the small colleges. The larger ones are more prolific of athletes, materialists and higher critics than they are of Christians. Simple faith does not thrive in an atmosphere of doubt. Let Louisiana Methodism look well to the education of her daughters.

Conference Officers of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. R. E. Kennedy of Louisiana Conference

To the Officers of Auxiliary Societies

DEAR SISTERS: God has greatly blessed our work in the past year, and the Board was encouraged at its recent meeting in St. Louis not only to increase the usual appropriations for the coming year, but to take up new work in three different directions: to enter the mining region of the West Virginia Mountains, and make a beginning in that sorely needy field; to place in the Scarritt Bible and Training-school a teacher of home mission work distinctively, that we may be able to meet the increasing demand for trained workers at home; and to begin work among the colored women of the South.

We, doubtless, express the feeling of the entire Board when we say that for ourselves we did not dare not to enter these open doors; yet we dared to enter only in the faith that God would move our women to stand by the work, not merely with their money, but with their prayers. We feel that the greatest need of our work to-day is the fuller presence of the Holy Spirit in our hearts and in our lives. We believe that, as a society, we have not made proper use of our great resources in God through Christ. We can not go forward in our own wisdom and strength. We urge upon you to make every effort to secure a large attendance at the July meeting, laying aside the usual business as much as possible to make it a consecration meeting.

Before the meeting order through your Conference secretary as many of the inclosed pledge cards as you have members, and have them ready. Make plain in your meeting the needs of the work and the power of God, then pass your pledge cards, and see that your women realize the solemnity of the covenant into which they are entering. Let those who will sign the cards, and take them home and keep them in their Bibles; but let your corresponding secretary report to the Conference corresponding secretary the number of those who have entered into this covenant of prayer. (II. Thess. i, 11, 12.)

BELLE H. BENNETT, Pres't.

PLEDGE CARD.

I hereby covenant with God and my fellow-workers to pray daily for these three things:

1. For the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the life of every member of our Home Mission Society, and in the lives of our missionaries and teachers.

2. For the grace of liberality in my own heart and in the hearts of all our members.

3. For the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at the next annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions.

THE ARMY UNDER THE NEW ORDER.

There are now 50,000 regulars in the Philippines. There are in the United States nearly 10,000 regulars recruited for the newly organized regiments ready for service. It is proposed to retain in the Philippines 40,000 men, sending home at once 10,000 regulars, and 10,000 more as soon as their places are taken by the new regiments just organized. On this plan 20,000 American troops who, in the last two years, have seen hard service in China and the Philippines will be returned for service in this country.

The plans of the War Department do not contemplate continuous service of any regular regiments in the tropics. The splendid transport service of the army makes the transfer of regiments less difficult and less expensive than two years ago, and it is believed that the health of the troops will be benefited by giving each regiment two years' service abroad and two years at home.

It is significant, however, that the majority of recruits prefer service abroad. Enlistments for the new army are above the maximum for the infantry and cavalry regiments to serve abroad, but below the maximum for the artillery which is to remain in the United States. Some of the new regiments have been recruited beyond the maximum provided for in the new orders, but the surplus will be used in bringing other regiments up to the standard.

Under the recent orders of the War Department the United States army, as reorganized under the new law, will consist of 2,783 officers and 74,504 enlisted men. There will be 15,840 men in the cavalry, 18,862 in the artillery, 33 520 in the infantry, and 1,282 in the engineer corps. There are in the regular army, under the old organization, twenty-five regiments of infantry, with 1,156 officers and 35,564 enlisted men; ten regiments of cavalry, with 472 officers and 12,083 men, and seven regiments of artillery, with 10,978 men.

The full strength of the regulars under the old organization, taking in all arms of the service, is 66,396 officers and men. The reorganization act provided for an army of 100,000 at maximum strength. The new order reduces the cavalry and infantry companies, but maintains the artillery companies at the maximum strength.

So it happens that there are not as many men in the thirty regiments of infantry under the new organization as there were in twenty-five regiments under the old, nor as many men in the fifteen regiments of cavalry as there were in the ten regiments under the old law. But, when occasion demands, the infantry may be recruited to 53 000 and the cavalry to 18,000. The army under the recent order will have 77 287 officers and men—an increase of only 11 000 over the present regular establishment.—Exchange.

Nothing that man will ever invent will absolve him from the universal necessity of being as good as God is good, righteous as God is righteous, holy as God is holy.—Hare.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Georgia Strong, daughter of General Elisha Strong, was born in Monroe county, Miss., in June, 1842; was united in marriage to Dr. Richard L. Sykes, March 25, 1869, and died in Columbus, Miss., June —, 1901. In early girlhood she united with the M. E. Church, South, and continued an active member until her sainted soul ascended unto God to join the great company of the redeemed, in obedience to the call of the Master she so much loved and who she so faithfully served. Endowed with a rare gift of voice, she used it in singing the songs of Zion, and in her singing, which charmed those who heard her, the soul seemed ever to be singing and making melody unto the Lord. In all the work of the church Mrs. Sykes was ever active, and was as efficient as she was tireless, counting not her personal ease when the demand of the work came.

For a number of years she was president of the Parsonage Aid Society of the church in Columbus, and delighted in aiding to make the home of her pastor comfortable, while in the movement for the building of a new parsonage she was enthusiastic, and did much to make that movement a pronounced success. In her the minister had a sympathetic co-laborer, the young people an encouraging friend, while the poor and needy were the special objects of her care and practical attention, and in this respect no one could be more missed in Columbus than she will be by those who are in need.

Mrs. Sykes was gentle in spirit, and one of the most charitable women in judgment it has ever been my privilege to meet. She would ever minify the faults and magnify the good in others, and by her gentle sympathy she encouraged many to a better life by drawing out the best in them, and causing them to see still better things as possible to them. I never heard her speak an evil word of, or indulge in an insinuation of evil in relation to anyone. Her delight was to attend the services of the sanctuary and to minister to the needy. Cultivated, refined, and deeply spiritual, she was ever an attentive and responsive listener to the preached Word, and the principles of the gospel became interwoven in her daily life, so that she literally "went about doing good." In her death the church has lost a faithful member, the pastor a ready friend, the poor a faithful minister to their needs, and the home a loving and faithful wife and mother. Truly "heaven is richer and earth poorer" since this sainted soul has gone from earth. May God comfort the bereaved ones, who, in the silence of the home, must miss her most, and grant unto them his richest blessing out of the cloud which now overhangs them!

W. T. BOLLING.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The courts have been in session in these parts for some weeks past. I sometimes attend to hear the evidence, to listen to the discussions, and to see the wheels of justice grind. I am often pained, and my head made to hang in shame, at the manifest purpose of some of the lawyers to clear criminals, regardless of the evidence of guilt. This is seen in the selection of juries, in hiding the truth, and in manufactured evidence. There are many quirks and tricks of trade in the practice of law, particularly in the practice of criminal law. Some lawyers go in to win at all hazards; by fair means, if they can; by foul, if they must. All of this is hurtful to public morals, to the lawyer who does it, to the juryman or jurymen who lend themselves to defeat the ends of justice, to suborned witnesses, and to the people at large. It begets in the public mind a feeling of contempt for the court, for law, and for the execution of justice in any case. It breeds a generation of lynchers, of men who are not willing to wait on the courts, and on the slow and uncertain execution of law and justice in the case of outrageous criminals. Many of the common people—those who are not well educated, and whose reasoning faculties have not been largely developed—lay all the blame on the law and on the courts. They are not capable of those nice discriminations necessary to the discovery of the real party to blame. All they know is that an outrageous crime has been committed, and that the criminal escapes.

All the young people in a wide circle of country are prejudiced against the law and the courts. As they see it, the laws were enacted and the courts instituted for the protection, and not for the punishment of criminals. The ends of justice are defeated. In this way a generation comes on the stage that is ready, in case of an outrageous crime, to lynch the criminal. A case or two in point has occurred in this part of Mississippi lately. The escape or light punishment of criminals has produced in the public mind a feeling that the law will not be executed, and the courts can not be trusted. If the next great crime is followed by a lynching, no one need be surprised. The people in several different and widely-separated neighborhoods have been made ready for it. I am not the apologist of lynchers, nor am I excusing the crime of lynching. I am only trying to show why lynching is so common in a civilized country like this. The people have lost faith in the administration of justice by the courts and processes of law. Some lawyers have very low ethical standards. They will stoop to anything to win. All such are a curse to the race, and to the Christian civilization under which they live. They are the enemies of law and justice, and the promoters of crime, and the friends and defenders of criminals. This is one of the things that is hurting us badly in this country. It is right and proper that the law be administered, and that those accused of crime, whether guilty or not, have a fair and impartial trial; but there is neither reason nor justice in the trickery and fraud practiced in order to prevent the ends of justice.

In some of our law schools, as I have reason to know, a high standard of morals is constantly held up before the young men who are qualifying themselves for this important and noble profession. They are correctly taught in the ethics of the practice of law. If they sin after they begin practice, it will be against light and knowledge. There are many incorruptible men in the legal fraternity—men who will not stoop to low, dirty tricks for pay; men who know the profession of law, and honor God, and maintain their Christian characters at the bar, in the forum and on the bench. Such lawyers are a terror to evil-doers, the friends of Christian civilization and society, and a standing rebuke to all the tricksters in this honorable trade. Such lawyers are not given to losing or mislaying important papers, nor do they seek for packed juries, and they will not consent to the manufacture of testimony and the hiring of witnesses to defeat the ends of justice. It is exceedingly important for public morals and the perpetuation of our civilization that the number of such attorneys be greatly increased. It is a great thing to stand firm for public virtue, and it is a great sin to be the friend of crime and criminals.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

GREENVILLE, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER: We have just closed the greatest revival that the church here ever had, according to the statement of its oldest members. Bros. J. B. Culpepper, O. B. Culpepper and C. M. Dumaway were our colaborers in this work.

Bro. J. B. Culpepper did most of the preaching, and the people thronged to hear him. The meeting was conducted under a tent whose capacity was two thousand, and at night it was crowded. The results of the meeting can not be estimated. Hundreds were converted and reclaimed from a backslidden life, and the church much strengthened. Sixty-two have been received into our church and ten, or more, into the Baptist Church as a result of the meeting; and there are others yet to join. We have had a net increase of 28.4 per cent. since Jan. 9 in membership. Have organized a young men's prayer meeting; 33 were present at the first meeting, and those who attended say it was the most spiritual meeting ever held in the town. A Junior League of 26 members was organized Sunday. Thirteen new members were added to our Senior League, which we consider the finest League we ever saw, and one of the best in the State.

On last Sunday we received a class of 10, seven of whom were strong, active young men from 18 to 30 years old.

Congregations are fine, and the oldest members say the church is in better condition than at any time in its history. "The Lord is doing great things for us, for which we are glad" S. B. MYERS.

PICKENS, MISS.

DEAR DR. ROSWELL: Our pastor, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, closed here last night a very successful and profitable meeting of eight days. There were fifteen conversions, twelve uniting with our church and three with other churches in town. The last night's service was one of the best and sweetest that we have ever had, and was prolonged until about 11 o'clock, giving everyone a chance to testify of the good things the Lord had done for them. Bro. Gladney was aided very much in his efforts by his most excellent wife, and Mr. R. P. Neblett, a recent graduate of Millsaps College, who is a fine singer and who promises well as a preacher, also was of great assistance. The greater part of the preaching was done by our pastor himself, and we believe that these services accomplished as much and even more good than a number of former ones held here with the aid of an evangelist. Our town is indeed to be congratulated on having such a devoted and faithful worker in its midst. Yours fraternally,

E. W. BURTON.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

VANCLEAVE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Your readers (or some of them), perhaps, would be interested in reading a brief report from Vancleave circuit.

Last Saturday and Sunday, June 15 and 16, according to previous announcement, we held a "Missionary Mass Meeting" at the New Prospect Camp Grounds. Rev. H. W. Featherstun, of Moss Point, was with us and conducted the exercises. His presentation of the missionary cause was strong, convincing and quite interesting. There was not a dull service throughout the entire two days' meeting. The exercises were interspersed with missionary songs and one or two recitations by young ladies. I feel sure that much good has been accomplished, and good results will follow the work of Dr. Featherstun. Our collection was not as large as we hoped that it would be, but I think that I will be able to bring up my assessment in full for missions. We are making progress along other lines also. We are soon to begin building two new churches, and we continue to make additions to the work already done to our parsonage. We feel hopeful of having a successful year.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

Rev. B. F. Jones, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, writes an appreciated personal note to the editor, and adds the following encouraging words: "Matters on the district are in a prosperous condition. The pastors are busy now with revival work. The prospects for good meetings are encouraging. There is a beautiful harmony and much love existing between the pastors and their parishioners. The missionary interest has been vigorously emphasized during the months of May and June. A large per cent. of the pastors have pledged themselves to bring up full collections."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

JACKSON, LA.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: I closed a meeting last night of twelve days' length that was, everything considered, the best of my life. The meeting was at Wilson, La., the center of the circuit, and was attended by the leading laymen from all the points. The church was not large enough to hold the crowd. There were buggies at the windows, and men standing at the door and on the steps during several services. Mercantile business was suspended each day during the morning service. Our friends say no such interest was ever shown in the town as we have had. There were many conversions—bright and clear, happy and satisfactory. The laymen say every home in the town was stirred to a better life, and many are happy in their new-found joy. There were nineteen accessions to our church (there will be more to follow), and other churches will get their share.

At the last service I took a collection for the benevolences of the church, and got fifty per cent. more than we are assessed. The laymen conducted the prayer meeting, and the pastor did the preaching. The Lord has graciously blessed us, and to him we give the praise.

Your friend and brother,

HY. W. MAY.

THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1901.

The difference between a systematic sermonizer who throws but little life into his preaching, and one whose sermons are disjointed, but delivered with earnestness and power, was aptly described by a sensible lady, who said, "Dr. W. is a better preacher than Dr. M., but Dr. M. preaches better than Dr. W." It is probable that the majority of hearers fully agreed with her.

The boy who wasted his time in dreams of future greatness, grew into manhood with the idea that the world owed him a living without work. He thus incurred the contempt of all industrious and honest men. Now, late in life, he has nothing—no certain abiding-place, no friends. Even the pity he receives at the hands of the world, and the free meals he eats, are grudgingly bestowed. When he dies he will be buried at the public expense, and there will be nobody to shed tears over his grave.

We once attended a meeting conducted by a preacher whonever tired telling the congregation of his wonderful influence and great success at other places. As he talked from day to day, we wondered why his power was so little felt among the people to whom he was then preaching. We were not long in finding out that he entertained a fine opinion of himself, and concluded that he overestimated his ability, and naturally, perhaps unconsciously, exaggerated his tales of success. Men of his sort generally do.

An offer of five hundred dollars was made in 1899 "to any Sunday-school in Canada or the United States for authority from the New Testament, in support of the custom in most of our Protestant Churches of using artistic music played or sung by unconverted choirs as an item of acceptable worship, especially anthems, in which the congregations are precluded from joining." We do not know who made the offer, but one need not be a millionaire to make it in good faith. The proposition, we are told, is still open.

We begin this week a series of sketches of eminent Methodists who helped to plant and develop our church in Tennessee and Mississippi. These sketches, as imperfect as they will appear to many, will be read with interest by the old Methodists of to-day. We trust they will not prove altogether unacceptable to our younger readers. We hope these short sketches may inspire a desire to know more of the fathers of the church, and induce them to buy and read the excellent biographies of our dead. In reading such literature they will learn much of the history of our church.

FRUIT UNTO HOLINESS.

The expression, "Fruit unto holiness," is equivalent to the exhortation of John the Baptist to the multitude, "Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance." That is, let your profession of sorrow for sin be indicated by turning away from sin. So let your holiness be manifested by such a life as can spring only from a holy heart. St. Paul strongly intimates that such is necessarily the case: "Now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Unless the life conforms to the profession, and the fruit in all respects is good, there is ground to suspect that the heart has not been "made free from sin." This is a matter of importance, and every Christian should know what are the fruits of holiness, and strive to produce them in greatest abundance.

1. The first fruits of holiness are those of personal experience. Certain affections are implanted and realized under the influence and by the direct power of the Holy Spirit, at the moment a man passes from death unto life. St. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, enumerates well-nigh a dozen classes of criminals who, by their acts, were excluded from the kingdom of God; and says, "Such were some of you," "thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers," and worse, "but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Men can hardly pass from the state and condition of sinners, as classified by the apostle, into the blessed state of Christians described as washed, sanctified, and justified, without having undergone a marvelous change. And we speak of the change as one of experience. This change may not always be accompanied by that overwhelming sense of assurance felt by many, but it does produce in the heart those affections or fruits without which there can be no religion—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Where these exist evil can not dwell. "Against such there is no law, and they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts."

2. Good works are fruits of holiness. They are essential. There is an outward expression of religion as well as an inward experience. The former is worthless without the latter, and experience is unavailing unless it has the effect of making one who has received the experience an active, zealous and productive Christian. Good works are as naturally produced in the life of a good man as fruits and grain are produced in good soil—not spontaneously, but as the result of preparation, sowing, and thorough cultivation. If our fields fail to yield, we know there is something wrong; generally we can determine the cause. Either there has been a lack of preparation or cultivation, or the early and latter rains have failed. Sometimes faulty seed have been planted, and sometimes soil, otherwise good, is lacking in one essential element. So a professing Christian may fail to produce fruit unto holiness. Why such is the case, we can determine only on general principles. We dare not sit in judgment on individuals, except where remissness in duty is willful and flagrant.

In most cases we think the failure is because the seed sown are faulty. Too many are impressed with the idea that everything in the Christian life consists in experience; all matters, great and small, are determined by and dependent on feeling. Hence there is a constant effort to keep the feelings all right, and to enlarge the experience. How could it be otherwise when the practical duties of the Christian life are ignored, and teachers impart no instruction save in the duty of seeking the experience of religion? Congregations go through whole seasons of revival, are zealously affected, and apparently enjoy the services, but never a word do they hear of the Christian's duty to the church and the world. The ordinances are neglected, nobody is baptized, the Lord's Supper never celebrated, and no hint of benevolence is made except when the collection is taken to pay the visiting preacher and the expenses of the meeting. No church on earth can survive a dozen years under such administration. The fountain of benevolence in any soul, if it ever existed, would dry up in less than half a decade, and the tale of his experience, oft told, would sound like a school-boy's recitation, and fall like discordant sounds on unwilling ears. St. James does not hesitate to say that such a man's religion is vain. It may do him good, but it will never bless the world.

The man rightly taught, with a sound and thorough experience in grace—who knows God as a pardoning God, and realizes the cleansing power of the blood of Christ—is not going to stop with experience, nor be satisfied with pressing his views on others. He is going to do something for his Lord's cause. He will bring forth fruit unto holiness. With his body laid on the altar as a living sacrifice, he lays also his estate. Nothing is withheld. While he blesses with his mouth, he helps with his hand. He is not fanatical enough to believe that his prayers will avail, unless he does something himself to assist in answering them.

The holy man loves his church, and testifies to the goodness of God. He loves the brethren. He rejoices with those that do rejoice, and weeps with those that weep. He ministers to them that are sick and in prison. He visits the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keeps himself unspotted from the world. Where he can not go himself he sends a substitute. These are the fruits unto holiness. He cultivates diligently and grows in grace. He thus lays in store a good foundation against the time to come. He has in his heart the assurance that when he fails on earth, he will be received into habitations on high.

HOME MISSION WORK.

Home mission work is a necessity. The question of cost, and the best methods of accomplishing the work, are both to be considered. The latter is paramount. But no matter what method is pursued, the cost must necessarily be great, and continue to increase. At present we have fairly efficient methods of work under the direction of our Conference Boards of Missions. The Boards do well, considering the scarcity of funds at their disposal.

The Boards need three or four times as much money as they get for the work in the country districts as well as for the cities. Our missions in the country are not half sustained, simply because the Boards do not have the money necessary. One reason for this, it has been suggested, is because Conference Boards spend too much money on the work in cities; and in connection with this, it is charged by implication that the Boards spend home mission money otherwise than for the support of preachers regularly appointed to mission work. Some Conference Boards may do this, but no action of that kind has ever come under our observation.

To remedy this evil, and at the same time to relieve the Home Boards, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate suggests that "our city churches should so unite and organize for city evangelization as to reach with almost no money from the Missionary Board the unchurched and unsaved within the city limits." The money necessary to do this, the Wesleyan says, "should be a part of the church's current expenses." Would this remedy the difficulty? If city churches should unite and do all the missionary work of the city, without any aid from the Conference Boards (and, of course, without its supervision), these city churches would be sure to keep all money raised for home missions inside their own limits. The Conference Boards would have much less money to handle, and country missions would be the sufferers.

Dr. Lambuth's plan, viz.: place all home mission work under the direction of a General Board, with a special secretary, would prove equally as objectionable, besides being much more cumbersome and expensive.

We do not need any more machinery. What we need is to work more vigorously the methods we already have. The "Go-forward" spirit now so manifest in regard to foreign missions should also be infused into our home mission work. Larger appportionments to our home missions are needed. This means larger assessments on the charges. They ought to be large enough to give our missionaries an amount at least equal to the average sum received by other preachers-in-charge. This would greatly encourage the brethren who are appointed to these hard fields of labor.

We ought also to pursue a different policy in regard to building mission churches. Instead of putting up little, cheap and unattractive houses in out-of-the way places, the most eligible sites in proper localities ought to be selected, and the strength of all the churches in the city ought to be concentrated on that one house until it is finished. And it ought to be such a house as will be a credit to the wealth, intelligence and consecration of the people who build it. The house ought to be such as will attract the rich and well-to-do, as well as the poor. It is all a mistake to suppose that the poor will not attend a fine church. Let them know that such a church is built for them, and that they are welcome, and they will attend. But let them know that rich people are building a cheap, "mission chapel for the poor," and they will fight shy of it all the time.

The church is aroused on the subject, and such is the spirit now prevailing that any plan, devised and put before the people, if not heartily welcomed, will be worked. We need the very best thought of the church at this time. The masses will read and study, and when satisfied as to what duty is, they will do it. May the good Lord direct!

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

Nine District Conferences were held last week within the bounds of the patronizing Conferences of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The editor had the pleasure of attending three of them. This meant about as much work as could be crowded into the short space allowed for such meetings. Nearly one-third of the time was consumed in actual travel.

We first met the brethren of the Batou Rouge district at Amite City. The Conference was in session when we arrived, and in the midst of an earnest discussion of the missionary cause. The missionary spirit was fully alive. The presiding elder, Rev. F. S. Parker, took part in this discussion, as did Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of Whitworth College, by special invitation. Rev. H. W. Rickey, after the close of the morning session, preached an earnest and thoughtful sermon on "God's Willingness to Give the Holy Spirit to Them That Ask Him." In the afternoon the Conference kindly gave the ADVOCATE "the right of way." We talked a little while, and as nearly everyone present was already a subscriber, it was kindly suggested by some one that the Conference raise a "helping fund." This was seconded, and in a few moments enough was raised to put the ADVOCATE into eight homes. It was left to the presiding elder to send in the names. Other District Conferences might do likewise.

Durant District Conference was held at Durant; Rev. T. W. Dye, presiding elder, in charge of affairs. The district was well represented, both by laymen and preachers. Everything was pleasant and harmonious among the brethren. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Smith, alone was in trouble. His wife was taken sick on the evening of June 27, and was seriously ill the next day. The preacher had the prayers and sympathy of his brethren. Here, as at Amite City, the brethren were full of missionary zeal, and more fully than at any point we have visited, they considered the obstacles in the way of full collections. Rev. G. W. Gordon opened the discussion, his subject being, "The Obligation and Debt of the Church to Missions." His address was clear-cut, concise, logical, and delivered in a very impressive manner. He made careful preparation for the occasion. His mind and heart were in the work. Our lay brethren took much part in the discussion, thereby showing their interest. Brother Dye added no little interest to the occasion by his management and forceful short talks.

From Durant we hastened to Coffeeville, where the Grenada District Conference was in session. We were present only the last day. The business had all been transacted save the giving in of a few reports, electing delegates to the Annual Conference, and fixing the place for the next meeting. What discussion we heard was on purely local matters. The representation at Coffeeville was the largest we have seen at any District Conference this year, and we have attended six. Rev. J. W. Bell, who was in the chair, is in his first year as presiding elder, but he guided affairs judiciously and with a firm hand, and, we think, pleased his brethren.

At all these Conferences the reports were encouraging. We heard no notes of discord—everything is hopeful. Even the brethren on small, poor circuits, from which they expect nothing but a bare living, had no complaints to make. They are after souls, not lucre, and are happy in the work.

We heard good preaching by Brother Rickey, Dr. W. B. Murrah, and Rev. C. H. Pittman. If the preaching of these brethren is a fair sample in all respects of their own work, or in spirit and matter a fair sample of the preaching generally given to the people, we wonder on what ground rests the oft-repeated complaint of a weak and unspiritual pulpit. The man who gives rise to such complaint is exceptional. The rank and file are still orthodox, and preach a saving gospel.

CHANGE OF DATE.

By authority of Bishop Morrison, who has charge, the Mississippi Conference will meet Dec. 11, instead of Dec. 12, as heretofore announced.

MAGAZINES.

The Youth's Companion, though not a magazine, is worthy to be placed alongside of the best. It has no superior as a paper for young people, and our observation is, old people as well as young delight to read it. It is clean, and can be placed in any home without any misgivings. Weekly. Price, $1.75 per year. Boston.

PERSONAL.

Rev. H. W. Rickey, pastor at Clinton, La., was in the city last Monday, and attended the Preachers' Meeting.

Rev. S. M. Thames, after eighteen months in "the Delta," has become acclimated, and is now well and hearty, and doing full work.

Dr. F. N. Parker has made his arrangements to attend the Ecumenical Conference at London. He will sail from New York during the first week in August.

Rev. R. H. Wynn did not attend the Preachers' Institute at Nashville last week. He was off helping a brother pastor in a revival. He returned in time to fill his Sunday appointments.

Rev. G. D. Parker, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, we learn, has been accepted by the Board of Missions, and appointed to work in Brazil. When he will leave for his far-off field, we have not learned.

Revs. W. W. Drake and C. D. Atkinson returned last week from Nashville. Brother Atkinson reports a most interesting and profitable time at the Institute. About one hundred and twenty-five preachers were in attendance.

During the meeting of the Board of Missions at Nashville, Bishop Key was taken suddenly ill. He was sick several days. As soon as he was able he started home, and as we have heard nothing further, we take it for granted that he has recovered.

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, passed through the city on Tuesday on his way to Magnolia. Sister Jones, who is just recovering from a tedious spell of fever, accompanied him. We had the pleasure of meeting him for a short time in our office.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, the excellent deiporter of Mississippi, is busy attending District Conferences, and loses no opportunity to sell a good book, or take subscriptions for our church papers. He keeps his eye also on everything that pertains to the interest of the church.

Mrs. Oakley, widow of the late Rev. J. S. Oakley, has purchased a home at Columbus, Miss., and with her family is now living in that delightful city. Sister Oakley has many friends all over the North Mississippi Conference—as many at Columbus as at any other point.

Rev. R. P. Wilson, long editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, of San Francisco, has just returned from Nashville, where he went to confer with the Book Agents, and to make final arrangements for starting the Branch Publishing House in China, which he has been elected to superintend.

We met Rev. J. H. Shumaker, of Kosciusko, Miss., at the recent session of the Durant District Conference, and were rejoiced to see him in excellent health. He has gained in both strength and weight since his long and painful illness last Winter. And he is giving the strength of body and soul to the cause of the Master.

The friends of Rev. T. I. Lallance, once a member of the Louisiana Conference, but now of New Mexico, will deeply sympathize with him in his sore bereavement. He has been called to bury two children. One died on the twentieth of June, and the other the next evening. May the good Lord sustain him and his wife in their affliction.

While attending the Grenada District Conference, last week, we had the pleasure of meeting Rev. J. M. Hampton, one of the veteran superannuates of the Conference. He was confined to his room, a little weakened on account of a chill, but otherwise in good health. He is as buoyant in spirit as a young man, and as true to his Lord and the church as ever. Such men never grow old or despondent.

The Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: One month from this day the annual camp meeting at Sam Jones Camp Ground, three miles north of Gloster, Miss., will open for a ten days' effort to save men from sin and death, and to advance, as much as may be, the prosperity of the kingdom of God. We have much hope for a successful and profitable waiting on the Lord on that occasion, and earnestly request the people of God to unite in prayer with us that our hopes may end in glad fruition and that much good may result.

The place is delightful for situation and healthfulness. The water is the best in the State, and is conducive to health. The cottages are plain, but comfortable; the hotel will be run by the Association, not for profit, but as an accommodation to those who may not have cottages or friends with whom to put up. The fare will be good enough for anybody, and the rates as low as one would ask. The preaching will be under the control of the Committee on Public Worship, and will be done by the preachers of the Natchez district, and such outside assistance as the committee may be able to secure. As camp meetings are supposed to be held for the purpose of saving men from sin and death, the question as to whether holiness comes by sections or in lump, and whether the carnal mind is wiped out and destroyed and the postulant left in an absolutely sinless state, with no propensity to wander away from God, will not be discussed. The old verse, "Prone to wander, Lord, I feel it; prone to leave the God I love," will be sung as originally written, and the "improvements" suggested by our brethren in white will be discarded—all of which will commend itself to your better judgment, I presume.

It is also hoped that the meeting may result in such a revival of old-time religion and vital godliness that the pastors in the district will dispense with amateur theatricals, oyster soup and church soclables, as a means of replenishing the treasury of the different charges, aid societies, and such as that. If you can tell me any difference, in moral turpitude, between regular and amateur theatricals, I will be obliged to you. Would much prefer to pay a dollar to see a first-class minstrel performance by professionals, to paying two bits to see a lot of church members get on the same stage and try to be funny for the glory of God. A church that depends on this sort of support had better be dead and out of the way of sinners. It may be claimed that the members of the M. E. Church do not take part in these performances, but the fact remains that whatever of sin there may be in the matter (and I do not, personally, believe there is any, except in resorting to these methods to raise money for the church) will be laid at the door of the church and its pastor. That these things are in contravention of the rules of the church, there can be no doubt in the minds of men who have sufficient intelligence to understand plain English, and, being so, should not be employed.

Of course, we will expect the "editor," and hope he will not disappoint us. With kind regards, I remain, Faithfully yours,

REV.

Bishop Candler's Last Book.

"High Living and High Lives," by Bishop Candler, has just been issued. In Part I. of this book are found addresses made by the Bishop to the graduating classes of Emory College during his presidency of that institution; in Part II., funeral orations on three great Georgians—Lamar, Colquitt, and Harrison—with an address on "Heroism Is Never in Vain," delivered in the Georgia House of Representatives "on the occasion of the delivery of Crosses of Honor to Confederate Veterans by the Daughters of the Confederacy;" and in Part III. there are four addresses, setting forth "The Education for High Living." This volume has as its frontispiece a splendid engraving of the author, and his dedication is couched in these graceful words: "This work of my hands I dedicate to the sons of my soul, the loved and loving 'Emory Boys,' whom I taught from 1888 to 1898—the best friends I have in this world."

It can not be other than that this book should accomplish vast good, coming from such a leader and thinker, and at this time, when its strong deliverances are sorely needed. Our young people, college-bred or not, would greatly profit by a reading and absorbing of the vital truths and lofty sentiments of this noble author. No one is more capable than he to give sound advice as to high living, for, as master-workman, accomplished educator, ripe scholar, manly man, and lover of his kind, he is in himself and his own living an illustration of the wise doctrines he inculcates in these pages. Permeated and dominated by the principles so clearly, forcibly and eloquently taught in this book, our Southern young men would move and have their being in the pure atmosphere and on the high plane of noblest human action. I make one excerpt from this book: "Dreary, dreary, who can say how dreary and motiveless is the life bounded by time and sense! How desolate is the life from whose consciousness God has faded! Can words be more painful than the words of the late Prof. Clifford, 'The Great Companion is dead.' But God is not dead, my boys. I do not leave you in the lonely wood to-day, in which Robert Elsmere felt himself going blind to the dearest visions of his youthful faith. With the voice of God's prophet I pray for you, 'Open the eyes of the young men.' If you will but look up, you shall see the heavens, as of old, are full of horses and chariots of fire. God is still alive. Never was his presence more manifest nor his purposes more clearly revealed in the ongoing of events than at the present time. The plan of the ages seems bounding towards its culmination. That 'far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves' seems drawing nigh. Epochal events follow rapidly upon each other. Lines of benevolence penetrate further the regions of human want, and the shadows are lifting off all lands. 'It is day-break everywhere.' It is not an hour for doubt or despair. Throw open your hearts to the incoming of the great motives, and you shall feel your souls refreshed as with the dewy tonic of the breath of the morning."

Bishop Candler's last book is destined to have a wide circulation.

Holly Springs District.

The place for holding the Holly Springs District Conference has been changed from Victoria to Byhalia. The time remains unchanged—July 11-14. Bishop Morrison is expected to preside.

Attention, Leaguers.

All Southern Epworth Leaguers who will attend the International Conference at San Francisco are invited to attend an "Echo Meeting" in St. Paul's M. E. Church, South, Denver, on Thursday evening, July 25. Everybody will want to spend at least one day in this beautiful metropolis of the Rocky Mountain region. The pastors of the two Southern Methodist Churches of the city and their Leaguers will be glad to lend their assistance in pointing out places of interest to visitors, directing them to suitable hotels, and doing whatever is in their power to make the "stop-over" enjoyable.

Some of the delegations have already arranged to stop in Denver on the way out. We shall be delighted to have these persons worship with us on Sunday, the fourteenth. A mass meeting of all the Leaguers has been planned for the Trinity M. E. Church at 3:30 P. M., on this day. Let all who can, however, plan to attend the "Echo Meeting" on the twenty-fifth. You want to know something of our work in this section, and we need the uplift that will come as a result of your presence among us. A number of the strongest men in Southern Methodism will speak at the 'Echo Meeting," and leading ministers of the church are expected to fill our pulpits on the fourteenth. Let the heads of delegations everywhere that will pass through Denver notify us at once if they purpose attending the "Echo Meeting," and if not, at what time they will stop in Denver. Hotel rates are reasonable. First-class accommodations can be secured in the leading hotels of the city at from $2 to $2.50 per day. Address communications to Rev. H. A. Wood pastor Morrison Memorial M. E. Church, South, or the undersigned, pastor St. Paul's M. E. Church, South, Denver, Colo.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys: if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

A "SWEET" STORY.

"See, Mama, the pussy willows are budded, and Mr. Andrews says it is time for the sap to begin to run!" So said my little Elennor, coming in one day late in February with both hands full of the brown twigs.

"O, I do hope Tom will get here in time for sugaring!" she added, as she put her treasure into a pitcher of water, there to blossom out into full-fledged pussies.

Tom was a Western cousin who was coming to Vermont to spend the Spring and Summer with us, while his father and mother took a trip abroad. Eleanor and I visited them last Summer, and we well remember one morning when, to make us feel at home I suppose, they offered us some buckwheat cakes and maple-syrup for breakfast. We could not say with truth that we enjoyed our repast. The cakes were made from some preparation bought in packages, and were tough and tasteless in the extreme; while the maple syrup was a black, dingy-looking compound, which bore not the slightest resemblance in taste or appearance to the delicious golden honey to which we are accustomed at home. Upon our return to Vermont we sent our Western friends a twenty-five pound pail of sugar, made by a farmer who has the best reputation for sugar-making in our vicinity, and which had been tested by experts; for this was when the McKinley Law was in operation, and there was a bounty on maple sugar.

Tom wrote that the sugar arrived safely, and they enjoyed it very much; but, of course, it was adulterated, or it could not possibly have been so white. Eleanor sent a very indignant reply to this letter, but failed to convince this doubting Thomas, who answered that he must see for himself the whole process of sugar-making before he would believe that which we sent him was not at least half granulated.

And so, to bring matters down to the present time, we were quite anxious to have the incredulous youth arrive in Vermont in season to be convinced by proof that he was wrong and we right.

The last of March came before we had the right kind of weather for sugar-making. "When it freezes nights and thaws days, then the sap runs like fun," as I heard a boy say the other day.

Our neighbor, Mr. Andrews, who owns a large "sugar place" a few miles out of town, had invited Eleanor to drive out with him as often as she liked, and when Tom came she took care to secure for him a like invitation.

It happened that the very day after he arrived that the Andrews' had asked a large party of young people out to the farm for a grand frolic and sugaring off. Eleanor and Tom went early with Mr. Andrews in order to see all that was possible. The rest of the company were to follow later in the hay-wagon, with the bottom filled with straw, which mode of transportation they called a "straw ride."

Arrived at the farm, they proceeded at one to the wood, which was on a side hill facing the south, an ideal place for a "sugar orchard." Though they had driven out from town on wheels, the woods were full of snow, so that it was necessary to use a sled for collecting the sap. Tom rode about with Mr. Andrews and looked on with interest as the farmer poured the sap from the bright tin pails into the huge receiver, and saw him tap some new trees, boring holes in the trunk of the trees in an obliquely ascending direction, and no great distance from the ground, to the depth of an inch or two, and then inserting little troughs, from which the sap goes drip, drip, drip into buckets below.

Of course, our Western boy had many questions to ask.

"Why, Mr. Andrews, do you use tin pails?" he inquired. "I think I have read somewhere about wooden ones being used."

"Yes," said Mr. Andrews, "we formerly used the wooden buckets, but we found they were coloring the sap, so that we now use the tin, and can make much whiter sugar."

At this Eleanor nudged Tom slyly, but he pretended to be very much interested in the tapping of a tree, and said:

"Why are nearly all your trees tapped upon the same side, Mr. Andrews?"

"You see, they are tapped on the south side, where the sun shines nearly all day, and, of course, the sap runs more freely on that side. We always tap on the south or east side when we can."

"Do you always collect the sap in the morning?"

"Yes, usually, for then the ground is frozen and we can get about in the woods more easily."

At this juncture Tom had a drink of the sap, which he pronounced very insipid.

"And how much of this stuff does it take to make a pound of sugar?" he inquired of Mr. Andrews.

"About four gallons," was the answer. "One tree yields from two to six pounds of sugar in a season."

By this time the sap was all collected, and they drove to the sugar-house, a neat little hut near the outskirts of the grove, where the sap was drawn off into another holder as large as ten or twelve ordinary barrels. From this the sap ran into the evaporator, which stood over a brick arch, where a bright fire was burning. In the height of the sugar-making season this fire never goes out, day or night, and the evaporator, which has several compartments, is always full of sugar in various stages of completion.

Tom saw them drawing off the syrup, straining it, and pouring it into the pails, where it was to stand and crystallize.

"Now, Master Tom," said Farmer Andrews, "I will set three pails over in the corner, and by the time you are ready to go home, the sugar will be exactly like that Eleanor sent you last Summer. I want you to come and look at it then and be convinced."

But Tom was a manly little fellow, and owned up generously.

"I am convinced already, Mr. Andrews, and thank you ever so much for opening my eyes. And, Eleanor," turning to his cousin, "I shall always believe after this that Vermont is justly famous for her pure maple sugar."

By this time the rest of the party had arrived, and to get up an appetite a grand game of hide-and-seek was proposed, and soon the woods were echoing with their fun.

Finally came the call to dinner, and Tom found what a sugar party was like.

Mr. Andrews had constructed a table out of some boards laid across two "horses," and his wife had covered it with a snowy cloth. At each plate was a pan of snow, a saucer of hot syrup, a spoon, and a fork. The rest of the repast was the regulation menu for a "sugarin' off"—thin slices of bread and butter, slices of pink ham, and curly shavings of dried-beef, tiny cucumber pickles, and huge "raised" doughnuts.

Tom looked askance at the snow, but soon learned from his neighbors what to do with it, and he found that the hot sugar poured on the snow made a clear, wax-like candy that was delicious.

I shall not dare to tell you how much those young folks ate. Tom would not have believed that he had such a capacity a year ago, and so you who have not seen might not believe me. For it is almost beyond belief how much maple sugar a true Vermonter can eat with good, sharp pickles sandwiched in between.

Tom laid a tired head on his pillow that night after thanking his Heavenly Father for his happy day. The whole process had had a great fascination for the boy, and as he lay there thinking about it all before going off to sleep he began to realize what wonderful things there are for us hidden away under just such unpromising exteriors as a rugged maple bark, and all to be had for patient labor. He had learned to appreciate one more of God's wonderful gifts to men.—Joy Sheldon, in Christian Witness.

JOCKO'S WASHING

Jocko sat on the kitchen window-sill in a brown study. He was watching Betsey do her washing. After awhile she took the basket and went out to the clothesline. She never thought Jocko was trying to learn to wash; but what do you think that monkey did?

Part of the clothes, already washed and boiled, were left in the rinsing-tub. There was a large wash, and Betsey could not carry all at once. Jocko took these, one by one, and plumped them into the dirty suds. Then he looked round for the soap. He could not find it; Betsey had left it in the tub.

But no matter. There was plenty of black coal in the scuttle on the hearth; and for aught he knew, that would answer just as well. So he took up a piece, rubbed it on the clothes, and scrubbed them on the washboard.

Some clean towels and dish-cloths lay on the dresser; and in they went, too. Jocko was working with a will, washing everything he could lay his paws on, when he saw from the window Betsey coming back.

Of course, he was helping her very much; but people are not always grateful when they have reason to be, and he was doubtful in her case. There might be a difference of opinion, and he was determined to finish the washing. There was a bolt on the kitchen door. Jocko sprang to the door, and slipped the bolt in a twinkling. Then he went back to his tub and washed away.

Betsey found herself locked out, and knew mischief was up. She shook and pounded the door, scolded and coaxed, all to no purpose. She went round to the window, but that was fastened down; and she was so fat and clumsy she could hardly have managed to climb in, even if it had been open. Again she coaxed, again she scolded and shook her fist at him. Jocko doubled his brown paw and shook it at her, grinned and chattered, and scrubbed harder than ever.

Poor Betsey fairly cried, and no wonder. After all her hard work, to see her clean clothes sopped in dirty suds and daubed with coal! Jocko had thrown in the bluing-bag and the salt—salt-cellar and all—for he had seen her use salt, in washing a dress, to set the color. And her dismay was complete when he snatched up some delicate lace collars and cambric handkerchiefs, and threw them in pell-mell with the rest.

By this time Betsey's mistress had heard the knocking from her room. She came downstairs, stopped Jocko's proceedings, and opened the door.

THE DAISY.

A certain prince went into his vineyard to examine it, and he came to the peach tree, and said: "What are you doing for me?"

And the tree said: "In the Spring I give my blossoms and fill the air with fragrance, and on my boughs hangs the fruit which men will gather and carry into the palace."

And the prince said: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Coming to the maple, he said: "What are you doing?"

And the maple said: "I am making nests for the birds, and shelter for the cattle with my spreading branches."

And the prince said: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

And he went down into the meadow, and said to the waving grass: "What are you doing?"

And the grass said: "We are giving up our lives for others—your sheep and cattle—that they may be nourished."

And the prince said: "Well done, good and faithful servants, that give up your lives for others."

And then he came to a little daisy that was growing in the hedgerow, and said: "What are you doing?"

And the daisy said: "Nothing! nothing! I can not make a nesting-place for the birds, and I can not give shelter to the cattle, and I can not send fruit into the palace, and I can not even furnish food for the sheep and the cows—they do not want me in the meadow—all I can do is to be the best little daisy I can be."

And the prince bent down and kissed the daisy, and said: "There is none better than thou."—Exchange.

Set the Lord always before you; in the high noon, when the sun burns in his meridian splendor, see a dim emblem of the relation which God sustains to all nature, all life, all evolution. In every little thing see some symbol of the great thing. In time see the beginning of eternity. In life, as we know it, see the type of life as God lives it. Thus the whole universe will become a sacred temple, all life a holy worship, all destiny a sublime and beneficent decree.—Joseph Parker.

We may love our homes ever so dearly, and count them the most precious places on earth, but now and then we want to take to the road. Home will be all the sweeter by and by, and we the better able to attend to our duties there, if we have an occasional outing.—July Ladies' Home Journal.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc.

On Nov. 14, at 2:30 P. M., quietly, in the eventide of a life of faithful service to God and kindness to man, the soul of ANON WESLEY WILKINS was called from this world, not to awake in the presence of its Savior. His was a long life of usefulness and true fidelity in every path of life—in Church, State, community, and in the home. He was a faithful husband and a devoted father. As a result of this Christian home, he leaves nine children (one having preceded him a few months to the better land), whose lives speak forth that their father's religion taught them the way of truth. Bro. Wilkins was born in Wilkinsville, S. C., Jan. 26, 1830. He joined the church when fifteen years old. He was first married to Miss Hester Norman, June 17, 1856; May 18, 1893, was again married to Miss Alice Perkins. Though gone from us, he ever liveth.

Bro. Wilkins will be missed by the Sunday-school of which he was the beloved superintendent. His vacant chair and forever hushed voice in our Sunday-school causes a profound sadness; and at church our hearts are sad, for we hear his voice no more singing the good old songs of Zion. But why should we be sad, for we know that his voice now mingles in sweetest songs with the redeemed of earth, praising his Savior forever and ever. To have been associated with Bro. Wilkins would make any life purer and better. We thank God for his life of usefulness. May his mantle fall on his children, and may they tread the path their father trod!

MRS. J. A. POE.

Mt. Pleasant, Miss.

MRS. MARTHA ADELAIDE RANDLE, daughter of Reuben and Elizabeth Colton, was born on the twenty-second of November, 1849, five miles east of Valden, Miss., and died of hematuria the tenth of December, 1900. She was happily married to R. L. Randle, Feb. 25, 1869, and was the mother of seven children, one of whom preceded her to the better land. Her husband, three sons and three daughters, four brothers, two sisters and a mother is left to mourn their loss; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and remained a loyal member until she passed away. She was faithful in all the relations of life, and a day or two before she died, being perfectly rational, said she loved her Savior and was not afraid to die. A few hours before she passed over the river her eldest daughter said, "Farewell, farewell, Mama; you are almost gone." She threw out her hand to her and said, "All right, all right," which were her last words. Her house was the preacher's home, and she was never better pleased than when ministering to their wants. Oh, she was such a loving, tender mother, always thoughtful of her children's welfare, and was a faithful wife and daughter. We hope to meet her in that land of pure delight where saints immortal reign.

Her mother, E. A. COLTON.

When MRS. SALLIE ALLEN ASHLEY passed from earth on April 22, 1901, the church below lost a most useful member, a lovely home gave up its chief ornament, a son was separated from a model mother, a husband was bereft of a devoted wife, and relative and friend experienced the rending of ties that had for many years held them to what was only noble and pure. We speak of her departure as a loss to us, and so it is; yet she is one of those of whom it is said, "Their works do follow them," and that which made her useful to the church, which caused her to be an ornament in the home, a model mother, devoted wife, and influential friend—in a word, her character—still exists. We mourn our sister's removal, but we rejoice that she has left us such tangible reminders of her presence. We are sad to be deprived of one so esteemed; yet we exult in Christ that death has no more dominion over her, and that in the presence of the King of kings she finds compensation for her suffering, rest from labor, and pleasures forevermore. C.

Rustoo, La.

MRS. MARTHA HAMMACK died on the evening of the twenty-sixth of May, 1901, after a long and painful illness. She was born Dec. 5, 1816, in Madison county, Miss. She joined the Methodist Church when fourteen years old; was married Dec. 5, 1872; was the mother of four children—three sons and one daughter. Two of her sons and her husband survive her. To Mrs. Hammack death came gently. She often told me, "I am not suffering now." She breathed out her life as silently as the jessemine bud breathing its perfume upon the morning air. Death did not subdue her or bereave her faith in the religion of our Lord. The calm, joyful Christian by the fireside in the hospitable home on the hill has gone from us; "is asleep in Jesus;" will never return to us again; will never again, with outstretched hand and friendly grasp, welcome our coming. Sadly shall I miss this true, tried friend of twenty-five years, whose inconsolable kindness come flowing back to me like bewildering music in the evening of my life. I shall live on, hoping for a sunset glorious with crimson and golden to await my exit from this world, and a meeting with you beyond the crystal river. Sleep on till God shall bid thee arise.

A friend indeed, W. S. W.

On May 14, at Wichita, Kan., the better part of our dear sister, the wife of the late Rev. Jno. Pipes, passed into the other world. For eight or nine years she had made her home with her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Jones, at Webster Grove, Mo., but the last year of her life was spent in quest of health in various localities where it was hoped that either from the waters or from physicians she could derive help. She died as she had lived—full of sunshine and hope. She said to her physician the day before what we call her death, as she thanked him for a small kindness, "To-morrow I will be more comfortable," and of the loved ones about her bed she asked, "Can't you hear the splashing of the waves?" Her daughters, Mrs. Jones and Miss Carrie Pipes, accompanied her remains to Grand Cane, where they were laid to rest by the side of those of Bro. Pipes on Friday, May 17. Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard conducted the services at the church, which was decorated with flowers instead of crape. W. G. EVANS.

HARDY VAUGHAN was born Aug. 9, 1886, and died March 21, 1901. Hardy had received something like a spinal injury some months before, caused from a jump. He grew worse and worse till his case became hopeless. Pain during his last few days' sickness was intense. He met death as only a hero could do. No tormenting fears were upon him. His mother spoke to him of death just a few days before he died, to which he replied: "I have been praying to die. I wish you had never had the doctor. My poor old papa will have to work to pay it." He asked them not to grieve after him. He selected the parties he wished to dress him after death. He was a manly boy. His integrity was perfect. All who knew him loved and respected him. His devotion and interest in his loved ones grew brautiful during his sickness. Yes, we all loved Hardy, but his noble life was needed in the spiritual world. God be praised for his sustaining grace during these dark hours.

His pastor, H. W. LEDBETTER

TELITHA FRANCES, wife of Ira P. Beasley, and daughter of Simeon and Mariah Mixon, died Jan. 13, 1901, in the seventy-third year of her age. Blessed with religious parents and a pious training, she became religious and a member of the church in early life, and was a devoted member to the day of her death. She was an invalid for many years, and was thereby deprived of the privilege of attending the sanctuary, but bore her suffering with patience. Shortly before she passed away, and while she was still conscious, she was asked by one who was waiting around her sick-bed if she loved Jesus. She replied, "Yes, I love him." She leaves a devoted husband, sons and daughter to mourn their loss, but they do not mourn as those who have no hope. Their loss is her gain. She has passed over the sea of life, and anchored safely in the haven of eternal rest. JOHN RITCHEY.

Death has taken from our church another of our old members, Sister MARY COOPER (nee Finch), who has belonged to the Methodist Church at Batesville since the sixties. She was born in Carroll county, Tenn., April 15, 1836; came to Mississippi more than fifty years ago. She was married to John A. Cooper in 1856, who left her a widow in 1893. Sister Cooper had been a great sufferer for thirty years, all of which was borne with Christian patience. Her testimony just before she left us was that she had made her arrangements for the future long since. She leaves one daughter, three brothers and three sisters to mourn their loss. She quietly passed away the third day of June. D. W. BAIRD.

Young Women

The entry into womanhood is a critical time for a girl. With her whole being undergoing a change, the seeds of female troubles are sown. Little menstrual disorders, if neglected at the time, will follow the woman all her life and grow into fatal complications. That female troubles are robbing homes and filling graveyards, proves this. Yet, irregular and painful menstruation are often permitted to go on, sapping the life and energy, while Wine of Cardui, the positive relief for these ills, is on the shelf of every drug store. Wine of Cardui helps the maiden sustain the shock of puberty by inducing a painless and natural menstrual flow. When once this important function is started right, a healthy life will usually follow. Wine of Cardui is an emmenagogue of great power, and works wonders in strengthening the delicate and sensitive female organs. Many young women owe their lives to Wine of Cardui. No woman should give up hope until she has given Wine of Cardui a trial. If thousands have secured relief through it, why not you?

WINE OF CARDUI

Tully, Kas., Feb. 24, 1899.

I have suffered untold pain at menstrual periods for a long time; was nervous, had no appetite, and lost interest in everything; in fact was miserable. I have taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui with Black-Draught when needed and to-day I am entirely cured. I cannot express the thanks I feel for what you have done for me.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The military force in Cuba will not be reduced.

Civil government will be organized in the Philippines, July 4.

Germany and other seafaring nations advocate an "open door" in China.

A church and two school-houses were burned by firebugs in Lincoln county, Miss.

More than £18,000 000 has been expended for the relief of the famine sufferers in India.

Two hundred employees of the Illinois Central Railroad have been retired on pensions.

Three men employed by the Southern Railway were beaten badly by strikers at Knoxville, Tenn.

Numerous heat prostrations and deaths are reported in the Northern cities, especially in New England.

President McKinley signed the commission of Judge William H. Taft to be Civil Governor of the Philippines.

The Alabama Constitutional Convention adopted the report of the committee on taxation, limiting the taxes to 65 cents on $100.

The Constitution of Cape Colony has been set aside as a measure of British military necessity in order to raise taxes to prosecute the war.

Rear-Admiral Bradford, U. S. N., chief of the Bureau of Equipment, recommended that the system of wireless telegraphy be used on warships.

The Chinese have begun to prepare a petition to be presented to the Congress of the United States, asking that the Geary exclusion act be repealed.

With a population of 4,780,000, the Argentine Republic possesses 5 081,000 horses. It is the only country in the world that has a horse for every inhabitant.

Pastors of Denver, Col., who had criticised the court for issuing injunctions restraining persons from wrecking saloons, were reprimanded by Judge Palmer in that city.

The empress dowager, fearing a trap to capture her, declines to return to Pekin, and has notified the grand council that the future capital will be Kai-Feng-Fu, in the province of Ho-Nan.

A compromise has been agreed upon by the presidents of the local street car lines and the union, and all differences were settled. The men get 18 cents per hour, a ten-hour day and practically all their other demands.

The State of South Carolina has begun proceedings before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to test the question whether the State can be legally required to take out special tax stamps as wholesale and retail liquor dealers under the South Carolina dispensary law.

A recent decision by the Supreme Court of North Dakota declares unconstitutional the legislative act adding what was known as the unorganized territory to certain counties. The counties affected by the act were those of Stark, Billings and Mercer, and the decision has raised a condition of legal chaos therein, which can only be removed by further legislation, and for which a special session may be called.

Beginning with July 1, many of the most vexatious of the taxes imposed by the National Government at the outbreak of the war with Spain have ceased to exist, and others have been materially modified. It is now more than three years since the taxes were imposed, and the revenues of the Government have gradually grown to such an excess over expenditures that Congress, at its last session, determined to reduce the special war taxes.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of a long-standing case of chills and fever by using two bottles.
J. C. STANLEY,

30TH ANNUAL CAMP MEETING

Seashore Camp Grounds.

WILL OPEN (D. V.) ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, NEXT, AND CONTINUE FOR 8 OR 10 DAYS.

The Grounds are opened April 1, and closed Nov. 1, for occupying cottages and reception of visitors. Modern and ample accommodation have been provided for the multitudes that annually visit this refreshing and delightfully cool and bracing place of rest, free from malaria and contagious diseases.

The sea bathing is unsurpassed by any resort on the Mississippi Sound, while the supply of pure, sparkling drinking water is furnished by one of the finest of artesian wells, whose waters possess rare virtues.

The exhilarating sea breezes refresh the fatigued, and act as a tonic to the debilitated visitors from our smoke-enveloped and dust-stifling cities and towns. Boats for sailing and fishing always on hand. The drives along the seashore present magnificent views, and are over ten miles in length. Visitors are not expected to arrive or depart on the Sabbath day.

The L. and N. R. R Company will place on sale the reduced rate of fare during the season, from all points on their lines, and secure a corresponding rate from all connecting lines. Tickets will be placed on sale July 7 to 21, inclusive, and be good to return on until Aug. 31. Two daily mail trains stop at the camp grounds, besides the accommodation and excursion trains, during the entire Summer season. A fine hotel with a frontage of 175 feet, equipped with electric lights and all modern conveniences, has been erected.

All itinerant preachers of the Southern Methodist Church will be admitted into the grounds and provided with lodging accommodations in Wesley Hall free of charge.

The usual entrance fee will be in force this season. No charge will be exacted for entrance on the Sunday of the camp meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to attend the camp meeting and spend a while on the camp ground.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before and during camp meeting, or rent cottages for the season, will please communicate with W. L. Vla, superintendent Camp Ground (Biloxi, P. O. 42, Miss.) or any of the following officers:

J. B LEFTWICH, President, Mobile, Ala.

WHY THE STATE IS EDUCATING MORE OF OUR GIRLS THAN THE CHURCH.

The State school for girls, located at Columbus, Miss., has during the past year enrolled more pupils than the five Methodist female colleges in the bounds of the two Mississippi Conferences, and has a fair outlook for a still larger patronage next year. There must be some real or apparent cause for this discrepancy. Does it lie in the fact that the State gives a better and more practical education than the Church? If so, then the State should educate the girls, for if we are not, as a Church, giving a thorough, practical education, we ought to quit the school business. Is this true? We are glad to say that such is not the case. Far from it. The Church is giving a higher education than the State proposes giving, and is doing as thorough work as the State. It may be that the State is attracting our girls by emphasizing the industrial features more than the Church. If so, the church could, and should, incorporate the industrial branches, and give our young women a working as well as a classical education. But is not cheapness her principal attraction? We feel confident that herein lies the secret of her success.

It is very difficult to get a Methodist farmer or merchant of small capital to conclude that he ought to send his daughter to a Methodist college at a cost of $185, when he can send two to the State institution for the same amount. He has not sufficiently studied the question to see the difference between education and Christian education, and to be willing to pay the difference. Can this difficulty be removed so that the church can educate her daughters? In other words, can the Church reduce the expenses so that a girl can be educated in one of our colleges for about the same as it costs in the State school? Let us figure on the basis of 300 girls. The State charges about $100 for each girl, without any of the ornate branches, such as music, art, expression, and voice culture. For any two of these she would charge from $80 to $100, making a total of $180 or $200. Can the Church duplicate these figures? Yes, and even better: 300 girls at $180 each would aggregate $54,000. We can get any number of well-educated, consecrated women who would be willing to teach for $500 and board, which is $50 and board per month. To teach three hundred girls, thirty-six teachers would be ample force. Twelve literary teachers, $500 each, $6,000; 6 expression teachers, $500 each, $3,000; 6 art teachers, $500 each, $3,000; 12 music teachers, $500 each, $6,000; cost of each girl, entire session, $80, $24,000; total, $42,000. This leaves us clear $12,000.

In this calculation we have arranged for every girl to take three extras. And anybody that has ever eaten college fare knows that $80 will cover all the expenses of a single girl.

Let's take 100 girls as a basis—$18,000. Four literary teachers, $500 and board, $2,000; 4 music teachers, $500 and board, $2,000; 1 art teacher, $400 and board, $400; 2 expression teachers, $400 and board, $800; cost of each girl, $80, $8,000; total, $13,200.

This is on a basis of three extras for every girl, and as no girl could get three extras and her literary course in the State school for less than $200, we should make our total $20,000, and add $1,000 for local patronage. We would have $21,000, giving us a clearance of $8,000. Don't you think $8,000 a very good salary for the president and his wife?

With proper management the Church can educate a girl for as little money as the State is now doing it. L. S. JONES.

ENDOWMENT FUND.

EDITOR OF THE ADVOCATE: I need your help in promoting a plan for the increase of the Conference Endowment Fund, which I have been considering for some time. I find that there is now a nucleus of $5,000 to the credit of that fund in the treasury of the Mississippi Conference. An examination of the Minutes of the Conference shows a very small growth in that fund for several years past. This should not be. In my judgment, this fund should be considered as of the very first importance, and its claims kept constantly before the church.

The life of a Methodist itinerant is one of sacrifice. He takes upon himself the vow of poverty with no less certainty than did the mediæval monk, but with this difference: the monk's objective point was to save his own soul; the preacher makes the sacrifice for the salvation of others.

As a rule, there are few Methodist preachers who could not earn more by applying the same talents and energy to secular pursuits. We all know this to be true, and yet how grudgingly, and with what a niggardly spirit, the average preacher's salary is paid—oftener not paid.

It must be a source of constant distress to the minister to know with positive certainty that when he grows old, and is worn out in the service of the church, only a beggarly pittance will stand between himself and starvation; and there is the ever-brooding fear for the wife and the little ones should he be taken. But that of the preacher is hardly comparable to the preacher's wife. In every woman the domestic instinct is dominant. It is God-given. There is no true woman who has not looked forward with joyous anticipations to the possession of her own home, her own vine and fig tree, under whose shade she may rear her children. The Methodist preacher's wife sacrifices all this. She bravely stifles the cravings of her woman's heart, and consents to become a homeless wanderer with her husband for Christ's sake. True, she usually has a shelter, usually a good one, but it is not home—the one thing dear to every woman's heart. The church owes it to itself to make sacrifices like these as light as possible, and an ample endowment fund offers the best solution.

It is necessary for the laity to take this matter in hand. The preachers will not do it. I attended a District Conference recently, and heard the presiding elder appealing to the pastors in behalf of foreign missions. He had much to say in behalf of John Chinaman, but never a word for the successors of John Wesley. I recognize the obligation of the church to send the gospel to all nations, but do not believe that all other duties and obligations should be subordinated to those due the "heathen Chinee," et id genus omne. To me the duty of keeping the wolf from the doors of the worn-out veterans of the cross, and their widows and orphans, is quite as imperative as that of caring for the spiritual welfare of the heathen. Without the church there can be no missionaries. I, therefore, propose to join any number of men and women in binding ourselves to pay to our respective Conferences, annually, a fixed sum, to become a part of the Conference Endowment Fund, the interest of which must be appropriated solely to Conference claimants.

The Minutes of the last Mississippi Conference show the distribution to forty-eight claimants of $4,671.25, in sums from $20, the lowest, to $200, the highest amount paid to any one person. What a pitiful provision is this for the support of even one human being! Let us lay members try and remove this reproach from our church. I will give one hundred dollars annually to this fund, and regret that I can not give more. Who else will contribute to this most worthy cause, each one giving as the Lord has blessed him?

Notoriety is distasteful to me, and I, therefore, withhold my name. Persons desirous of contributing can do so through the ADVOCATE, or Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, the pastor of our church.

If this appeal meets with a response, it would be well to publish a list of names by way of inducement to others. Fraternally,

METHODIST.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference convened at Steen's Creek on the afternoon of June 26, 1901, and concluded its work Saturday afternoon, the twenty-ninth, having had a very delightful and profitable session. Notwithstanding the honor recently conferred upon the presiding elder, Rev. T. B. Holleman, D. D., by his alma mater, Emory and Henry, he was at himself, and presided to the satisfaction and delight of all concerned.

Every hour of the session was full of interest, and especially was this true of Friday, the day set apart for a "Missionary Rally." Interesting addresses were made by the members of the Conference appointed by the presiding elder some weeks before; but the hours at which there was the largest attendance of the people of the community were 11 A. M., when Dr. W. C. Black preached on the subject of missions, and 8:30 P. M., when Rev. N. B. Harmon read a very excellent paper on the campaign work of the district. Miss Bettie Hughes, of our China Mission, also addressed the congregation on her work in the mission field. The missionary spirit was at a high tide mark, as will be noted by the resolutions adopted. It is to be hoped that the missionary spirit of that Conference will not wane, but rather become more practical in its application for service throughout the district.

Reports from the preachers indicate improvement in all departments of work throughout the bounds of the district.

Rev. M. L. Burton, vice-president of Whitworth College, was present, and represented the college in a very happy manner.

I have not known such enthusiasm for building parsonages and churches since my connection with the Conference. Rev. W. A. Terry, of Thomasville charge, leads the district in the latter.

Prominence was given the preaching service, and it is worthy of mention that the presiding elder would not yield the 11 o'clock hour of the last day's session in order that we might conclude the business of the Conference. There was no rush, and everything was done "decently and in order." The preaching was done by H. J. Moore, G. H. Thompson, H. B. Watkins, W. B. Lewis, C. C. Evans, C. F. Emery, and Robt. Selby.

Bro. Hull, as our host, proved his fitness for such a delicate and laborious position, and the hospitality of his people was unbounded. Everybody had a smile for everybody else, and the Conference made to feel that the people were glad to have us.

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference were: R. L. Bennett, J. C. Enochs, J. C. Cavett, and T. N. Joner; alternates: Rev. J. F. Robinson and L. S. Reed.

ROBT. SELBY, Sec.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Jackson District Conference at Steen's Creek, and publication of same in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE requested:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each pastor in the Jackson district to hold a Missionary Rally within the bounds of his charge during this Conference year.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each pastor to notify the presiding elder if he shall not have received sufficient literature to distribute unstintedly among his people.

Resolved, That each pastor shall use every effort to induce the people within his charge to subscribe to the Missionary Review, making a special effort to put the latest missionary publication, Go Forward, in every Methodist home.

N. B. HARMON,
M. H. MOORE.

Resolved, That a special secretary for the district shall be appointed by the presiding elder to assist him in carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and any other work deemed necessary by the presiding elder to bring up the assessment of the district in full.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each pastor of the Jackson district to notify the presiding elder some time during the third week in September of this year whether there is a deficit for missions upon his charge, that, if possible, plans may be inaugurated to raise the amount.

N. B HARMON,
W. B. LEWIS

Robt. Selby was appointed district secretary.

Resolved, That the Jackson district shall publish a special missionary edition of some one of the leading secular papers, to be published early in the Fall, the proceeds to be devoted to missions as shall be directed by the special Publishing Committee, the presiding elder to be editor-in-chief.

CROWLEY DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-third session of this Conference met at Crowley, La., June 26-29. All the preachers were present except C. H. McClendon, whose absence on account of sickness was much regretted. The lay delegation was rather small. One whole day and two evenings were given to the discussion of missionary subjects. Fortunately the spirit of the great New Orleans Conference will not down, as was evinced by such speakers as Tucker, Johns, Vaughan, A. C. Smith, Munholland, M. Hebert, and others. Excellent addresses were given by A. M. Mayo and A. P. Holt.

Special interest was evoked by Rev. M. Hebert's report regarding his work among the French-speaking people. This work ought to have more financial backing.

Several revivals have been held on the district, resulting in a spiritual uplift and some accessions to the church. Lake Charles, Lake Arthur and Crowley have raised their missionary assessments in cash and good subscriptions. The Rayne Church overpaid its assessment, besides building a new parsonage. Several new churches will be built before Conference, and others repaired and finished.

Dr. Cooper was present a short while, and made one of his stirring talks on education.

Dr. A. F. Watkins was also a welcome visitor, delighting the Conference with an address. His sermon was a spiritual feast.

Dr. Carter, our esteemed presiding elder, read a most instructive paper on the missionary status of this district. The ADVOCATE was requested to publish it. Steps will be taken to have it published in pamphlet form also, for it deserves the widest possible circulation.

A resolution was passed looking to the creation of an order of deaconesses. (General Conference, please take notice!)

The following were elected lay delegates, viz: Capt. J. N. Pharr, T. S. Singleton, W. L. Doss, and M. A. Robinson; alternates: A. M. Mayo, Henry Pharr.

Rev. C. P. Smith makes an excellent Conference host, and the generous hospitality of Crowley is not hid under a bushel. R. W. Tucker and this scribe were delightfully entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Gus. Fontenot.

The next session of the Conference will be held at Abbeville.

It was a real pleasure to the Conference to have among its members Rev. John F. Wynn, one of our most worthy veterans.

LEAGUE PRAYER MEETINGS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I read with astonishment in the ADVOCATE, of June 27, the following clause in the resolutions of the Mississippi State League Conference: "We must deplore the disposition in some quarters to deflect the League from its original and legitimate purpose. It is not a missionary society, nor a prayer meeting, but it is an opportunity for the employment of our young people, which means the preservation of their lives from the blight of worldliness, and their training for successful Christian service."

I am the first vice-president of a League, and have for years been engaged in religious work among young people, and I think I speak by the card when I say that the "disposition" referred to is a protest against the tendency among Leaguers to ignore the prayer meeting and place the Literary Department at the front. Ever since I have been connected with the League movement I have heard the hue and cry that in order to make the League "go," it must not be made too spiritual. The result, where such a League exists, is to fill the church with unconverted church-working young people. The church can not compete with the world in entertainments. Provide wholesome amusements, but let them lead to Christ.

Brethren, at this opening of the century, when the grand call of the church is to prayer on behalf of the evangelization of the world, do not make the official utterances of our Leagues to even hint at a slur upon its prayer meetings. How can our young people be preserved from the "blight of worldliness" except through the prayer meeting? We need to pray more, and let us teach our Leaguers that only in prayer is the power of the church. ZACCHEUS.

Yazoo City, Miss.

EDWARD M'GEHEE COLLEGE.

Another laborious, harmonious and profitable session of this well-known institution was concluded by the commencement exercises on the eleventh of June. That a faithful corps of competent instructors had bestowed diligent care in teaching and training the girls committed to their charge was amply evidenced.

Rev. Mr. Carre, pastor at Jackson, La., and professor in Centenary College, preached a most interesting and edifying sermon in the college chapel on Sunday, the ninth, to an appreciative audience.

On Tuesday the trustees met, and expressed their satisfaction with the conduct of the institution under Miss Swanson. A large number of Certificates of Proficiency were awarded to meritorious pupils in the several classes. There were no graduates, except one in music—Miss Whitaker.

The annual address was delivered by Hon. J. Burruss McGehee, who strongly impressed upon the audience the need of thorough and harmonious cultivation of body, mind, and heart, in order to reach the only real and the highest welfare of man.

The concert and recitations at night were all the friends of the college could have wished in such an exhibition.

Mr. J. A. Redhead and Mr. J. W. McQueen were elected to fill vacancies in the Board of Trustees.

Most of the same able faculty of the last session will be retained for the session which will open on the seventh of September, next.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION.

Some of the topics to be discussed at the Arcadia District Conference, to be held at Arcadia, La., July 30-Aug. 1: Connectional Co-operation, Doctrinal Preaching, Revival Preaching and Methods, How to Improve the Preaching, by the laymen present; What Is Our Greatest Need in Sunday-school Work? How to Get the Older People to Attend, The Sunday-school as an Educative Agency, The Sunday-school as an Auxiliary Society, Missionary Conscience, Missionary Information, The Missionary Collection.

Let all who can do so, attend and be prepared to enter into the discussion of these subjects with any others that are of importance to the welfare of our Zion.

Miscellaneous Notes.

The camp meeting at Bethel will begin July 25. Dr. LaPrade and other able ministers of the gospel will there expound the Word from day to day.

A collection was taken in the Methodist Church at Woodville, Miss., for the benefit of our church in Jacksonville, Fla., on last Sunday, according to the appeal of our Bishops.

We were not fortunate enough to attend the closing exercises of Grenada College, but one who was present, and knows, says "the session just closed was the best in its history, and its prospects were never so bright. The Building Committee is now considering plans, and, with no untoward event, will ere long let the contract for the long-talked-of and much-needed annex."

Everything is in readiness in San Francisco for the International Epworth League Conference, which meets July 18. There will, doubtless, be a large gathering of the Leaguers. The Californians, as well as Leaguers all over the country, are looking forward with great interest to the Conference, and are expecting a happy meeting. We pray that a great blessing may attend the exercises.

EDMUND TAYLOR.

The Taylor family came from Virginia to West Tennessee at an early day. The patriarch, Howell Taylor, settled in Hay wood county. The sons, who were grown when they came West, settled in the same section, except Edmund, who opened a farm in Fayette county, about eight miles north of Somerville. The family were remarkable for their wealth, intelligence, piety, and devotion to the church. Methodism is indebted to them more than to any other family within the bounds of the Memphis Conference, for they did more than any others to sustain the cause and give tone to the church in the early days. They were moved to the work through pure love for Christ. The whole family, from the oldest to the youngest, were thoroughly in love with Methodism, and though rich and influential, they carried no worldly spirit into the church. Their riches, like themselves, were consecrated, and they lived to do good and make the world better. I knew most of the family when I was a boy, and was an eye-witness of their godly simplicity as exhibited in their homes and their family church, Old Tabernacle; but not until I had almost reached middle life did I become thoroughly acquainted with Edmund, the prince of the family. As preacher-in-charge of the circuit in which he lived, I preached regularly at "Taylor's Chapel," and learned to reverence and love "Uncle Ed" as well as to know him. He was indeed a prince in Israel. I never met him without realizing that I was in the presence of a man of God. I never left him without feeling better, and purposing in heart to be a better man. He was then bent with age and infirm—full of faith and the Holy Ghost. At that time of life the striking features of his manhood had departed, but the spirit remained, and what constituted personal identity was unimpaired. The men of the family, especially the older ones, were eccentric. Uncle Ed was no exception. He was peculiar in dress, in speech and in manner. He always wore a white handkerchief about his head and ears. He spoke loud, and his words were long drawn out, and he called everybody "Honey." His manner was indescribable. He was not coarse or rude, but he had as little of the conventional about him as any man to be met. He was a born Virginia gentleman, one of the neatest and cleanest handed, but without the air and boast of any of the F. F. V's. He was a noble man, the son of a nobleman, but he never paraded his pedigree or tried to make the impression that he was better than his neighbors. In his mind and heart and actions he was brother to the whole human race.

Edmund Taylor was a thorough Methodist. He accepted the doctrine and polity of the church in their entirety. This was natural, as his early training had turned his mind and heart to Episcopal Methodism, and started him on his religious career. In after life his impressions ripened into conviction—he read and thought for himself; he formed opinions, and no man was better prepared to give a reason for his hope, or to defend the doctrines of his church. His library was supplied with the standard books of Methodism, and he read them. Wesley's Sermons in his estimation contained the clearest exposition of Bible truths, and he studied them almost daily. It was his custom to read them through once a year. In addition to a clear understanding of the cardinal doctrines of grace, he was well read in the points of controversy, though it is probable he was never in his long life engaged in a controversy with any man of a different order of faith. The itinerant system he believed to be the best method of supplying the world with the gospel. The system frequently sent to him a man as pastor greatly his inferior in learning and intelligence, but he never complained or withheld the quarterage due the man of God. The writer knows whereof he affirms, and gratefully remembers to this day his promptness and liberality. He was the first man who ever handed me an individual contribution of fifty dollars for the support of the ministry. Such a thing has happened to me but once since. He never forgot his obligations, financial or of other nature, to the church.

He was a holy man. I never knew one more thoroughly consecrated. He made no profession of sanctification, but the manner of his life indicated that the element in which he lived was a holy element. His communion with God was uninterrupted, and he experienced the saving power of grace, and constantly enjoyed the peace and presence of the Holy Ghost. He let nothing stand between him and his religious duties, and he made full provision for the religious training and development of those under his care. His children were "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and they followed him as he followed Christ. His servants had all the advantages possible for him to bestow, and if they were not religious, it was not his fault. His custom after every meal was to retire for secret prayer, and the stranger in his house was invited to avail himself of the privilege. He never left his secret devotions without rejoicing in God. Sometimes the blessing came without apparent effort. At other times he "wrestled with God," and always prevailed. There was no ostentation in his invitations to the closet. He never talked about his habit—the prayer over, he said no more about it until the next meal, then simply: "Let us have a word of prayer." All religious duties were regularly observed. He was not austere or morose. He was cheerful and companionable, enjoyed religion, and "used this world as not abusing it."

Such a man as Edmund Taylor could not be other than a man of influence, and his influence was as extensive as his acquaintance. I never met a man who carried more religious weight than he. He was powerful in prayer, and his petitions in the public congregation at times seemed to bring him and God face to face, and believers would instinctively look for answers to his pleadings. When he put his hand on a sinner's head and warned him of danger, or exhorted him to seek the Lord, he would either fall or tremble with emotion. He was irresistible. The unyielding would in times of religious awakening keep out of his way. They would sometimes run as if danger threatened, and safety could be found only in flight.

He was a peculiar man. To say that he was one of nature's oddities would be about the best way to describe him. He was odd in the manner of his criticisms and reproofs, and in characterizing men and things. His friends richly enjoyed his sayings, and yet they were afraid to become the objects of his witticisms or his homely thrusts. Strangers did not know how to take him. The people were always eager to know what Uncle Ed thought of the "new preacher," for if he had any fault or failing, he was sure to be told of it by the old man. Many amusing things are told by the older preachers. On one occasion a meeting was appointed for the chapel, and for some cause the pastor could not reach the place until Monday, and he sent Rev. T. J. Neely in his stead. Brother Neely was an impulsive man, and when in the spirit, was a man of power. He went to the chapel directly from a great revival, and was full of zeal. He did not reach the church in time on Saturday, and a local brother was called on to lead. Just as he concluded the preliminary exercises Brother Neely rushed in and, without any further service, announced his text, and commenced preaching. The sermon was a failure. At the close Uncle Ed approached him: "Oh, yes! Brother Neely: you came down here from that big meeting all full of zeal, and you thought you'd set the world afire, but you didn't do anything. You preached the poorest sermon I ever heard." This was too much for Brother Neely—he groaned all the afternoon and much of the night. A good brother tried to comfort him, but in vain. "That dear old man don't understand me. He has almost killed me." But the preacher rallied, and on Sunday gave the people one of his heaven born sermons—a perfect soul lifter, and Uncle Ed was ready: "Oh, yes! Brother Neely: yesterday you thought you'd be mighty smart, and you made a failure; but you humbled yourself, and went to prayer, and today you preached a mighty good sermon. It did me good, Brother Neely. It made my soul happy." That healed the wound. Once the old man was sick, and invited the preacher, who came to meet his regular appointment, to bring the congregation "up to the house," and preach there. Of course, they went, but the preacher, though a man of study and ability, could not adapt himself to a sudden change of circumstances, and delivered the sermon he had prepared. His line of thought led him to say a good deal about Jewish ordinances not well calculated to comfort a sick man. As soon as the congregation dispersed, Uncle Ed turned to the preacher, and said: "Come here, Honey," and reaching out, grasped the preacher's hand and exclaimed, "You are the first preacher, in all my life, I ever heard preach circumcision to a dying man." It goes without saying that the preacher never forgot the sick man's reproof. When old Wesley Camp Ground was in the height of its popularity, and great men from all sections attended the annual feast, there came a stranger, small of stature, rather shabbily dressed, and nothing of an external nature to attract attention save the blue blanket he wore over his shoulders. He came with a well-known member of the Conference, and being a preacher, was cared for at the preachers' tent. Rev. Arthur Davis was in charge of the meeting, and cautious about putting up strangers to preach. Saturday afternoon he spoke to the young man's friend: "Who is that man? Can he preach?" The reply was: "Yes, a little. He is a nice man, and it will do no harm to give him a trial. He will not disgrace the cause." The young man was appointed to preach that night. His text was the seventh and eighth verses of the fifth chapter of Romans. The preacher was in his best mood, and Uncle Ed listened in amazement, as did the whole congregation. Next morning the old man started out to make inquiry. Meeting a friend he said: "Who was that man that preached last night? Where did he come from?" "That was Brother Campbell, sir. He came from McNairy county—the hills of McNairy." "Well, well," said Uncle Ed, "he talked so pretty I thought he came from town." Those who heard C. D. N. Campbell in his palmy days are fully prepared to appreciate the old man's astonishment.

Though a new man to Uncle Ed when I went to the circuit, I was fortunate enough to arouse the old man's sympathy, and he never criticised me sharply. The nearest I came to a thrust, as far as I know, was after a very short and feeble effort at preaching, and in a voice not loud enough for him to hear distinctly. He told some one after the service that he thought I "was reading a hymn all that time," and added, "I thought it was a mighty long hymn." I was on the circuit full three months before I "struck his flint." It was on a Saturday evening. I preached what he called a "fiery sermon." The family had attended the service except his son's wife, and all had returned and seated themselves about the fire before Uncle Ed came in. As soon as he appeared at the door, he exclaimed: "I tell you, Katie, we had a brand-new preacher to-night. Bless the Lord! my soul is happy. I just feel like I could hug a dog." Many more amusing incidents and sayings might be related. Let these suffice. I never expect to see his like again—a man whose eccentricities were laughable, but never detrimental to himself or the cause of Christ. He was a great and good man.

OLD PREACHER'S COMPLIMENTS TO MISSISSIPPI LAYMAN.

BY REV. J. W. CUNNINGHAM.

I was an itinerant preacher in Kentucky and Missouri thirty-one years, and have been a local elder twenty-five years and more. I have read with interest what Layman Hollcman has to say about the fraternity to which I belong. I was charmed with his pen-pictnre of that isolated congregation, far away from railroads and rivers, in Mississippi that has thirty educated men and women in it, with diplomas from universities, colleges, etc., among whom are lawyers, legislators, doctors, and others. That led me to pause and mentally inspect the congregation with which I have been connected for more than twenty years. For eight years past I have lived within four squares of the church, and have had opportunities for knowing it fairly well. It is said to have on its roll of members more than fourteen hundred names. The church is one of the largest and finest in Southern Methodism, is within sixteen squares of the largest and longest river in the United States, within four squares of the largest union depot in the world, into which a hundred and twenty trains come daily, saying nothing of suburban trains, and is within from one to a few squares of cars on five hundred miles of electric street-car lines, from any part of the city—four miles or less—for five cents. I know two medical and two dental doctors and two lawyers, but if there be any other man who has a diploma from a college or university in the congregation, I have never heard of the fact. What does all this prove? Nothing, but that an out-of-the-way Mississippi town is in advance, in the matter of higher education, of the largest congregation of Methodism in the fifth city of "the greatest country in the world."

I can sympathize with the preacher that has to confront so many graduates of universities, colleges, and normal high schools; and I do not wonder that "an humble steward should blush for the ignorance and weakness of pastor and local brethren." He ought to have a diploma, too, to help him bear his burden. I repeat, that I can sympathize with the preacher to such an educated congregation, for the first sermon I preached as an itinerant preacher, eight months to a day from my conversion, and when I was a little over twenty years old, was to professors and students and people in a town where was the then oldest Methodist college in the world (Augusta, K.). Eight months from that day, June 1, 1845, I was, in that church, required by the Board of Trustees to declare my adherence to the M. E. Church, or "the Church, South," organized two weeks before. I declared for "the South." They told me to "go," and I went. Soon after that day I met one of the "humble trustees." He was a constable, and a much larger man than I was, and took occasion to tell me that his "horse could beat me preaching." Then I "blushed for my weakness." If I had been as big a man as he was, I don't know what I might have done. When I told a brother about the interview, he said, 'If you had made a pass at him, he would have run." But I rode on and left him on the highway.

Then I was a youngster and a beginner, and the M. E. Church, South, had only two adhering members. They were Bishop Andrew and this (then) junior preacher. Now, after the lapse of fifty-six years, I learn that in Mississippi "an humble steward" has been made to "blush at the ignorance of a pastor and local brethren." Mississippi preachers, traveling and local, ought to do better after a half century of improved and improving opportunities.

Notwithstanding that "humble constable's" opinion of my preaching in his town, Bishops Soule and Andrew returned me for the second year to that circuit from the first Annual Conference held in the name of the M. E. Church, South. An "humble steward" or church trustee may sometimes be mistaken in his estimate of the abilities of a pastor or local preacher.

During those first two years of mine on the upper Ohio river border I learned some facts about preachers whose early educational opportunities were few. Other facts about them I learned in later years. One was Edward Stevenson, to the manor born. In his parental cabin the first society by an itinerant preacher was formed in Kentucky. With little education he entered the Conference, and became a leading man in Kentucky Methodism. Was twelve years Book Agent for our church, and was also president of a female college.

H. B. Bascom was a farm laborer and dray driver. Was trying to preach at sixteen years. Bishop Morris said to me Henry was "immensely ignorant at his beginning," but he was a natural orator in telling what he did know. He became a most famous pulpit man. Was professor in Augusta College, President of Transylvania University, and was elected Bishop in 1850.

John P. Durbin was licensed in the bounds of my circuit. Said an old-timer to me, "He was the 'purest' expense for a preacher that ever went on a circuit." He became Professor of Languages in Augusta College, President of Dickinson College in Pennsylvania, and was twenty-two years Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church.

William Winans was a youthful laborer in the Pennsylvania Iron Works, then a farm-hand in Ohio, and in 1808 was on the Limestone circuit, which included the region I served. The itinerant wheel rolled him into the oldest sugar-producing region of Louisiana. The balance of his life was spent in Louisiana and Mississippi, and in the General Conferences of 1836 and 1844 he was the most formidable antagonist of the anti-slavery agitators. His niece, now ninety-eight years old, told me that he said to her that in his youth he "baked his brain" by kneeling before blazing pine-knots in his mother's cabin fire-place studying his lessons for log-cabin school.

All four of the men named were prominent in the General Conference of 1844, out of whose contentions grew the M. E. Church, South.

St. Louis, Mo.

P. S.—I wrote the foregoing on Saturday. Sunday I privately made inquisition in Sunday-school and congregation for "graduates." I discovered six young ladies who have the documents, and one has three of them. Two venerable dames have a pair from a Kentucky academy. Another matron, not so old, has one, and her husband has two—one from a university and one from a law school. A grizzled ex-warrior has a diploma from a military establishment. I asked one who was reared in sight of Yale College. His reply was: "I went through Yale. That is, I went in at one door and out at another." He has the largest class of young men to be found in any Sunday-school in the city. He has been many years president of one of the largest national banks. The superintendent was "a printer's devil" in a Maryland town. He completed his printer's trade, but got no diploma. Now he is president of one of the largest wholesale mercantile houses in the city, and president of the largest electric railway street-car company in the world. Neither of these leaders in St. Louis Southern Methodism feels humiliated without a university or college diploma; nor is either "stuck up" because of his prominence in business affairs. Give the ignorant young preachers a chance, whether traveling or local, and they may after awhile surpass some that have diplomas. But let all who have the ministry in view as a life-work get all the college and university education within their reach.

NOTICE.

The district secretaries elected at our recent annual meeting for Corinth and Durant districts declined to serve. To fill these vacancies, Mrs. J. M. Bradley, of Booneville, has been appointed secretary of Corinth district, and Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, of Pickens, secretary of Durant district. The change in Durant district was made too late to publish Mrs. Wilburn's name in the list of district secretaries in the Tenth Annual Report. MRS. E. W. FOOTE, Pres.

IN MEMORIAM.

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Mrs. Elvira E. H. Nelson was born in East Baton Rouge parish, near Baton Rouge, La., Sep'. 22, 1822, and died in the city of Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 16 1900. For her to live was Christ, to die gain. She was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, South, for many years. Her faith in God was supreme. Under the severest trials she said, like Job, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." I will praise and magnify my God. She was modest and unassuming, her left hand not knowing what her right hand did; her one motive, I do this in Christ's name. "I fear and love God," "God rules," "I do it in His name," "Maybe I need the discipline," were terms used constantly in her every-day life. No one ever sought her aid or counsel in vain. Her home was the home of all, young and old. The little children loved her dearly; she was "Aunt Bi" to nearly all who knew her. The colored people, as well as the white, mourn her death. After a long and useful life spent in the footsteps of Jesus, doing good, she sweetly fell asleep in the arms of her Lord. She was remarkably cheerful and self-sacrificing. Her end was triumphant. She was thinking and planning for the good of others even unto the end. Her path shone brighter and brighter as the years passed by. Like her Savior, whom she served in Sunday-school, Church, and State, she had the most forgiving spirit I ever knew. She spent and was spent in the Master's vineyard. A few days before she died she quoted those beautiful words: "How happy every child of grace who knows his sins forgiven. Happy, yes, happy;" and the most glorious smile spread over her features. I, too, catching the inspiration, smiled and said, "Happy," and kissed the dear one. It seemed the very ante-chamber of heaven. I promised to meet her in heaven.

The first time I left the old home (when a young girl) to teach one mile above Baton Rouge and across the river, every evening I would look across the waters at the tall, stately buildings, the spires of the churches, hear the ringing of the bells, and it all looked so beautiful; but the home of dear "Aunt Bi" was the great attraction, and not the home, but she. I tried to teach the children the very best I could, but at the close of the week, the school duties over, we took the little boat and glided across the waters with a good, trusty oarsman, and soon I was at home; and when I met her who had guided and shaped my life, and trained me for a life of usefulness and independence, there were shouts of laughter and great rejoicing.

Since our Heavenly Father has called her to the mansions on high, and left me to work awhile longer in his vineyard, I am trying to follow her as she followed Jesus, doing with my might whatsoever my hand findeth to do; my eye fixed on God and his own beloved Son, Jesus Christ, who died that we might have eternal life. And when my Father calls me to come, I will be ready and eager to cross over the bar, with Jesus as my pilot, and enter in through the gates into the city of the "New Jerusalem," and be forever with the Lord and dear loved ones.

What a glad day! what rejoicing! what a meeting that will be! God help us all to make sure of heaven!

Her niece and foster child,

E. E. HOCUTT.

LELAND, MISS.

Dear Doctor: We are in the midst of a meeting of great spiritual power in Leland. Bro. McIntosh is with us. His preaching is in demonstration of the Spirit. Convictions attend the message. The Spirit is moving the people to a better life. Bro. Norsworthy leads in the song service. We are expecting great and lasting results. To God be all the praise. More later.

Fraternally, J. T. Murrah.

SCHLATER, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Our work moves up apace. Two meetings have resulted in the addition of eight to our church. Four already received and four reserved to next appointment. Rev. W. J. O'Bryant preached for us in his inimitable style, to the great good of many, and greatly impressing all who heard him. The meetings grew in interest to the close. We esteem this a fair showing for the Delta, where white people are so few.

Our new church at Maryland will be dedicated on Sunday, July 7, by Rev. J. H. Mitchell, P. E., of Winona district. We would enjoy a visit from the Advocate personally at that time. Very truly yours,

BROOKSVILLE, MISS

We have just closed an interesting meeting of seven days' duration. Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, did the preaching, and he did it well. His presentation of the Word was with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. He made the gospel so plain and simple that a child could understand. By apt illustration and appropriate quotations he embellished his sermons so that the most fastidious had nothing to criticise. Then God manifested his approval by giving the Holy Spirit. Many church members were touched and moved to a higher life. But so many of those we were most desirous of reaching remained away, being interested more in the things of this world than in those things which pertain to the kingdom of heaven. Five were received by letter, and a great many, no doubt, promised themselves a closer walk with God.

We have had the most satisfactory Children's Day services this year of the three years I have been here. Largo crowds attended, much interest was manifested, and collections better than usual. The circuit is doing as well as at any former time since I have known it.

E. S. Lewis.

POTTS CAMP, MISS.

Dear Advocate: I think it not out of place to write you a short letter from this work. Our presiding elder, Rev. N. G. Angnstus, has just held our second quarterly meeting, preaching four sermons for us in his usual forcible way. He is certainly the right man in the right place. The work is improving on all lines in this charge. We are repairing our church at Potts Camp to the amount of one hundred dollars. We have organized a Ladies' Home Missionary Society with thirteen members, with which we hope to do a good work. We hope to be able to do something for the Advocate in the near future. I can't see how any Methodist family can get along without it. With best wishes for the Advocate and Dr. Boswell, I am, Yours in Christ,

G. W. Strickland.

TUPELO STATION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Our special revival services continued with increasing power from June 9 to June 23. Rev. Theo. Copeland, of St. Paul's Methodist Church, Birmingham, Ala., preached twelve days, with great acceptability to the church and town. He is a man in every way eminently suited to revival work. His work abides because his preaching and personal work reaches the hearts and homes of the people. No man has ever assisted me in a meeting who came so nearly reaching all the people, in the best way, as Bro. Copeland. This means much, because all the men who have assisted me in the past have proven a great blessing to my work and people. Fortunate that pastor who is favored with a visit from Bro. Copeland.

One of the most important factors in our great revival was the five days' fine preaching and very efficient work of Rev. J. A. Leech, of Okolona. He is a success wherever you put him. The people of Tupelo will always love Bro. Leech.

A class of twenty-eight was received into the church Sunday, June 23. Others are expected to unite with us soon. The church is revived indeed. At least forty family altars have been erected, and all the interests of the church advanced. Since Jan. 1, 1901, we have received seventy-one members into the church, and have raised over $1,800 in cash for all purposes, and have a growing subscription, which now amounts to $1,100. Our men's prayer meeting every Monday night averages thirty-five men and boys. Our people are happy and much encouraged. We are pressing on to complete victory. J. A. Bowen.

GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The Grenada District Conference met in its thirty-second annual session in Coffeeville, Miss., at 2 P. M., on June 27, 1901. The attendance was very fine. Fourteen out of the fifteen pastors, the president of Grenada College, seven local preachers, and a good number of lay delegates, being present. Most of the brethren remained through the last service. We had but few visitors. They were not eloquent strangers, but loving friends—our own kin-brethren. Rev. J. M. Hampton, who, for fifty years, has been connected with Methodist life in the Grenada district; Rev. G. W Bachman, who is assistant preacher on every circuit in our Conference Bro. H. H. Estes, of Sunday-school fame, and the editor of the New Orleans Advocate, completed the roll of guests.

The interests of the church were well looked after under the guidance of Presiding Elder Bell. He is a splendid presiding officer.

It was shown by the reports of the pastors that the Epworth League in this district is practically a failure. Attention was called to considerable mission territory in this district, and action was taken looking to a more vigorous policy in our home mission work. The spiritual interest of the church is good. The financial condition, notwithstanding the failure of crops last year, is better than almost any previous corresponding time. The Sunday-school interest is growing.

Action was taken endorsing and reiterating the utterance of our Annual Conference concerning inter-collegiate games.

Benton Tyndall, of Main Street Church, Water Valley, and Robert Isham Colline, of Coffeeville, were licensed to preach. Both of these young brethren promise great usefulness. They will continue at college through next session.

R. W. Jones, J. G. McGowen, H. W. Huntor, and R. F. Cole, local elder, were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; W. A. Brunor, local elder, and S. S. Spencer, alternates.

A subscription and collection for our Orphans' Home amounted to $392 42.

Grenada College was shown to be in a prosperous condition, and having outgrown her present quarters, the Annual Conference was asked to encourage and authorize the building of additional room.

Devotional exercises were given a prominent place, and the preaching was attended with power. The sermon of E. H. Rook, on the twenty-third Psalm, reached the high-water mark in spiritual force.

Upon the whole, it was the most successful Conference the writer has attended since 1894.

May the God of hosts bless all we did for the good of his church!

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

ROCKY SPRINGS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Last Sunday was a great day for Rocky Springs circuit. We had our Missionary Rally; two sermons by Rev. L. S. Jones, of Port Gibson. One hundred and twelve dollars in cash and good subscription for missions, going eighty-two dollars above amount reported from the work last year. A goodly number promised to lead a higher and holier life. We hope to do this people good in all the ways of the gospel. Very faithfully,

W. J. Ferguson.

LORMAN, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We had a nice Children's Day at Cane Ridge on Sunday, the twenty-third of June. A nice programme well prepared. The children did splendidly. I am sure everyone enjoyed it very much. The committee, consisting of Misses Anna Jones, Belle Till, and Sallie Miller, deserves and certainly have the appreciation of the church and community for their untiring efforts to prepare and execute such a nice programme. The collection was $8 60. We also had on the third Sunday in June two sermons and dinner on the ground at Bell Grove; took a Children's Day collection, getting $5. Well done for Bell Grove. God bless all the Sunday-schools and Sunday-school workers.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.

Last night our District Conference at this place came to an end. The session throughout was most delightful, and of much benefit, doubtless, to the church and people of Leesville, who so elegantly entertained us. Some of the preachers were missing because of sickness. The preaching was all up to the high itinerant mark of practical eloquence and power. Five brethren were licensed to preach, one recommended for admission on trial, and two for ordination as deacons. The reports of preachers showed the district to be in good shape, many precious souls having been converted, the church members at many points revived, and the finances generally well up. With the Rev. J. M. Brown, Colin McCutchen and Wadley, and Rev. H. H. Abreus, of New Orleans, we were very pleasantly quartered at Hotel Vernon, where Brother and Sister John F. Smart cared for us in royal style. Secretary Evans and Pastor Alford will, I suppose, send the Advocate all the details of the Conference. John T. Sawyer.

Jamestown, Virginia, where the English gained their first foothold in the New World in 1607, was burned in 1676. To-day nobody lives there. HALF A MAN.

When a man is sick and can only work half the time he is practically half a man. It requires his whole physical energy to do half a man's work.

In general the weak run down condition which prevents the stretch of and energy in built is due to disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. You could not expect a half starved man to work more than half the time. The condition of the man with weak stomach is that of the half starved man. He is weak through lack of nutrition.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the perfect nutrition of the body and so restores the strength.

"I had stomach trouble from birth," writes Mr. Willis Seaman, of Washingtonville, Orange Co., N. Y., "and suffered with it more or less as I grew up. At the age of 25 I was broken down with dyspepsia. My suffering was terrible. Could not eat without distress. Could only eat a few certain things and was not able to work half the time. Every thing I tried only gave me temporary relief. My wife finally persuaded me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' I took six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. I then felt so well that I stopped taking medicine. Several months have passed and I can do the hardest kind of work, can eat anything that is set before me and enjoy it. I am 27 years old and this is the first time I have ever been well."

Will Open (D. V.) on Wednesday, July 10, Next, and Continue for 9 or 10 Days.

The Grounds are opened April 1, and closed Nov. 1, for occupying cottages and reception of visitors. Modern and ample accommodation have been provided for the multitudes that annually visit this refreshing and delightfully cool and bracing place of rest, free from malaria and contagious diseases.

The sea bathing is unsurpassed by any resort on the Mississippi Sound, while the supply of pure, sparkling drinking water is furnished by one of the finest artesian wells, whose waters possess rare virtues.

The exhilarating sea breezes refresh the fatigued, and act as a tonic to the debilitated visitors from our smoke-envoloped and dust-stifling cities and towns. Boats for sailing and fishing always on hand. The drives along the seashore present magnificent views, and are over ten miles in length. Visitors are not expected to arrive or depart on the Sabbath day.

The L. and N. R. R. Company will place on sale the reduced rate of fare during the season, from all points on their lines, and secure a corresponding rate from all connecting lines. Tickets will be placed on sale July 7 to 21, inclusive, and be good to return on until Aug. 31. Two daily mail trains stop at the camp grounds, besides the accommodation and excursion trains, during the entire Summer season. A fine hotel with a frontage of 175 feet, equipped with electric lights and all modern conveniences, has been erected.

All itinerant preachers of the Southern Methodist Church will be admitted into the grounds and provided with lodging accommodations in Wesley Hall free of charge.

The usual entrance fee will be in force this season. No charge will be exacted for entrance on the Sunday of the camp meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to attend the camp meeting and spend a while on the camp ground.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before and during camp meeting, or rent cottages for the season, will please communicate with W. L. Via, superintendent Camp Ground (Biloxi, P. O. 42, Miss.) or any of the following officers:

A NEW OFFER.

We will send the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for one year to all new subscribers, and to all who will renew, and the new missionary book, proceedings of the late great Missionary Conference at New Orleans, for TWO DOLLARS AND FIFTY CENTS—cash to accompany the order.

Dr. Rankin, of the Texas Advocate, says: "At the recent commencement at Emory College, Georgia, the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. Thomas R. Pierce, of the North Texas Conference." But Mr. L. D. Palmer, in a letter to the Wesleyan Advocate, says: "The trustees conferred the degree of D. D. on Rev. Thos. F. Pierce, of the North Georgia Conference, only living brother of the Bishop." Brother Palmer is a member of the Board of Trustees, and was present. Did Emory confer the degree on both the preachers named?

Pedantry is hardly justifiable in any sort of an address before an audience made up of all classes of people; least of all is it to be tolerated in a preacher who is sent to declare the gospel. Souls hungry for the truth care nothing for a display of learning. It will vitiate the gospel every time. Even when great learning is demanded, the true preacher will not make his message of none effect by a show of wisdom. When St. Paul went to Corinth, he went in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling; his speech and his preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that the faith of his converts "should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." St. Paul was a fine model.

We once knew two good men, members of the same communion, who entertained vastly different ideas as to what constituted the most important service of the church. One thought it was the Sunday-school; the other thought it was the prayer meeting. Everything was guaged accordingly. Each knew but little of the other's hobby, because one never attended the Sunday-school, and the other never attended the prayer meeting. These brethren were not as efficient in the church as they might have been had they given both these arms of service the consideration they deserve. One man may be better fitted to work in one place than in another, but no man is justified in withholding his influence from any institution of the church.

PRACTICAL RELIGION.

Christ's religion finds its best expression in doing good: in giving rather than receiving. In this respect the servant is like the Master, who "went about doing good" both to the souls and bodies of men. Jesus never neglected an opportunity, nor denied any suffering one a needed blessing. His disciples not only embraced his teachings, but imbibed his spirit, and on all proper occasions gave evidence of the genuineness of their discipleship.

We may well doubt, if not the sincerity of a man's profession, at least the genuineness of his conversion, if, in his daily life, he fails to perform the duties of a Christian. St. John justifies us in this statement, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren;" not a love that merely expresses itself in word, "but in deed and in truth." What St. John means he explains by saying, "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" This spirit of sacrifice and unselfishness characterized our Lord, who "laid down his life for us." If we would fully imitate his example, we should, as occasion requires, "lay down our lives for the brethren."

Men are not often called to die for each other—that is, to suffer death in the stead of another: and we do not think that St. John had this in mind, but that he intended to impress the church with the duty of self-sacrifice in behalf of the brethren, even to the risk of life. We know that Christian duty often calls men into places of great danger, as, for example, in the time of epidemics, when to expose oneself is to run the risk of losing life. He that exposes himself for the sake of his brethren "lays down his life," and thus fulfills the command of his Lord.

But what we mean by practical religion is the doing of the every-day, commonplace things enjoined in the Holy Scriptures. In general terms these duties are set forth in St. Paul's instructions to Timothy: "Charge them that are rich in this world that . . . they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." In general terms also Christians are exhorted to "offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually—that is, the fruit of their lips, giving thanks to his name." Lest, however, good works be neglected, the same writer adds, "But to do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

St. James is more specific. He says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Nobody can misapprehend such language. Nor can our Savior be misunderstood when he teaches that a man who fails to feed the hungry, or to give water to the thirsty, or to entertain strangers, or to clothe the naked, or to visit the sick and those that are in prison, has no place in the kingdom of heaven. One so far forgetful of his fellow-men is just to that extent indifferent to the interests of his Lord. Jesus will say to such in the last day, "Ye did it not to me."

The finest exemplification of practical religion on record is found in the parable of the Good Samaritan. That parable teaches that every man in distress, and who needs mercy, is neighbor to every man who is able to lend him a helping hand. This neighborly instinct may dwell in a heart to some extent that is not renewed by grace, but if it is lacking in one who professes to be saved, and he declines to act the part of a neighbor, he gives the lie to his profession. The lawyer to whom this parable was addressed could not fail to see that the despised Samaritan acted the merciful part rather than the priest and Levite, whose business it was, as God's ministers, to do good to all men. Our Lord had no reproof for the bigoted lawyer, but when he saw that his purpose was effected, he simply said, "Go, and do thou likewise."

In this day the danger is in practicing religious duties at the expense of experience. This is fatal—as much so as to profess the experience, and repudiate and decline to practice religious duties. The two must go together. "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

"POISON IN THE METHODIST PAN."

Were we persuaded that our Methodism is as corrupt, or contained as many forms of corruption and as many corrupt members as some few people seem to think, we would be strongly tempted to look around for a better church. But so long as we feel sure that the cry of "corruption," "departure from original principles," and other ugly things laid at the door of the church, proceeds from uninformed men, and men of distorted views, we propose to keep our eyes steadily fixed on our own communion, and do our best to help her win the world to Christ.

A little leaflet in our hand informs us that there is "poison in the Methodist Pan," and that in consequence the body is largely paralyzed. A reader need not look into this leaflet to learn its spirit, and the character of its contents. It is quite sufficient for him to know that it hails from an establishment characterizing itself as "God's Publishing House." Such an assumption is little short of blasphemy. And this author essays the part of a great reformer!

No less than nine different forms of poison are named as having been introduced into the "Methodist Pan," any one of which, if thoroughly absorbed by the body, is sufficient to work its ruin. Among them are found "Carnal culture," "complicity with the liquor traffic," "hypocrisy," and "the poison of obtaining members, ministers, and money under false pretenses." All these things are labeled "poison," and the manner of showing how these elements are doing mischief indicate that the writer does not believe that they have been secretly and unconsciously injected into the life-blood of the church, but that the church has knowingly and willfully swallowed them.

A writer who can thus recklessly charge his church, or any evangelical church, with such crimes is obliged to be lacking in ability to distinguish between the shortcomings and sins of individuals and the sanction and authority of the church, else he occupies the unenviable position of the Pharisee who stood ready to condemn all men except those of his own sect. That there are individuals in the church guilty of wrong—flagrant wrong—will not be denied. But that the church condones these wrongs is not true. It is far less true that the church sanctions these wrongs, or bids her members indulge them. We are sorry that every professing Christian is not consistent, and upright in heart, but, as Bishop Keener said recently: "A pot of ointment is a pot of ointment, notwithstanding it may have a fly in it, or several of them;" so we say the church is the church, and dear to God as the apple of his eye, though it may have now and then a false member. In due time they will be cast out. As for the Pharisees, it is too late for them to sound trumpets before them, to disfigure their faces, or to make broad their phylacteries. These things are no longer accepted as tokens of piety. And when a man puts on these airs, and adds to them a complaining and fault-finding disposition, and caps all by libelling the church of God, he is sure to be classed as an unsafe teacher and leader.

It is painful to allude to these things, but it is sometimes necessary. There is danger in two directions—danger of inoculating young Christians with false notions of spiritual life, and leading them into the self same complaining and fault-finding disposition. And there is danger of driving others entirely away from the church, and causing them to lose all respect for religion. Men who are overmuch righteous, and whose godliness has become sour, are not the best exemplars and exponents of our holy religion. They are too apt to make their own opinions the standard of truth for others, and their own manner of life the pattern for others to follow. However honest such men may be, they are extremists, and unsafe guides.

THE SYSTEM OF DOCTRINE.

At the late General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (Northern) the demand for a change of some kind in the creed was evidently very strong. A committee was appointed to report at the next meeting. Revision, restatement, or explanatory notes, will be the outcome. There are a few Presbyterians who would eliminate the ultra-Calvinism from the Confession of Faith, but the majority are for conservative action. The controversy goes on, and is likely to agitate the church more or less until the matter is settled. Some of the brethren are rather free in their utterances—in fact, they are outspoken. A writer in the New York Evangelist, of June 27, in discussing the System of Doctrine, uses the following language:

For one I feel that I must free my own soul by declaring in the most positive manner that I do not believe that the system of doctrine of the Westminster Confession is the system of doctrine taught in the Scriptures. I receive and accept another system that is as different from that as one could well be—the system of doctrine of the parable of the Prodigal Son, of the parable of the Good Samaritan, of the parable of the Talents, and of the Sermon on the Mount. I receive that system with my whole heart and soul, mind and strength. And I solemnly declare that this is the system of doctrine taught in the Presbyterian Church at this hour by all the really living men of the church; that the people receive and love no other; that they would have patience with no other, preached to them from Presbyterian pulpits.

So long as prominent men in the church entertain sentiments utterly at variance with the doctrine of the Confession, there will be agitation. And presuming that they are honest, unless they succeed in effecting a revision, we do not see how they can hold their place in the church; or, if they are in any considerable numbers, how a disruption can be avoided.

We do not know how generally the desire for revision or restatement prevails, but we feel sure that the writer above quoted is wrong when he says that all the really living men of the church preach no other doctrine than that contained in the system outlined by him, and that the people would have patience with no other preached from Presbyterian pulpits. That there are many preachers who honestly accept the Confession as it is, we believe. That there are multitudes of old-fashioned "Blue-stocking Presbyterians", in the pews, we do not doubt. That they accept occasionally a doctrinal discourse as joyfully as did the Israelites the old corn of Canaan, we have reason to believe. The stronger it is seasoned with Calvinism, the better some of them relish it. Hundreds and thousands of them, are not going to give it up without a struggle.

THE EPWORTH ERA.

The brethren who think the Epworth Era should be discontinued because it does not pay expenses, must revise their opinion, if that is the only objection they have to the paper. As a matter of fact, the income of the Era is sufficient to pay its way, but not sufficient to pay the salary of the Epworth League Secretary, his assistant, and other expenses necessary to carry on the League work. Editing the Epworth Era is but a small part of the Secretary's duty, and it is unfair to charge all the expenses of the office to the Era, and demand the discontinuance of the paper, because its income is not sufficient to meet all the expenses of the League department.

The salary of the Secretary and all other expenses of the office would have to be paid even were the Era not in existence. Now that it is no longer a burden to the Publishing House, but paying its way, it ought to be not only continued, but so heartily sustained as in a little while to make it pay a large revenue. And such would be the case if our people throughout the connection would abandon all the little Epworth papers, and concentrate their patronage on the Era. But so long as patronage is divided between so many sheets representing the League, we can not expect the Era to command the patronage it deserves, and must have, to maintain the League office at Nashville. Until that point is reached, the League must still depend on the general revenue of the Publishing House to keep it up. We have no idea of abandoning the League, no matter what it costs. But let us cease to obstruct the course of the Era by charging to it all the expense of the League department.

HARD TO LEARN.

The editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate seems to be much concerned, and earnestly enquires, "When will Bishops Galloway and Candler learn that the human system can not bear incessant strain of mind and body?" They are already aware of that fact, my brother; but whether they are intent on committing suicide, or showing a short-sighted and penurious class of Methodists that they are capable of earning their yearly salary, we undertake not to say. It may be that another class of Methodists, who want the best service obtainable at the least cost, are responsible for the over-strain of these servants of the church. To those who know the vast amount of work our Bishops do, even when in the quietness of their homes, it is hard to see them ground to death between the upper and the nether mill-stones. We have plenty of Bishop timber growing, but we do not care to see much of it used in the "Great Iron Wheel" yet awhile.

We acknowledge an invitation and complimentary ticket to the Louisiana Chautauqua, at Ruston, La., now in session. The programme is attractive, and will, doubtless, prove interesting and instructive. For further information address C. E. Byrd, general manager, Ruston, La.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

We have received the announcement of the third annual Tri-State Epworth League Conference, which will begin its session on Wednesday, July 31, at 11 A. M., and close on Friday night, August 9, 1901, on Seashore Camp Ground, near Biloxi, Miss. This Conference is composed of representatives of the Epworth League from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The promoters of the enterprise say that "the idea of a Summer School or Training Conference has been so well received, and such enthusiastic interest taken in the ones held previously, that a permanent organization has been effected for the purpose of continuing these gatherings. It is hoped that many Leaguers will take advantage of the opportunity to attend, and also visit this delightful seaside resort."

Though primarily designed for Epworth Leaguers, yet members of all young people's societies are invited to attend, and will receive a cordial welcome. They will also be granted all the privileges of the Conference. For information address Rev. Geo. D. Parker, Station B, New Orleans.

PERSONAL.

Prof. Northcutt, of the chair of Mathematics, and Prof. Linfield, of the chair of Latin, Centenary College, are spending the vacation at Chicago University.

Prof. John C. Roberts, of the chair of English, Centenary College, has charge of the department of history and literature at Louisiana Chautauqua, Ruston, La.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference, was in the city a few days last week. We had the pleasure of a short conversation with him in our office.

Dr. Urquhart, editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate, has been in ill health for a week or two past, but he is recovering, and hopes soon to resume his work. May his restoration to health be speedy and permanent!

Rev. J. H. Williams, pastor of our church at Slidell, reports a pleasant state of affairs in his charge, and prospects for success are encouraging. Brother Williams is a young man, a local preacher, serving Slidell as a supply.

We thank Rev. W. L. Anderson for an invitation to attend the dedication of the new church at Maryland, Miss., which interesting service was appointed for Sunday, July 7. The presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, preached the sermon.

Rev. A. D. Miller and wife, of Lorman, Miss., and Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, with his two daughter, Misses Wilmoth and Mabel, passed through the city this week en route to the Seashore Camp Meeting. They brightened the ADVOCATE office with their presence for a little while.

The Water Valley Itemizer speaks in the highest terms of the sermon preached at Wood Street, on June 30, by Rev. W. S. Harrison, superintendent of our Orphans' Home. It has been a long time since Brother Harrison preached any other kind of a sermon than one "full of thought and highly edifying." He did that in 1870, when he put Water Valley among the first of North Mississippi churches.

The catalogue of Centenary College, Jackson, La., is a finely printed pamphlet of seventy pages, giving all necessary information concerning this old and well-established school of our church in Louisiana. The college is under the management of an able and experienced faculty, and the Board of Trustees is headed by Bishop Keener. The year just ended was one of great success. The prospects are bright. For further information address Prof. J. M. Sullivan, secretary, Jackson, La.

Poplarville High School, under the management of Prof. W. I. Thames, has just closed its ninth session. This school is in a flourishing condition, with a general enrollment of over three hundred pupils. It is, what its name indicates, a high school, not a college. It prepares boys and girls for college. The school is located in South Mississippi, among the sand hills, 460 feet above sea level, and in a fine community. Parents and guardians seeking a fitting school would do well to confer with the principal, Poplarville, Miss.

Baton Rouge District Conference.

The Baton Rouge District Conference met June 26, 1901, at Amite City, La., with the presiding elder, F. S. Parker, in the chair. H W. Rickey was elected secretary. There were present nineteen itinerant preachers, eight local preachers, twenty-eight delegates, and thirty visitors Among the latter were Drs. LaPrade, A. F. Watkins, and John W. Boswell.

The following persons passed approved examinations, and were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial: E. C. Bott, W. D. Kleinschmidt, Hamilton E. Carter, John D Nesom, A. K. Holcombe, W. L. Denham, and Jno. E. Methvin.

The lay delegates selected to the Annual Conference are: W. S. Holmes, W. L. Tillery, I. D. Wall, J. W. McQueen; alternates: W. T. Holland and Newton Felder.

The Board of Trustees of the Denham Springs Camp Meeting as elected are: B Duke, F. E. Hill, J. L. Underwood, P. R. Erwin, F. W. Smith, W. J. Phares, J. B. Dunn, O. A. Bullion, and R. H. Benton.

The Committee on Sale of District Parsonage Property are: I. D. Wall, W. S. Holmes, and H. B. Carre.

The Committee on the District Circulating Library are: F. S. Parker, J. I. Hoffpanir, M. F. Johnson, and H. W. Rickey.

A permanent Committee on Missions and Missionary Canvass to be appointed by the chair.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS AND MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN.

Your committee begs leave to report as follows: Rev. A. J. Coburn has been appointed to secure subscriptions to the General Proceedings of the Missionary Conference, which we most urgently recommend to all who are able to procure it. The price of subscription thereto is one dollar. (Fifteen subscribers were secured.)

We call attention to the new monthly paper of sixteen pages of the General Board of Missions, entitled "Go Forward," which will be sent at the low price of twenty-five cents per year. H. B. Carre was appointed to solicit subscriptions for it. (Twenty-eight subscribers obtained.)

We request that a portion of the District Circulating Library being collected by the presiding elder consist of books on missions.

The committee notes with pleasure the hearty sympathy in the cause of missions manifest in the reports from the charges. It seems a greater number of sermons have been preached on the district than during the preceding year. Some of the preachers have taken their collections in full for missions already. Echoes from the Missionary Conference in New Orleans have resounded throughout the district.

The committee beg leave to offer the following resolutions:

1. That the third Sunday in October be observed as the "District Rally Day" for missions in our respective charges, and that the special programme prepared by the Board of Missions be used on that occasion.

2 That the Missionary Campaign be under the control of the presiding elder and a District Missionary Committee, who shall arrange a Missionary Rally service in each charge, arranging, as far as possible, the speakers for the occasion. We would respectfully commend the extensive circulation of Go Forward as an aid to said campaign.

3. That the presiding elder be requested to establish a preaching appointment at the town of Norwood, on the Y. and M. V. R. R, using the pastor of Jackson charge for this work.

We suggest the following memorials to the Annual Conference:

1. That a mission be organized as the Pearl River, extending from ———, on the north, to ———, on the south.

2. That the parish of West Baton Rouge, now practically ignored, be occupied as missionary territory.

3. That a monthly appointment for preaching be provided for at the union church at Burnside, on the Y. and M. V. R. R., whose members have already asked for such an appointment, and that the thriving lumber town of Lutcher be occupied as an appointment. We recommend further that Meadow's Chapel appointment be removed from Port Vincent circuit, and, along with New River appointment, be served as monthly appointments by the preacher in charge at Burnside and Lutcher. The committee estimates that the above-named appointments will pay as follows: Meadow's Chapel, already assessed, $85; New River, estimated at $35; Burnside, estimated at $155; Lutcher, estimated at $50; total, $325.

Respectfully submitted.

COMMITTEE ON REVIVALS AND CAMP MEETINGS.

Your committee notes with joy the recognition of the need of a revival, and a yearning for the same, nearly universal. This is essential to a genuine work of grace. A tree may have beautiful foliage and fragrant flowers, yet its valuation must rest on the fruit it bears. We fear that if the Master should come to many of our revivals, he would find nothing but leaves. Your committee is impressed that some of the fruits which will follow a revival such as we need are: Reconciliation, restitution, family altars, increased churchgoing, a vitalizing of the Sunday-school and prayer meeting, and an intelligent interest on the part of the people in the great movement of the church. Such a revival can not be brought about by a haphazard scramble, but by well-defined and heaven-suggested plans. Whilst the committee rejoices in the evangelist's revival at Baton Rouge, we urge that the very best agents for the promotion of the revival such as this district needs are the preachers themselves. That which is best justified by its results is the calling of neighboring pastors. We suggest the pastors hold themselves in readiness to help and be helped. It would be wise to reach out after overlooked spots, and take them in as preaching territory, under guidance of the presiding elder.

A great deal of our revival work comes to naught because of a failure to instruct our new converts in their new-found obligations in the doctrine and discipline of the church. We urge, therefore, that no member be received into the church until the pastor has been thoroughly convinced of his faith, and given him a careful course of instruction in the doctrines and discipline of our church.

We have carefully considered the question of camp meetings. Our committee believes it would be a failure to give honor to whom honor is due, if we forbore to express our gratitude to the presiding elder for his Herculean efforts to make the camp meetings a success. We are persuaded the wholesome results of those meetings were due, mainly, to his wise and spiritual leadership.

No legislation bears upon their control. They are without legal restrictions—a fact which has given rise to great hurt to the church. There is a disposition on the part of the preachers, in isolated cases, to discourage camp meetings; to assume such an attitude towards them as will lead finally to their discontinuance. They fill a place in our economy unique in themselves; they are supported by our laymen at a great sacrifice, inspired by a real desire to save men. We complain of a lack of attendance on our churches; yet these camp meetings draw great crowds, who give at least a respectful hearing to the Word. To turn away from these open doors would argue a lack of zeal for the redemption of men on the part of our ministry.

Where a charter records the fact of ecclesiastic relation to the church, the control of the pulpit by easy inference is within Paragraph 119. We recommend, if possible the extant deeds be so amended as to include the trust clause of Paragraph 119.

In regard to the Denham Springs property, we recommend that our preachers refuse to attend and preach unless assured pulpit control will be lodged in the hands of presiding elder and preacher-in-charge; that no gate fees will be charged on Sunday, no selling of refreshments on Sunday.

We recommend that Friday before the third Sunday in July be strictly observed as a day of fasting and prayer for a revival.

We further recommend that the protracted and camp meetings be not closed, unless a sermon on foreign missions has been preached.

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—easy, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

Good Board at Centenary College for $8.75 per Scholastic Month.

This includes room-cleaning. The terms are cash at beginning of each scholastic month. Fair treatment, plain dealing, and no discriminations. Read the following, and be sure to write the Manager for any information you desire:

An interesting feature of Centenary College is its boarding department known as Pharr Hall. This department is under the management and personal supervision of Prof. L. L. Upton, who, assisted by Mrs. Upton, endeavors to make the "Hall" and dormitories pleasant and home-like. Those who board at the "Hall" may be sure that they will have all needful attention, both in health and sickness.

Parents need not have any apprehension about boarding their sons at the "Hall," the arrangements being such as to obviate the trouble commonly attendant upon dormitory boarding. A Professor rooming in each wing, coupled with the fact that nearly the entire Faculty live on the campus and college grounds, is a sufficient guarantee of proper environment and protection. As an indication of satisfaction and appreciation the following was written by one of the young men of the "Hall," and signed by every boarder:

"We, the undersigned students of Centenary College, have taken our meals for the last year in the 'Hall' conducted by Prof. L. L Upton, and take pleasure in recommending it as being well conducted. Everything is wholesome and well prepared, and better than we could have expected for the money."

You will be welcomed at the "Hall." Come!

LOOK OUT!

Many a man is looking out for his health, but looking for disease in the wrong direction. He takes medicine for his nerves, which seem "gone to pieces." He "doctors" for his heart, which is acting irregularly. He constantly stirs up his liver with pills and powder. But he does not get any better. He is looking for the cause of his complaints in the wrong direction.

It is a common thing for some one who has used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for "stomach trouble" to find that when the diseased stomach is cured the "weak" heart is made sound, the sluggish liver stimulated, and the throbbing nerves tranquilized. This fact alone suggests the truth which every leading medical scientist knows and recognizes—that diseases which seem remote from the stomach are often caused by the disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. When the diseased stomach and the digestive and nutritive system are cured of disease, the other organs are cured with them.

Food is the basis of life and of strength. But it is not the quantity of food eaten which supports the life and health of the body. The body is sustained by that portion of the food which after being eaten is converted into nourishment and properly assimilated. When the stomach and its allied organs of digestion and nutrition are diseased or "weak," only part of the food eaten is converted into nutrition, and the body and its organs are therefore only partly nourished. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures the diseases of the stomach and digestive and nutritive system which prevent the proper nourishment of the body. In that way the body is once more strengthened in the only way possible, by food properly digested and perfectly assimilated.

Any person suffering from disease in chronic or aggravated form, is invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence strictly private and confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." The main motive of substitution is the desire of the dealer to make a little more profit out of you by selling you a less meritorious medicine.

ABLE TO WORK AGAIN.

Mr. John L. Coughenour, of Glensavage, Somerset Co., Penna., writes: "I had been doctoring for about a year and a half, being unable to work most of the time. The doctor said I had heart disease and indigestion. It began with a choking and oppressed feeling in the chest; later on I was troubled with a hungry feeling, and I seemed to be raw from my throat clear down into my stomach. My appetite was unusually poor, I was weak and nervous, and my heart kept throbbing continually, and I was short of breath. Finally I wrote to you for advice. I did not think your diagnosis was right, but I ordered six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and began its use. After using three bottles I began to improve slowly and soon went to work, and I have been working ever since."

"SUFFERED ALL THE TIME."

"I feel that I would be doing an injustice to you if I did not send you a statement of my case," writes Mrs. David W. Gulee, of Hamburg, Franklin Co., Miss. "I had liver complaint and indigestion. Everything that I ate disagreed with me. I suffered all the time with swimming in my head; heart beat too fast; my feet and hands were cold all the time. Did not sleep well at all. Was able to get about but very little. I commenced to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets' in May, 1897, and by December I could begin to get about very well. Have been doing my work ever since except washing. Feel better than I have for several years. I would recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all who are troubled as I was. I am now sixty-one years old and I thank you most kindly for the happy relief and cure."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets assist the action of the "Discovery" and should be used with it when a laxative is needed.

A MANLY BOY.

It was a crowded railway station, and a raw December day. Every few minutes the street cars emptied their loads at the door, and gusts of cold wind came in with the crowd. All hurried as they entered. All were laden with bag, basket, box, or bundle. Shivering groups stood about the great round stove in the center of the room. A small boy called, "Tillygram and broken needle," which last meant the "Brooklyn Eagle." Another boy shouted, "Cough candy and lozenges, five cents a paper."

Every five minutes a stream of people flowed out through a door, near which a young man stood and yelled, "Rapid transit for East New York!"

The gate was kept open but a moment, and closed again when enough persons had passed through to fill the two cars upon each train. Those so unfortunate as to be farthest from the door must wait until next time. Among those unfortunate ones was an old Swedish woman, in the heavy shoes and short frock of her native Northland. She had heavy bundles, and, though she had a place so near the door that many pushed against her, could not seem to get out. Her burden was too heavy for her to hold as she stood, and when the rush came and she seized one package from the floor by her side, she dropped the other, and, in trying to get it, some one crowded and pushed her aside. The bundle was in the way; an impatient foot kicked it beyond her reach, and before she could recover it again the door was shut. The kind old face looked pitifully troubled.

Suddenly, as she bowed her old gray head to lift the abused bundle from the floor, a bright, boyish face came between her and her treasure, and a pair of strong young hands lifted it to her arms. Surprise and delight struggled in the old, wrinkled countenance, and a loud laugh came from two boys whose faces were pressed against the window outside the gate.

"See there, Harry; see Fred, that's what he dashed back for!"

"No; you don't say so! I thought he went for peanuts."

"No, not for peanuts or popcorn, but to pick up an old woman's bundle. Isn't he a goose?"

"Yes; what business has she to be right in the way with her budget? I gave it a good kick."

"Here comes the train. Shall we wait for him, Harry?" And they pounded the window, and motioned for Fred to come out.

But he shook his head, and nodded toward the little old woman at his side. He had her bundles, and her face had lost its anxious look, and was as placid as the round face of a holiday Dutch doll.

"Never mind, boys; off with you; I'm going to see her through."

And they went. And Harry repeated to Dick, as they seated themselves in the train, "Isn't he a goose?"

"No," was the indignant answer; "he's a man, and I know another fellow who's a goose, and that's me, and Fred makes me ashamed of myself."

"Pooh! you didn't mean anything. You only gave it a push."

"I know it; but I feel as mean as if Fred had caught me picking her pocket."

The train whirled away. The next one came. "Rapid transit for East New York; all aboard!" shouted the man at the door.

The gate was open. There was another rush. In the crowd was an old Swedish woman, but by her side was Fred Monroe. He carried the heavy burden; he put his lithe young figure between her and the press. With the same air he would have shown to his own mother, he "saw her through." And when the gate shut I turned to my book with grateful warmth at my heart that, amid much that is rude, chivalry still lives as the crowning charm of a manly boy.—Silver Cross.

THE WORK THAT IS NEVER DONE.

"If things would only stay done—if I could look back over the day and see one thing accomplished that will not have to be done over again to-morrow, I should not get so tired of it or feel so discouraged!"

How many millions of wives and mothers have made some such comment as this on the monotony of household tasks! says the Youth's Companion. It is not alone the deadly sameness, the constant repetition of little duties; it is even more the feeling of utility, the apparent failure to accomplish any enduring results. The bread that was baked this morning will be gone to-morrow. The dishes are washed and put away only to be used and washed again. The linen fresh from the ironing-table will be back in the laundry by the end of the week. The rooms swept clean the other day already need sweeping again. The children call for endless sympathy and attention.

A man's work may be ever so hard; it is less often clouded by this sense of unproductiveness. It usually brings a definite reward in the feeling of something accomplished, some tangible result achieved. The architect points to the finished building, and says, "I designed it." The carpenter and the mason who see the structure growing under their hands know that it will stand for years, an unimpeachable witness to their industry and faithfulness.

But the things which are tangible are not always those which are most real or most useful. There are other noble works besides fine buildings. The young man who goes out into the world healthy and clean-minded, strong in principles which he acquired at home, and firm in the belief that there is no other woman in the world quite so good as his mother—he is a nobler work even than a Parthenon or a Taj Mahal. And the daughter who has grown to womanhood with a pure heart, and hands trained to perpetnate in a new home the deeds of usefulness and comfort learned in the old—is she less to the world than brick and marble?

"Do not think that nothing is happening because you do not see yourself grow or hear the whir of the machinery," says Henry Drummond. "All great things grow noiselessly. You can see a mushroom grow, but never a child."—Exchange.

STORY OF THE DANDELION.

Once upon a time, in a tiny green camp by the roadside, lived a soldier all alone. He had traveled a long way from a dark underground country, bent on seeing the world. The first thing he saw was a broad field, full of waving banners, and he thought, "What a beautiful place I have discovered!" and pitched his tent among the green grasses.

The raindrop fives saw, how tired and dirty he was from his long journeys northward, and soothed him with stories and refreshed him with a shower bath. Through the clouds came the sunbeam fairies, bringing him a handsome uniform of green and gold and a quiver of golden arrows. Then the soldier was very happy and smiled out at passers-by, cheering many a weary traveler with a glimpse of his sunny face.

By and by Spring went away over the hilltops, the birds that finished building their nests, and the butterflies and grasshoppers came to herald Summer. Then the soldier began to feel tired and knew he was growing old. His gay uniform had faded and the golden arrows had turned to silver, and the wind brownies shot them far away. So the soldier crept down among the green grasses and his little camp was left empty. Everywhere his silver arrows fell there blossomed bright golden flowers—"dandelions," children called them.—Exchange.

SPIDER SILK INDUSTRY.

The spider—the common, ugly spider—promises to provide riches that will compete with the silkworm in the markets of the world. He—or she, for it is she—is indigenous to the island of Madagascar, and is called "Halabe." Magalash women bring the spiders in baskets to the school that has recently been established in the island, and the work of removing the silk is a delicate operation performed by deft fingers of Magalash girls. The silk of the Halabes is like a thread of gold, such a pure, brilliant yellow is it. No attempt has yet been made either to wash or dye the threads, as is done in the course of silk manufacture. The fabric made from the spider's silk promises to make a time-defying fabric such as never yet has been created. There is, however, a great obstacle to be overcome before the spider-silk industry can be said to be one of the successful enterprises of the world. It seems that only the female spider supplies the silk, and she is so ferocious that she eats up the male on every occasion when she can have access to him. However, science still lives in hopes that there may be found for this voracious female a food that will be more satisfying than dining on her long-suffering mate, in which case he may live out his day in less danger than at present, and the entire family be liberated from the doom of total extermination.—Selected.

THE FORWARD LOOK.

"I feel just like sitting down and having a good cry over myself," said a young girl recently, to an older friend. "It seems as if I couldn't be what I ought to be. I have so many faults, and they don't get any better. I hate myself! I am sick of myself!"

"Then, why in the world, Ethel, don't you get away from yourself?" asked her friend. "If you believe in the religion of Christ, why do you cling to the religion of self?"

"Why, that's exactly what I don't want—the religion of self," cried Ethel, indignantly. "I want to be unselfish. You don't understand."

"Yes, I do," said her companion, smiling. "I've been there myself and that is how I know about it. I used to keep looking at myself, and fretting over myself, until I woke up one day to realize that so long as my religion centered in the spiritual power of my own personality, it could never be anything but a caricature. My dear child, suppose, when a seed was planted in the ground, it should keep on saying to itself: 'How small I am, and how unable I am to lift the earth that presses on me! I have no leaves, no stem, no root, as yet. I have no strength. I am not growing. I can't grow. I never shall grow.' Do you think it would be a promising seed if it had such ideas? Don't you see that the proper thing for a seed to say, as it lies in the ground, is: 'I must reach the light. I know it is up there, and I must push toward it. Even if I die, I must get to the sunlight!' Then it thinks no more of its life; it thinks only of the sun; and the sun smiles upon its first green leaves, and then on its growing stem, and after awhile upon blossom and fruit. The way to grow is to grow toward the sun. Even a plant in a cellar knows that, and sends out long shoots toward the light. Don't you see what I mean?"

Ethel nodded assent with the light of a new idea in her face. "Go on," said she.

"But that's just what I want you to do," said the older woman, "to go on. Look forward, look ahead. Look out for others and help them. Look anywhere, everywhere, except backward or at yourself. Then you'll grow, because you can't help it. You will be in the sunlight of God's smile, in the atmosphere of his will, and flower and fruit will come in His chosen time."

Was she not right? Is there any other way to grow? Is there anything more hindering to growth than to be shut in to self?—Mary Whiting Adams, in Well-spring.

"Unitarians and the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst take the longest annual vacations, and the extreme Protestant evangelists and the High Church Episcopalians the shortest," writes a New Yorker who has investigated the subject. "It happens almost every year that from the end of June to the beginning of October, a period of three months, every Unitarian Church in Manhattan and Brooklyn is closed, and as for the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, he sails for Switzerland about the time the frogs peep, and gets back just before the snow flies. On the other hand, some men never take any vacations. They say they have too much to do, and they think they can do it as well without resting."—Exchange.

WILLIAM HARRIS MOUNGER, son of Judge Henry Monnger and Celie Millsaps, was born in Jasper county, Miss., Jan 31, 1843. He was educated at excellent home schools and at Gathright's Academy, in Noxubee county. When seventeen years of age he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and served faithfully and bravely through the whole war, being in several of the great battles of that tremendous conflict, as Murfreesboro and Chickamauga. Captured in one of the later engagements of the war, he spent several months in Camp Douglass at Chicago. No soldier returned home with a fairer record for fidelity and heroism and purity of character than he. He came back to a home which had been saddened by the death in battle of two of his brothers, who had enlisted in the same cause. Afterward his life was spent mainly in Jasper county, where he was twice elected to the office of sheriff. He was a man of deep, solid convictions, and always acted from the highest sense of honor. Truth, justice and right were the landmarks that guided him in all his speech and conduct. Every opinion was held, every word spoken, and every step taken with the utmost conscientiousness. He was possessed of an acute and analytical mind, which was cultured and expanded by extensive reading, and which moved habitually in the highest and best regions of thought. He had a fine personality, engaging manners, and a substantial character, which attracted to him through life a large circle of devoted friends. Brought up in a religious home, he became, when only a boy, a member of the church. His life always after was consistent with the vows which he then assumed. In his last illness his trust in the Savior was calm and firm, and the way before him was clear. He was twice married; first to Miss Melissa Terrell, daughter of Rev. James S. Terrell, and sister of Judge S. H. Terrell, of the Supreme Bench of Mississippi; afterwards to Miss Lillie Tatum. He died May 10, 1901, at Hudson's Springs, Miss., in the hope of the life to come, and was buried near his old home at Salem Church, in Jasper county, leaving a fair and blessed memory. He had the happiness of having worthy and honored children, who, in turn, rejoice in the example and character of their father.

B. J. JONES.

Crystal Springs, Miss.

SALLIE MAURICE ROBINSON, daughter of Rev. J. F. and Elizabeth J. Robinson, was born in Kemper county, Miss., June 11, 1869, and died at her father's home near Brandon, Miss., June 12, 1901. A true woman and a sweet Christian has gone to reap her reward in that beautiful city where there is no more suffering, pain, or death. I have known Sallie Robinson intimately since she was ten years of age, and have never known a more loveable child or woman. She had many excellent traits of character, naturally; then she became a Christian at the early age of eleven years; was converted and joined the church under the ministry of Rev. John Peterson at Ramsey, Ala. She never deviated from the path of a true Christian. She let her light so shine that all around her felt its influence. She was a faithful Sabbath-school teacher, and gave liberally and conscientiously of her income to all Christian work as well as to other benevolent enterprises. In her home life there was no flaw. Very few Christians have lived so consistent a life, or will wear a brighter crown. Sallie was adopted while very young, and educated by a great-uncle who had no children of his own. She had a strong intellect, and being very studious, learned readily, and graduated with honors at the Columbia (Tenn.) Athenæum. After leaving school she spent most of her time administering to the wants of her uncle in his declining years. No daughter could have been more faithful. He was blind and helpless for five years, and she was his constant companion, anticipating all his wants and attending to all his business. It was mainly through her influence that he became a Christian and died in the faith. Sallie was never strong, and about one year before her death her health gave way entirely. She suffered a great deal, but bore it patiently and died triumphantly. Her work is done, and she is asleep in Jesus, waiting for father, mother, brothers and sisters, and hosts of loved ones, on the other shore.

A. A. JANKINS.

HENRY ARMSTRONG, son of Rev. L. J. and Virginia Joner, was born March 3, 1891, and died June 19, 1901. Little Henry was an attractive child, making friends with all he met. He was obedient and kind to the family, and a good Sunday-school pupil. He was converted and joined the church last August, at Decatur, under the preaching of Bro. Irvin Miller. Henry had a great deal of sickness during his short life, suffering severely, but submitted to all he never forgot to offer pay to the doctor, and invariably call upon the physician to pray with and for him. Soon after he was taken sick he told his mother that he had been sick a great deal, but this would be the last; that he loved them all, but would have to leave them, and go to a better home than this, and that he wanted to be buried at Decatur, for there he joined the church, and there they knew him. On Wednesday morning, about 3:30 o'clock, after recovering from a severe spell, he called his father and requested him to bury him at Decatur; but owing to the space of ground, his parents decided to bury him at Cunnkey, their home. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors." Henry is safe in the arms of Jesus, there to rest for evermore, and join in the chorus of praising God with his two little brothers and two little sisters who had gone before him. Let not your hearts be troubled, fond parents. Your little boy, having gone over Jordan, has only gone over home.

B. W. LEWIS.

MRS. ELIZABETH GANN (nee Franks), relict of Rev. James M. Gann, for many years an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, died at the home of her son, J. M. Gann, near Poplerville, Miss., June 12, 1901, in the eighty-fourth year of her age. Sister Gann was born in Tennessee, Jan. 16, 1818. When but a child she moved with her parents to Marion county, Ala., in which county she was married to J. M. Gann in about 1840. Bro. Gann was for some years a member of the Alabama Conference. In 1866 he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. He died in Poplerville, Miss., Aug. 22, 1891. Here Sister Gann continued to make her home with her youngest son, Mac. Sister Gann was the mother of eleven children, six of whom—four daughters and two sons—survive her. Some years previous to her death she was afflicted and helpless, but submissive and resigned. She was a plain and unpretentious Christian, ever ready to talk on the subject of religion. Patiently she waited the summons to join her sainted husband beyond the river, often expressing herself as willing to go. When the final summons came, no doubt she was ready.

B. S. RAYNER.

ROBERT CRAIL was born in Scott county, Miss., and died at his home in McComb City, March 8, 1901, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. The greater portion of his life was spent without a personal knowledge of Christ, though for about two years previous to his death he was confined to his bed, during which time he sought the Lord in the forgiveness of his sins, and according to his own statement, received the divine assurance that his prayer was heard and his sins forgiven. He was for several years a member of the M. E. Church, South. I reached his bedside only a few minutes before the end came, and although dying, he was conscious, and talked freely about his soul's condition; said all was well, and that he was waiting and longing for the end to come. After a few moments spent in prayer we parted, fully assured that we would meet again some day where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away;" and where "God shall wipe all tears from off all faces."

His pastor, R. L. WEBB.

MRS. MARGARET B. ALEXANDER (nee Bullen) died at the residence of her son, Geo. Alexander, near Oak Ridge, Miss., on June 3, 1901, in the seventy-third year of her age. She was raised near Fayette, in Jefferson county, Miss., where she has many relatives. One sister and brother survive her—Mrs. Eine Gilbert, of Fayette, and Mr. Randal Bullen, of Louisiana. She was married at an early age to G. W. Alexander. This happy union was blessed with a large family of children. They lived honorable lives, and to a good old age, and were loved and respected by their many friends and relatives, he having preceded her about ten years in death. She was a member of the Methodist Church for a long time. She died in the faith, still trusting, and falling asleep in Jesus. She leaves a large family of children and grandchildren to mourn their loss.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh, being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

It is far better to dine after one's day's work is over, when one can rest and digest the food, than to eat and then immediately hurry to work. People who go to bed very early should take dinner in the middle of the day, and then take an hour's "mooning," as it were.—July Ladies' Home Journal.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit' just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc.

A SIGNIFICANT MOVEMENT.

It was my privilege recently to attend the third annual session of the "Summer Institute of Biblical and Theological Study," held at the Vanderbilt University, in the rooms of Wesley Hall. This Institute was organized three years ago by the Tennessee Conference, with a view to assisting the undergraduates of the Conference in the pursuit of their required studies, and of furnishing direction and help to those who have completed the course and still desire to pursue theological study under the direction of more mature thinkers. Each Conference Examining Committee has charge of the studies in its course, and the plan is to prepare such discussions in each book, devoting about two days to each subject, as to help the classes to a thorough understanding of each work studied, and to follow the discussion with an examination. In this way those whose minds have not had the training of college life are put more nearly on an equality with their more fortunate classmates, and are enabled more thoroughly to understand what they study. In addition to the required Committees of Examination, the Conference appoints a Post-Graduate Committee, who formulate a more advanced course for those in the Conference who care to follow this plan. Members of this post-graduate class are appointed in advance to lead the discussions growing out of the study of these books. The books of this course this year were Clarke's Christian Theology, Hall's Social Tendency of Modern Religious Movements in England, Sanders and Kent's Messages of the Later Prophets, and Berdoe's Browning and the Christian Faith; and the discussions were thoughtful and interesting, and calculated to stimulate the thought of those who were present. The committee appointed to conduct the work of this class were among the strongest men within reach, consisting of Drs. Tillett, Chappell, O. E. Brown, and John M. Webb.

Besides the class work there were devotional exercises each morning and two lectures each day by the ablest men who could be secured, on various themes of interest and importance to the young minister. Bishops Candler, Hendrix and Wilson, Drs. Hoss, Kelly, DuBose, Tigert, Kern, Mathews, Stevenson, Brown, Kirkland and others discussed with eminent ability such themes as "Preaching with Authority," "The Companionship of a Purpose," "The Biblical View of the Christian Ministry," "A Vindication of the Historical Trustworthiness of John's Gospel," "Archæology and the Old Testament," "The Theology of the Book of Job," etc.

In addition to the daily devotional exercises, an hour was spent on Sunday in a love-feast led by Dr. Tillett.

That the Institute meets a real want throughout the church is attested by the fact that the number in attendance has increased with each session, and that at the recent gathering representatives were present from fourteen different Conferences, among which were North Carolina, Indian Mission, and Louisiana. From these facts the question suggests itself, Is not such an Institute needed in each Conference? While it is true that the Tennessee Conference, with the connectional dignitaries, Vanderbilt professors, and at the commencement season the Bishops, within easy reach, affords better opportunities for conducting a successful gathering of the kind, it is equally true that the number who can arrange to attend from such a distance as the Louisiana Conference is necessarily limited. I hope, therefore, that the example of the Tennessee Conference will soon be followed by the Louisiana. Will not our Examining Committees take this question under consideration, and introduce some action at Conference preparatory to an Institute next Summer? Will not our undergraduates and other live young men express their views on the desirability of such a move through the ADVOCATE?

I trust that this humble suggestion may meet with the approval of our committees and others to such an extent as to inaugurate a movement that I feel sure will result in untold good to our Conference and its work.

W. W. DRAKE.

New Orleans, July 4, 1901.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District Conference for 1901 convened in the beautiful little town of Leesville, La., on Thursday, June 27, with the presiding elder, Rev. Jno. T. Sawyer, D. D., in the chair, and Wm. G. Evans at the secretary's table.

Of the nineteen pastors in the district, all but five were present. Rev. R. P. Howell was detained at home on account of the sickness of a son, and Revs. W. T. Bolling and J. L. P. Sheppard were on the sick list. During the Conference news was received of the death of the mother of Rev. Elton Wilson, which explained his absence. There were quite a goodly number of laymen present.

The Conference greatly enjoyed the presence of Rev. H. H. Ahrens, a local preacher of New Orleans and a staff correspondent of the Picayune, whose presence at the organ added greatly to the musical feature of the Conference, and whose sermon on Saturday showed that he is still at home in that sphere.

The morning sessions were devoted to hearing reports from the pastoral charges, most of which showed the work to be in a very healthy state. A number of pastors reported their assessments for Conference collections had been secured in full, and several more that they would have no trouble in making a full report on finances.

First Church, Shreveport, has built an elegant parsonage at a cost of about $4,500. At Mansfield extensive repairs have been made on the parsonage property. Grand Cane is building a new parsonage at a cost of about $1,000. Plain Dealing has a church-building enterprise on foot, and Leesville, Texas Avenue and Logansport have begun to take steps to get parsonages.

A number of successful meetings have been held, and many souls converted, and as a farther result of these revivals, many family altars have been erected, and a marked increase at church services is reported.

Some new churches have been organized, two of which are on the Mooringsport work and two on the Rose Pine work. Brother Howell reports that he has opened work at Bossier City. Prospects for the organization of churches at several other points are encouraging.

The best all-round report of the Conference came from Rose Pine circuit, which "territory" was assigned at the last Conference to Rev. N. F. Hoffpanir, a young man who had just entered the Conference. Besides organizing two new churches, he has taken quite a large number of people into the church, a large part of whom came in on profession of faith. He has secured land at both Rose Pine and DeRidder upon which to build churches, and at the latter place will soon begin work on a $700 church. The work has to date paid him about $200, and expended about $75 for parsonage furniture.

Resolutions commending Centenary and Mansfield Colleges and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to our people were passed.

Very few Woman's Missionary Societies were reported, but the prospects are that in this respect there will soon be a marked advance. Mrs. T. S. Randle, district secretary of the W. H. M. Society, was present, and on Thursday afternoon addressed the Conference, and reported the organization of societies at Davis Springs and Leesville. She will visit points in the district where societies may be organized, and assist the pastors in organizing.

The missionary outlook on the district is very encouraging. The presiding elder is working for collections in full, with good prospects of being able to clear the decks.

The following delegates to the Annual Conference were elected: J. S. Sanders, L. E.; W. G. Wadley, T. S. Sligh, and J. D. McClanney; alternates: S. B. McCutchon and J. E. Johnston.

The following were licensed to preach: R. V. Fulton, from Wesley circuit; T. J. Holladay, from Ft. Jessup and Many circuit; J. A. Alford, from Leesville; W. H. Massie, from Pleasant Hill, and W. B. McGinness, from Rose Pine.

The Conference renewed the licenses of the following local preachers: Jno. L. Sutton, O. M. Posey, R. T. Williams, R. T. Wright, E. L. Cargill, and J. A. Jarratt.

E. L. Cargill was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial into the traveling connection.

N. F. Hoffpanir and R. T. Wright were recommended for deacon's orders.

The session of the Conference was most delightful, and the hospitality of the people abounded to the comfort of the delegates. Every delegate thought he had the best home, and it would be hard to convince him it was not so.

Bro. Alford and his people deserve great credit for building so beautiful, commodious and comfortable a church as the one they have, and we feel sure that when they build the parsonage, it will be fully up to the standard.

W. G. EVANS, Sec.

ABERDEEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-second session of this body was one of the most pleasant, harmonious, profitable and spiritual Conferences ever attended by many of its members. Such was the estimate placed upon it by many who were present. The Conference convened in the town of Okolona, June 27, 1901, with the presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Woollard, in the chair. Roll-call showed fourteen pastors and thirty-one accredited delegates present. Three charges were not represented, whose pastors were unavoidably kept away.

The Sunday-school Conference was held on Thursday, and while report will probably be made by the secretary of that body, must say that the programme arranged and topics discussed evinced the most careful preparation, and presented the most helpful and inspiring information, which, doubtless, will be of practical benefit to the many Sunday-school workers present. The importance of thorough work and the benefit of grading our schools was stressed, and will bear fruit in many schools in the district. The importance of a weekly teachers' meeting was stressed, and reports show this district to be utilizing this very important factor in successful Sunday-school work.

Reports from the pastors show 200 accessions thus far, and a net increase of 100. This is gratifying, as we note the fact that the season for protracted effort had not begun. The preachers are hopeful, and planning for the greatest year's work in the history of the district. The district is prospering and aggressively moving forward to the conquest of the world for Christ.

Indications point to the final overthrow of the saloons in Monroe county. Under the wise leadership of the pastor at Aberdeen, Rev. Richard Wilkinson, the friends of prohibition are moving forward, and an election will be ordered at an early date to decide the question. Already three-fourths of the voters of the town have signed the petition, which means the downfall of the saloon. Let every friend of the right remember us in prayer. The enemy will make a last and desperate stand, and money will be freely used to defeat the will of the people. May the coming election be a "Waterloo" for the saloons, and thus rid us of the plague spot in the district.

Rev. R. P. Neblett, who has just graduated at Millsaps College, and two others, Rev. G. S. Sanders and Rev. Joseph H. Ingraham, were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial into the traveling connection. One applicant was granted license to preach.

All the interests of the church were carefully looked after, and gratifying progress noted.

The hospitality of the good people of Okolona was bountiful and gracious, and resolutions of hearty thanks were offered.

The preaching during the session of the Conference and on the Sabbath, with the exception of two sermons, was of a high order, and helpful and inspiring, and was attended by large and appreciative congregations. Truly, it was good to be there, and, doubtless, much good was done.

Resolutions of sympathy were passed referring to Rev. J. W. Ramsey, who was detained at home by reason of the serious sickness of several members of his family, and Rev. W. D. Burroughs, whose failing health compelled him to give up his work.

The Conference was pleased to have with them Rev. J. R. Countiss, representing Millsaps College, who addressed the body in regard to the great work of our college for boys.

Note was made of the work of both Grenada College and Millsaps College, and these institutions commended to our people as worthy of their patronage and support.

A resolution was passed reaffirming the action of our last Annual Conference against "intercollegiate games."

The Conference was wisely directed and guided in its deliberations by our capable presiding elder, who has proven himself "not a novice," but a wise leader, between whom and the pastors there is mutual admiration and brotherly love.

The next Conference goes to Nettleton. Thus ended a Conference which was a "season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

R. O. BROWN, Sec.

DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Durant District Conference was presided over by our able and beloved presiding elder, Rev. T. W. Dye, at Durant, June 27-30, 1901. We did not have a full attendance, but all of the brethren were very much interested in the work, and we had a delightful and profitable session. Our Conference was noted for pure gospel sermons and spirituality.

1. The League Conference was very entertaining, and our work along this line is becoming more satisfactory, on account of the loyalty and piety of its membership. Bro. R. H. B. Gladney and others discussed fully the topic, "Preparation for Spiritual Work," and the work of the League is better understood than ever before. Our Leagues have been of great benefit in training our young people in works of charity. Some persons have been brought to Christ through the League. Our presiding elder is alive to all of the interests of the church, and made some encouraging remarks with reference to the Leagues of this district.

2. Our Missionary Conference was instructive and edifying. The Lord was with us, and, I think, both laymen and pastors realized the necessity of paying all assessments in full. The discussions of the various topics on missions were discussed intelligently, and all seemed agreed that no church can live without carrying and sending the gospel everywhere. Our Master's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," must be obeyed, and especially by Methodists.

3. Our Sunday-school Conference was a success, and the reports show an increase in membership, better preparation on the part of teachers, and more interest in the salvation of our children. An able essay was read by Rev. J. A. Hall on "The Preparation of Teachers for Their Work," and a resolution was passed requesting him to furnish the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and other papers with a copy of the same for publication.

Rev. A. T. Buck was recommended to the Annual Conference for readmission into the traveling connection.

Revs. John H. Price, Robt. A. Clark, Luther W. Felder and Thos. E. Marshall were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. They are worthy young men, and will be valuable accessions.

Col. J. G. Hamilton, J. F. Wilburn, Parham Williams and W. M. Dixon were elected delegates to our Annual Conference; Rev. J. A. Hall and J. E. Bridges, alternates.

We noted with pleasure the presence of Dr. J. W. Boswell, editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE; Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, and Rev. G. W. Bachman; also Sister Hoskins, representing Grenada College.

Dr. Murrah preached us an excellent sermon on the "Mission of Christ," on the twenty-eighth, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Bros. Gladney, Gordon, Parrish, Deavenport, J. A. Hall and Dr. T. W. Dye preached with power, and we felt that it was good to be there, and that it was none other than the very gate of heaven to our souls.

We are grateful to the good people of Durant for their generous hospitality. May the Lord bless them!

Yours in the work,

J. W. TREADWELL, Sec.

GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-second session of the Grenada District Conference was called to order at two P. M., Thursday, June 27, 1901; and in our own church and with the good people of Coffeeville we met. Rev. J. W. Bell, P. E., conducted the opening exercises, and from that time on kept his hand steadily on the movements of the Conference, and steered us over some places where it seemed two seas met. We were more than satisfied with the presidency of our elder.

At the request of the presiding elder, J. G. McGowen, secretary of the last Conference, called the roll, after which he was again elected secretary, with C. H. Pittman, assistant.

Various committees were then appointed, after which the president called for reports of Sunday-schools and Epworth Leagues. The report on Sunday-schools was encouraging, considering so much mission territory in the district; forty-two schools, with a membership aggregating 2,133, with an average attendance of 1,390. An advance in this department of the work was gratifying. From reports of pastors the League work is not encouraging, and some good speeches were made concerning this division of our work.

The Committee on Spiritual Interest of the district reported sixty-nine preaching-places, eighteen prayer meetings, one hundred and six members received this year, and only two protracted meetings held. Spiritual condition of the district is encouraging, and pastors planning for revivals.

Resolutions of love and appreciation relative to our dear Bro. J. M. Hampton, who has been a member of this District Conference for some thirty years, were passed, and he was granted the privileges of the floor, his place of residence now being out of the district.

Bro. W. S. Harrison, superintendent of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, gave an account of his delicate and pathetic work. Bro. W. S. Shipman at this point spoke of Bro. Harrison's devotion to the children of the Home, and their love for him.

Bro. W. M. McIntosh gave good account of our school at Grenada; building more than full last year. He very much desires more room, and the district encourages enlargement.

Dr. J. W. Malone was not present, but a good report of the Woman's College was given by Dr. R. W. Jones.

The Home Mission work was represented by Mrs. A. C. Yearger, of Wood Street, Water Valley.

Dr. J. W. Boswell was with us, talking and preaching to the delight of all. He makes us a good paper. Why don't more people take it?

All the pastors were present except Bro. R. G. Porter, who was reported sick. Sorry; he always adds much to such meetings.

Rev. H. H. Estes, of Winona district, was present, and given the privileges of the floor.

A larger number of local preachers were present than for years.

Two young men were licensed to preach—Bros. R. I. Collins, of Coffeeville, and Ben Tindle, of Main Street, Water Valley.

Bro. Thames represented Millsaps College.

A resolution was passed, with only three dissenting votes, reaffirming and endorsing resolutions passed at last Annual Conference concerning intercollegiate games.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: R. W. Jonas, J. G. McGowen, H. W. Hunter, R. F. Cole.

Main Street is the next place of meeting.

Bro. Ball, the presiding elder, preached a great sermon Sunday morning at eleven o'clock.

Bro. W. S. Shipman preached the closing sermon Sunday night.

So ended one of the best District Conferences it has ever been the privilege of this writer to attend.

J. G. MCGOWEN, Sec.

We have received the Minutes of the Ninth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference, held at Ruston, La., April 4-7, 1901; Mrs. F. A. Lyons, New Orleans, president; Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, Lafayette, corresponding secretary. The report for the year shows 37 adult auxiliaries and 6 juvenile auxiliaries, with a total membership of 883. The society collected during the year $4,998.56. In addition, it did much missionary work in the way of visiting the sick, furnishing supplies, holding meetings and distributing religious literature. The society prospers, and is doing great good.

THE UNFORGOTTEN DEAD.

REV. ARTHUR DAVIS.

No man was ever better known in West Tennessee than Rev. Arthur Davis. I knew him when I was a little boy. Everybody loved him. The young folks called him "Uncle Art." The old folks were less formal, and simply called him Art Davis. He was born in the early part of the past century; was a pioneer, and did as much as any man of his day to lay the foundation of Methodism in ground left untouched by William McKendree, James McFerrin, William McMahon, and men of their generation. His field of labor was principally in West Tennessee and the Kentucky Purchase, though he preached some in Middle Tennessee and North Mississippi. He always made lasting tracks, and a few people are yet living who knew him in his early days. His education was limited, but he had a strong and grasping mind, and when he joined the itinerant ranks, the Conference received "a good case." He gave himself to study, mostly to men and things; he also mastered the theology then necessary to a Methodist preacher's success. He was a man of strong convictions and a Methodist of the first water. He had a rich experience in grace, and a clear apprehension of the doctrines and discipline of the church. He was fearless, never hesitating to enter the lists against any who dared to dispute the truth, or defy divine authority. In the pulpit he was a man of power, and crowds flocked to hear him preach. In the social circle he was the center of attraction, and he seemed never to tire in entertaining his admirers. He never failed to interest or edify his hearers. They relished even his old sermons.

There was no man like him. He followed no rules except those of his own making, and yet I never heard him called eccentric. In his day the word "sensational preacher" was never used; nor was he sensational in the bad sense, but he always created a sensation. In polite circles he would now be designated unique, but I never heard that term applied to him. Everybody said: "Art Davis is a case." That meant everything to those who knew him; and those who did not were sure to find out the first time they saw him or heard him preach. In make-up he was short and rather heavy-set, dark complexion, high forehead, and though not bald, his hair was scant, and of a light, sandy color. His cheek bones were prominent, but not enough so to give his face an angular appearance. His eyes were keen and penetrating, and his chin and lips indicated a man of firmness; one who under all circumstances was "as good as his word." His step was measured and steady, and made the impression that he had something to do and intended to do it. Most men of his size, better looking and finer dressed, would pass through a crowd without being noticed, but he, as unobtrusive as a saint and modest as a woman, would never fail to attract attention. People would find him out.

He was converted in early life and joined the Tennessee Conference, and there remained until the formation of the Memphis Conference in 1843. His conversion was genuine and thorough; a very different thing from what conversion is in many cases these days. I do not mean to insinuate that conversion meant more then than now. I do not think so. Genuine conversion is the same in all ages, and carries with it the same obligations in one age that it does in another. But the fathers of Methodism presented the subject in a strong light; insisting on the necessity, conditions and obligations of the Christian life in a manner different from the modern professional evangelists and revival manipulators; and their converts were more robust than thousands who make profession under the hand shaking method of to-day. Tradition says young Davis was convicted under his own preaching. It is said that he and a companion were hauling rails, and that "he preached a sermon just for fun," and that the companion began to weep and mourn in earnest when conviction seized his own heart, which was so thorough that he never stopped until he was converted. This version was received by many in my boyhood, but its correctness is not vouched for: only the genuineness of his conversion, viewed in the light of the Bible and his after life, is certified to. All the obligations imposed by conversion were recognized by him and faithfully observed. Soon after his struggle with sin he began to preach, but not for fun. His call to the work was as clear and unmistakable as the witness of the Spirit to his sonship. His career was noted no less for its brilliancy than the wonderful success that crowned his labors. In the estimation of the thousands of his admirers Arthur Davis' career was without a parallel. As a preacher, a comparison could not be instituted between him and any other man, for no other man was like him. The mould in which he was cast never turned out a duplicate. In technical parlance, his preaching was expository and hortatory. He explained the Scriptures and persuaded the people to become religious. His language was the language of the people, and he was never obscure. He loved the literal and the parabolic. His list of subjects was not extensive, but his favorite themes were fully mastered. They were packed with Bible truth and clearly illustrated. His illustrations were never faulty, but often quaint and homely. He never failed to strike the mark, or make people see the point. His imagination was fertile, and he drew on it liberally. He painted pictures from life as he saw it. The gospel obliged him to be serious, and he was never antic or wittingly trifling, but there was much of the comic in his nature, and as his power over a sympathetic audience was irresistible, he would, when in his best mood, have his hearers in tears and smiles by turns, apparently without effort and unconsciously. I have seen this the case at Old Wesley Camp Meeting, in West Tennessee, when audiences, as cultured as any in the South, were assembled to hear the Word. Impressions made at such a time by hearing him on Isaiah's Highway, or the Water of Life, would not wear out in a life-time. Hundreds living to-day, besides thousands in heaven, have not forgotten his sermon on the Christian Race. The writer heard it once. His text was: "So run that ye may obtain." The three things necessary to a successful race were the three divisions of the discourse: 1. To start right; 2. To keep right; 3. To end right. He commenced by saying: "Man, in his natural state, is not prepared to run the race. He is in a pit, and mired at that—in a pretty fix to run a race! He must be taken out, which nothing can accomplish but the grace of God." The start, as he represented it, was interesting; his delineation of patient continuance in well-doing was encouraging to the faithful; the "home-stretch for glory" was exciting, and when the victor received the laurels, the people could not be restrained. He was quite as successful in preaching to the negroes in his quaint way as to the white people. If anything, his genius was more clearly discerned, and his eloquence more natural and fervid. Preaching to them on one occasion of the happiness of heaven and the hope of getting there, contrasting the condition of the poor and good with the state of the rich and wicked, he exclaimed, with pathos and emotion: "Brethren, I declare to you, I had rather live on bread and water, and die on a plank, and be buried in a mud-hole, and go to heaven, than ride to hell in a carriage."

In denouncing sin and reproving evil-doers, Arthur Davis had no equal. He quailed before no one: and when his voice was lifted in warning or reproof, the congregation knew what would follow if the rules of good order were violated, or any sinner dared to defy the laws for the protection of worshipers, or the regulations of the camp meeting. It was not necessary to invoke the aid of an officer. On the "terrors of the law" he was as terrible as the law itself. The hair of his hearers would almost stand upright as he depicted the wrath of God and the torments of the lost. In the earlier years of his ministry there chanced to hear him an educated young man who had just started in the practice of medicine. It was on a week day in a log hut about a mile from the village in which the young doctor lived. He and his companions were wicked and skeptical. On his next round the doctor persuaded his friends to go and hear Davis, "and take cursing lessons." They were eager to hear this new John the Baptist. Davis had been informed of the motive that brought them to church. He waited on the outside until all the people had seated themselves in the house; and telling the circumstance afterwards he said: "I took my stand in the door to keep anybody from going out, and I tell you I gave them cursing lessons. Before I got through all the boys were on the floor crying for mercy, and most of them were converted." The young doctor was converted and lived long to bless the church.

Arthur Davis was loyal. When appointed to a work he went. His stay, however, in the itinerancy was not uninterrupted. More than once he located. He did this, as he thought, in justice to his family, deeming it a more independent and better method than to hold any nominal relation to the connection. His friends regretted his course, being persuaded that his talents and gifts for leadership could have elevated him to any position in the church. He was not ambitious for anything of the kind, and could not tolerate with any degree of patience the desire for pre-eminence in others. Place seeking he despised. "I believe in my heart," said he, "that some preachers would prefer a barren rock, without an inhabitant or a dollar's support, if it were called a district, to the best place in the Conference, with a big salary and chance to save souls, if it were called a circuit." But he was not without honor. He received the best appointments, and when the presiding eldership was esteemed far more than it is now, he was appointed to districts. He had no taste for station work, and, in fact, was not adapted to it; still he filled with usefulness and acceptableness an important station in the closing years of his life. During the late war he was sent to a station. The times were exciting and he could not compose himself sufficiently to study, and it is said that "he was often hard-pushed for a sermon." At such times he would hesitate whether to announce preaching for the evening, but would finally say: "However, if the bell rattles, you may all come to church."

I could fill pages in detailing the thrilling events and amusing incidents connected with the life of this remarkable man, but time and space now fail me. I have written this short sketch in his memory. It will revive in the minds of hundreds the name of the man and the scenes of other days, and maybe call forth from some living friend a better and more interesting chapter for the future history of Methodism in the West. The last years of his life were spent in Arkansas, and he died a member of the White River Conference.

FOREST DISTRICT.

To the Preachers in Charge and Their Assistants, to the Local Preachers and All Other Members of the M. E. Church, South, in the Forest District, Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The second round of Quarterly Conferences has ended, and the third soon begins. Your presiding elder met all of his appointments except the last three, when the authorities of the church called him elsewhere, and the Rev. B. F. Lewis very kindly represented him at those Quarterly Conferences, while Prof. Geo. W. Huddleston, of Millsaps College, filled Bro. Lewis' pulpit at Forest.

The charges which were not prepared to make the assessment for the support of the preachers-in-charge and their assistants on the first round complied with the Discipline on the second, and all made a gratifying increase except Harperville circuit, which fell $50 behind the assessment for last year, although the membership was increased by the addition of two societies, and notwithstanding the name was changed from Hillsboro. The Indian Mission is not assessed. The total assessment for the preachers-in-charge is $9,445, and for the three assistants $640, making the total $10 085, which makes the average for each preacher-in-charge $524; or, if the three assistants be counted, $480 The highest is made by Newton and Hickory, $750, with Vossburg and Heidelberg a close second, $700, while the lowest is Harperville, $300, with Decatur only $15 ahead of it. Last year the total was $8,310. From this take $310, the assessment on Chunkey circuit (not now in this district), and to the remainder add $800, the assessment on the Ellisville and Laurel charge (not in this district last year), and it is found that $8,800 was the total assessment for pastoral support last year by the charges now in the district. The increase is $1,200—a normal, and, therefore, a natural and healthy increase. The presiding elder's assessment, by his request, was not increased, but was more equitably apportioned.

So far only two charges, the Vossburg and Heidelberg, and the Shiloh, have paid the presiding elder's quarterage in full to date, or at the date of the second Quarterly Conference. Laurel paid only $11 for the two quarters; Ellisville, $21.90; Taylorsville, $10; Montrose, $25; Rose Hill, $25; Newton and Hickory, $50; Lake, $13; Trenton, $20; Raleigh, $20; Harperville, $9.25; Carthage, $18; Walnut Grove, $19; Neshoba, — (nothing); Decatur, $15; Forest, $10, and Morton, $17, or a total of $284.15 on an aggregate of $560 due at the second Quarterly Conferences. If the payments made by Shiloh ($40) and by Vossburg and Heidelberg ($75) be considered, then the total paid to date is $399.15 on an aggregate of $675 due, leaving $275.85 unpaid.

Up to the second Quarterly Conference Vossburg and Heidelberg had paid the preacher-in-charge $253, and the assistant $49 75; Laurel, $76 30; Ellisville, $96; Taylorsville, $47.75; Montrose, $121.22; Rose Hill, $150.03; Newton and Hickory, $202.45; Lake, $98.62; Trenton, $118.05; Raleigh, $119.07; Harperville, $55 40; Carthage, $139.35, and $19.25 to the assistant; Walnut Grove, $182.40; Neshoba, $100.25, and $41 75 to the assistant; Decatur, $93.45; Forest, $128; Morton, $176 50; Shiloh, $118.85, making a total of only $2,387.44 on $5,047 50 then due.

W. M. Thornton, treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance, reports the following receipts on Conference Claimants' Fund: Harperville, $15 43; Walnut Grove, $8 30; Shiloh, $55 (in full); Raleigh, $8; Montrose, $25; Lake, $10; Decatur, $5; Carthage, $5; Rose Hill, $25; Vossburg and Heidelberg, $50 Eight charges had remitted not a cent on this collection, although the Annual Conference had ordered the collection taken in March.

W. L. Linfield, treasurer of the Conference Board of Missions, reports the following receipts: Montrose, $30 for foreign and $10 for domestic missions; Rose Hill, $26 for foreign and $14 for domestic; Vossburg and Heidelberg, $67.75 for foreign and $30 for domestic; Raleigh, $20 for foreign and $8 for domestic; Ellisville, $4.90; Trenton, $20; Carthage, $6.90, and Laurel, $12.68 for foreign missions. No report from other charges—ten in number.

Rev. Jno. W. Crisler, treasurer of the Sunday-school Board, reports receipts for Children's Day as follows: "May 19, Newton and Hickory, $12.50; June 3, Raleigh, $4.40; June 10 Laurel, $3; Ellisville, $4.31; June 18, Rose Hill, $4.50; June 20, Lake, $8.35." Was Children's Day not observed in other charges?

At Ellisville, Bro. Norsworthy has been hard at work getting some old church and parsonage debts out of the way, and looking after insurance on the property. He has met with some success, and feels all the better therefor. He expects nothing short of all collections in full, and, of course, the stewards and members will see that his allowance is more than paid.

At Newton and Hickory, Bro. Jno. W. Crisler has not only been earnestly at work raising his Conference collections, but has been substantially reducing that $900-church debt. Of course, that will be paid, and the Conference collections and his own allowance will be more than fully met. He has made more pastoral visits than any other two preachers in the district.

At Laurel, Bro. Linfield has succeeded in paying off that church debt which embarrassed his predecessors for four or five years, and, besides, has built an elegant parsonage—nice enough for a Bishop to dwell in.

On the Neshoba circuit Bro. W. H. Sanders and Bro. C. N. Guice, undeterred by the slowness of the stewards and the shortness of quarterage, have systematically worked until the subscriptions on Conference collections are in fine shape. Work will soon begin on a house of worship in Philadelphia, of whose dimensions and appearance our Methodism need not be ashamed.

Bro. M. L. White is rejoicing over the collecting and expending of $303 in the building of a neat church in the village of Conway, Leake county, where we never before had a place of worship.

At Walnut Grove the brethren have made Bro. C. M. Crossley's heart to rejoice by making the parsonage comfortable.

At Taylorsville we are still in statu quo. The people dwell in ceiled houses, but the Lord's house lies desolate. A Masonic Lodge was completed some time ago.

Bro. W. D. Dominick is trying hard to have the parsonage in Morton repaired and saved from total destruction.

After toiling with his own hands, and with but little help from white man or Choctaw, Bro. W. P. Donnell stopped work on Cammack Chapel, in Neshoba county, before ceiling the house, to get a good breath before beginning work on the chapel near Rose Hill, in Jasper county. The Choctaws say, "Donnell achukma fehna hoke!" while the presiding elder is only, "Melien abanampnli chito!"

On the Shiloh work Bro. P. D. Hardin has gotten subscriptions for all Conference collections in fine shape, and expects to lead "Class A."

Brethren Langford, Morse and Foreman are cheerful and hopeful, and if Bro. L. J. Jones on the Decatur circuit, and Dr. Miller on the Harperville, and Bro. Gale on the Raleigh, and Bro. Williams on the Taylorsville, will catch the tune and the time, "We will all sing 'Halleluiah'" before the year is over.

Missionary mass meetings have been held at Independence Church and at Pelahatchie on the Morton circuit, at Homewood on the Foster, and at Rose Hill on the Rose Hill circuit, and arrangements are being made for other points. Let the good work go on.

Vossburg and Heidelberg reported at the second Quarterly Conference thirteen accessions, with twelve disposals, and three infants baptized. Laurel has reported forty-six accessions since the second Quarterly Conference, making one hundred and eight for the year to date, with twenty-seven disposals. Ellisville has reported fourteen accessions and twenty disposals, one infant baptized; Taylorsville, fifteen accessions, one disposal, six infants baptized; Montrose, six accessions, two disposals, one infant baptized; Rose Hill, four accessions, ten disposals, two infants baptized; Newton and Hickory, eleven accessions, eleven disposals, three infants baptized; Lake, three accessions, nine disposals; Trenton, three accessions, fourteen disposals; Raleigh, sixteen disposals, two infants baptized; Harperville, three accessions, twenty-two disposals; Carthage, four accessions, nine disposals; Walnut Grove, four disposals; Neshoba, two accessions, three disposals; Indian Mission, three accessions, two infants baptized; Decatur, two disposals; Forest, eight disposals; Morton, eighteen accessions, one disposal, one infant baptized; Shiloh, six accessions, four disposals, two infants baptized. Death and the new railroads account for most of the disposals. We trust the Lord gathers the one class, and the preachers in the railroad towns the other.

Brethren, let us make the third round one of spiritual power by the fullness of our consecration, the faithful discharge of every duty, and by earnest, importunate prayer. May our God give us at least a thousand souls for Christ this year in this district! Yours faithfully,

A NEW CHURCH.

On Sunday, June 30, "Mt. Zion" was organized with twenty-four charter members, in a good community, and one that will build. The location for the church is two miles northwest of Kellis Store. Work will be started in a few days. "Beautiful for situation is Mt. Zion." We have held four Children's Day services with overflowing congregations. The published programme was supplemented, making the services of high standard in spiritual and literary merit. Missionary Rally service will be held at Mellen for the circuit, July 9. The programme for the young people contains the best-selected material on missions. Pray for us. ROBERT L. PHILLIPS.

Moses, Miss., July 6, 1901.

When Christ was dying on the cross he made a will. Perhaps you have thought that no one ever remembered you in a will. If you are in the kingdom, Christ did, for it was to his disciples he said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." They say a man can't make a will now that the lawyers can't break and drive a four-in-hand straight through. I challenge them to break this one. Let them try it. No judge or jury can set Christ's will aside, for he rose to execute it himself. If he had left us a lot of gold, we should never have gotten it, for thieves would have stolen it in the first century. But he left his peace and his joy for every true believer.—D. L. Moody.

MRS. R. A. SIBLEY.

Mrs. Elvira J. Sibley, wife of R. A. Sibley, Sr., of the Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, was born in Copiah county, Miss., June 10, 1828; daughter of Cason and Maggie Scott; was married to R. A. Sibley, Sr., in Copiah county, Miss., March 9, 1848; converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in September, 1848; was mother of five children—two sons and three daughters. One son, R. A. Sibley, Jr., of the Mississippi Conference, and one daughter, Mrs. J. C. Sumner, survive her, with eighteen grandchildren and her husband, to mourn their loss.

Without murmur or complaint she shared her husband's itinerant fortunes and misfortunes; moved to any and all work to which her husband was appointed until her health failed; ever ready to sacrifice for the Master's cause and work. After her health failed, or gave way, she remained at the humble little home without complaint while her husband was gone to do the will and work of the Master. Her health gradually declined for ten or twelve years until finally the crisis came, June 29, 1901, at 3:10 A. M.

Now that she is with us no more here, oh, how sad! Just think of the man, one-half torn away, the other half left all bleeding. Then you have the picture. Oh, how lonely are we! While in health she was a constant worker for the Master; possessed of strong faith. When very far down in the valley and shadow of death she sang the first verse of that grand old hymn, "Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone," with the chorus, 'Heaven is my home;" then repeated, "Heaven is my home." She was an affectionate wife and mother, kind friend and neighbor; only intimately known to be loved. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." We, her dear ones, are only lonely and sad because of her absence. As to her being in heaven, we have no doubt. ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Few are entirely free from it.

It may develop so slowly as to cause little if any disturbance during the whole period of childhood.

It may then produce irregularity of the stomach and bowels, dyspepsia, catarrh, and marked tendency to consumption before manifesting itself in much cutaneous eruption or glandular swelling.

Annual Meeting.

A most glorious session our North Mississippi Conference W. F. M. Society has just closed in the little city of Iuka, noted for its health and "beauty-giving" water and other attractions. The revival spirit was there, the spirit of missions, the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ, without which, we are told, we are none of his. "The spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of the knowledge and of the fear of the Lord" rested upon us, and the spirit of love brooded over us like a Heavenly Dove. It was indeed a feast to hungry souls, in the strength of which we may go many days.

Our business was transacted in a very orderly manner, with only slight knowledge of parliamentary law. The weather being very warm, we held an afternoon session in the Park, where we had just entered upon a parliamentary drill, when a severe storm arose, and the parliamentary drill was "indefinitely postponed."

Our officers for the ensuing year are the same, with some few exceptions. Mrs. M. I. Hoskins, Grenada, president; Mrs. M. E. Thames, Minter City, vice-president; Mrs. H. P. Gibbs, Columbus, corresponding secretary; Miss Ella Grider, Winona, recording secretary; Mrs. G. C. Jones, Baleu, treasurer; Mrs. J. F. Evans, Enpora, auditor; Mrs. J. F. Evans, Enpora, editor.

We have a fine body of officers and secretaries, full of zeal and the Holy Ghost, and with the promise of our Lord, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world," we confidently expect nothing but success in our glorious work.

The reports of district secretaries were all favorable, but the Holly Springs district—Miss Sally Hinton, secretary—bore off the banner. All honor to that noble secretary and band of Christian workers! But I would say to the other secretaries, Do all in your power to inspire your auxiliaries with a holy ambition to press forward; and if they do not secure the banner, as it is proudly unfurled, let the shadow of its folds fall on them.

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. P. Gibbs, made a fine report from the Woman's Board, lately convened in Asheville, N. C.

Our delegate to the New Orleans Missionary Conference, Mrs. Fanny Clark, made an instructive and interesting report of the eight days' work done there.

We had one of our home-visiting missionaries, Miss Hardynia Norville, of the State of Mexico, who thrilled us with her deep earnestness and enthusiasm for her work, and I almost became covetous for means to help her. Will not some one who reads this send Miss Norville, City of Mexico, State of Mexico, help? There is a desirable piece of property for the location of a school that she can purchase for $4,000, which she thinks will be of great advantage to her in her work. I wonder if there is a man or woman who reads this, able and willing to help this noble woman in her work for the Master? She is thoroughly identified with her work, and her high and holy ambition is to give to Mexico the gospel. Our society, under the advice of the Woman's Board, has undertaken the support of Miss Whitman in Cuba. She is a Mississippi woman, and for other reasons, no matter how our hearts were moved toward the work in Mexico, we pledged ourselves to her support.

Oh! for means to carry out the great commission of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

The Conference Society had a most delightful session, largely due to the cordial welcome, kind hospitality, and appreciative sympathy extended by the citizens of Iuka.

FLORIEN CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRETHREN: One week ago to-night we closed our revival meeting at this place, conducted by Rev. J. S. Sanders. The Lord was with us in great power during the whole time of the meeting of eleven days. There were at least 150 conversions, about 40 sanctifications and 15 accessions to the church, and a great many reclaimed. Some may think it strange out of so many conversions to have so few accessions to the church. The cause of that is, most of the people here were already members of some branch of the church. It is said by the old, that this was the best revival meeting this community has ever witnessed.

Oh! may God help us to keep the work going on. We realize that Satan is going to try to undo all this work, but we hope and pray that the people may be so firm and steadfast and uncompromising with the devil, that his efforts to lead them astray will be a failure. So let us continue to give God all the praise and keep the devil shouted down. Yours sanctified,

JENA AND JONESVILLE CHARGE.

DEAR EDITOR: I closed a meeting yesterday evening that resulted in twenty-five accessions and a few bright conversions. This makes one hundred accessions for this charge this year. The good Lord and a few praying men and women have been our only helpers. We are not needing any evangelists of the modern order over this way.

Our second quarterly meeting embraced the second Sunday in June. Bro. J. D. Harper was on hand, and did some splendid preaching. He is always ready to preach. He has made two visits to my work and preached six times each trip.

The fourth Sunday in June was a grand day for the Methodist people of this community. Dr. J. A. Parker of Simsport, preached for us twice. His subject, Sunday, was, "Why I am a Methodist." The sermon was a great blessing to our Methodist people, and I thought while the Doctor was preaching that every Methodist congregation in the State ought to hear him on this subject. One Baptist brother, after finding out that the Methodists outnumbered the Baptists over one million, said: "I know now that the Baptists are right, for the Savior said: 'Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' The many that are in the 'broad way' are the Methodists, and the few be that find the strait way are the Baptists."

HELPING THE BRETHREN.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I was with Bro. Anderson in a meeting at Maryland, when his child died. We had a very good meeting, notwithstanding the rain and sickness; had a good revival in the church and several joined. Bro. Anderson is making a fine impression on his people. He has completed a brand-new parsonage, which will be a gem of beauty when it is painted.

I was with Dr. Wier also in a meeting at Tchula, where we had a pleasant, and, I trust, a profitable time. The Doctor seems to be pleased with his people, and his people are pleased with him. He has a wonderful knack of getting along with the children and young people. The Doctor is doing well.

I have been with M. D. Fly and J. R. Roberson in a meeting at Pontotoc also. We had a pleasant meeting, and I think much good accomplished. Bro. Fly, though somewhat advanced in years, still has a genial spirit and much of the life and vigor of his youthful days. He is doing a good work in Pontotoc, and the people are proud of their preacher. The health of J. R. Roberson is much improved, and he did some fine singing for us in our meeting.

I was with J. W. Lester in a meeting, last week, at Sidon, where we had quite a warm time indeed—at least, "in the way of the weather." We had a very good meeting, and Bro. Lester is becoming accustomed to the Delta. I think he will do well on his new work. His people seem to be pleased with him, as far as I was able to learn, and he speaks in very high terms of his people. May the Lord bless the brethren, and help them in soul-saving, and in sending large lists of subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

Yours very truly,

W. J. O'BRYANT.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MIDDLETON, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: We are moving on very nicely so far, and have done some revival work; but have not held any of our regular protracted meetings yet.

We have some good, earnest Christians on this, the Middleton mission, who are glad to do anything to advance the cause, while there are, as I have found it to be the case most everywhere, some who seem to have a very narrow conception of the duty of a Christian. It seems to me that the secret of success in the work of a pastor to-day is to show to such people what is the real duty of a Christian.

There is a great cry being made against foreign missions to-day, and, strange to say, some of our real intelligent members, speaking after the manner of men, are the main opposers of the foreign mission work, and though the command was never given to carry the gospel to Christian nations, yet some of our most zealous home workers contend that our duty consists only in teaching and encouraging what they term "Christianity" at home. May the Lord help us to see our duty as it is expressed in the full term of the word "Christianity?" And may we, as a Christian people, feel the very pressing necessity of carrying the gospel to those who are perishing for want of it.

Our collections are very much behind what they should be at this season of the year—only about 16⅔ per cent. to date; but owing to the bad crop year just past, I suppose we should not be so much discouraged over the matter.

Pray for us, that we may be able to encourage every interest of the church in a way that will be to its upbuilding, both spiritually and temporally.

J. B. BLACKBURN, P. C.

WHY?

Why do women continue to endure suffering caused by womanly diseases? There are many answers to that question. Sometimes because they have exhausted the skill of local physicians and remain uncured. At other times it is because they shrink from submitting to obnoxious examinations which local physicians deem necessary. And to sum it all up, they endure suffering because they do not know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"I enjoy good health; thanks to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mrs. J. L. Schuelver, of Pontiac, Livingston Co., Ill. "I was taken sick and the doctors here called it 'Grip.' I lay for four weeks in bed, then when I got up I found I had 'displacement.' Had such aches and pains in my back and limbs could not stand any length of time. I knew that our home doctor would insist the first thing on an examination, and that I would not submit to, unless I was dangerously sick. My son had your book, 'Common Sense Medical Adviser,' and I thought from reading it that Dr. Pierce's medicine would do me more good than all the home doctors—and so it has. I can truly say I was surprised at the benefit I received. I can do all my washing and also tend my flower garden. In fact I am on my feet most all the time. An old friend of mine said to me, 'Why what is the matter with you? You are getting young again.' I told her I had taken six bottles of Dr. Pierce's medicines, and that if she would do likewise she would feel ten years younger, too."

Seashore Camp Grounds.

WILL OPEN (D. V.) ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, NEXT, AND CONTINUE FOR 8 OR 10 DAYS.

The Grounds are opened April 1, and closed Nov. 1, for occupying cottages and reception of visitors. Modern and ample accommodation have been provided for the multitudes that annually visit this refreshing and delightfully cool and bracing place of rest, free from malaria and contagious diseases.

The sea bathing is unsurpassed by any resort on the Mississippi Sound, while the supply of pure, sparkling drinking water is furnished by one of the finest artesian wells, whose waters possess rare virtues.

The exhilarating sea breezes refresh the fatigued, and act as a tonic to the debilitated visitors from our sunken-envolmped and dust-stifling cities and towns. Boats for sailing and fishing always on hand. The drives along the seashore present magnificent views, and are over ten miles in length. Visitors are not expected to arrive or depart on the Sabbath day.

The L. and N. R. R. Company will place on sale the reduced rate of fare during the season, from all points on their lines, and secure a corresponding rate from all connecting lines. Tickets will be placed on sale July 7 to 21, inclusive, and be good to return on until Aug. 31. Two daily mail trains stop at the camp grounds, besides the accommodation and excursion trains, during the entire Summer season. A fine hotel with a frontage of 175 feet, equipped with electric lights and all modern conveniences, has been erected.

All itinerant preachers of the Southern Methodist Church will be admitted into the grounds and provided with lodging accommodations in Wesley Hall free of charge.

The usual entrance fee will be in force this season. No charge will be exacted for entrance on the Sunday of the camp meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to attend the camp meeting and spend a while on the camp ground.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before and during camp meeting, or rent cottages for the season, will please communicate with W. L. Via, superintendent Camp Ground (Biloxi, P. O. 42, Miss.) or any of the following officers:

A NEW OFFER.

We will send the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for one year to all new subscribers, and to all who will renew, and the new missionary book, proceedings of the late great Missionary Conference at New Orleans, for TWO DOLLARS AND FIFTY CENTS—cash to accompany the order.

A brother out West objected to a certain preacher because he preached "an everlasting gospel." We wonder what kind of a gospel that brother desires? He does not object to the hope of being everlastingly saved; he greatly rejoices in the prospect, but the idea of holding out infinite mercy to the lost, as did our blessed Lord, is intolerable. Fortunately for the world, there is no other sort of mercy.

Professors of religion often say: "We can be as religious at home as at the church. There is no use going to service." Whether this is so or not, depends on circumstances. If one is sick, or there is affliction in the family, or surroundings are such as to force one to remain at home, he may, otherwise he can not, for he is neglecting a plain duty without sufficient exense. No man can grow in grace and be happy who disregards a plain command of his Lord.

A symmetrical and all-round Christian character can not be developed under the preaching of any one doctrine of the gospel. Let a preacher follow that course, and if he is a man of any influence, he will get his hearers so full of the one idea that they will think and talk of nothing else. They will exmplify their religion in that one way only. Other phases of the gospel, equally important, will be neglected. Such Christians will grow up ill-shaped, badly informed.

When the woman in the house of Simon the leper broke an alabaster box, and from it poured about sixty dollars' worth of precious ointment on the head of Jesus, there were some who had indignation and murmured, saying it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. But Jesus justified the act on the ground that the woman had come aforehand to anoint his body to the burying. It was her opportunity to do a good work, and must be embraced now or never. The poor remain always the world's heritage. The lesson is important: Great emergencies must be met as they arise. There must be no delay. The poor may be looked after every day.

OLD SERMONS.

Sermon-making ought to be studied. A preacher should put as much time and thought and labor into this, his chief business, as the architect does in the planning and building of houses. Every detail, from foundation to garret, is thought out, measured and recorded. So should it be with every sermon: everything from beginning to close should be a matter of thought. The preacher should study to make himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," and to "rightly divide the word of truth." No architect confines himself to one style of building. He would lose all interest in his profession, and possibly lose patronage. Neither should a preacher confine himself to one style of sermon-making. To do so will render him monotonous and tiresome. To lay out every sermon after the same plan, and begin almost in the same words every time, with firstly, secondly, and thirdly, etc., will not only weary the congregation, but tend to dwarf the intellect. The power to analyze or properly develop a text will be lost. And if the attempt is made after preaching a long series of monotonous discourses, the result is somewhat the same as when a rail-train leaves the track: there is a wreck. We call to mind a case in point. Complaint was made against a preacher on the ground that for years and years he had been giving the congregation the same sermons. The people, it was affirmed, were tired of them, and it was openly moved that he be paid no more for his services until he gave them something new. His next effort in that charge was on a fresh text—an attempt at a fresh line of thought. The sermon was a failure. The people said, "That was a new sermon; but such a sermon!"

Some preachers we have known were so stereotyped in their methods, and confined themselves to such a small number of subjects, that when they announced their hymns, it was not necessary to wait to hear the text and sermon. All acquainted with the preacher knew what was coming. People going to church would say to each other, "I wonder what Brother B. will give us today." Guessing was common, and if the guesser happened to know what text the brother used the last time, he seldom guessed far wrong. He had one chance in five. It is hardly necessary to say that such preaching, except in case of extraordinary men, is practically useless.

It can not be that such preachers are utterly lacking in appreciation of their high and holy calling, or that they place an estimate on their few sermons wholly out of proportion to their worth. It must be that they are lacking in mental power, or have arrested mental growth by ceasing to study. This latter we think is the true reason why they have not a greater variety of preaching matter. Any man who can make six fairly good sermons can make six more, even should he never look into a book or a newspaper. He can see enough and hear enough in his immediate vicinity to keep him at study for a year, if he has any power of observation at all. Some men get material for their best sermons in this way. They are always fresh and interesting, as well as practical and edifying. If this be so, what can a man do and be should he give himself for only a fraction of his time to the reading and study of good books. These will develop and strengthen his mind as well as give him ideas to build on. Equipped with fullness of reading, he can use the facts and incidents that come under his observation with telling effect. And we will stop to say in this connection that a preacher, young or old, need not fear to read the old books. What you learn from them will be new to your hearers. Besides, the old standards are superior to many of the books of the present day. But you need not make yourself a slave to books, whether new or old.

Preaching old sermons on all occasions, no matter how good they are, is a serious mistake. It is bad even when they are preached to a congregation that never heard them, for the preacher himself, except in the rarest instances, can not feel that degree of interest that is always demanded, and which is felt by the man who comes before the people with something fresh. It is worse, unspeakably worse, when delivered to people who have been hearing them for years. We do not wonder that congregations get tired. Nor is it strange that such preachers reach the "dead-line," and cease to be useful so much sooner than those who carry the energy of their youth into mature and old age. Such men are ensamples, and worth their weight in gold. They are living demonstrations of the fact that a man's life and usefulness is not to be measured by his years.

If a man will drag himself along during the formative period of his ministry, content to be tolerated because he is young, and preaches a few good sermons, never aspiring to higher things, nor making effort to enlarge his capital, but rather presuming that he is all he ought to be, he has no one to blame but himself if he ceases to be efficient and available a couple of decades before his time. They are surprised as much so as if they heard thunder in a cloudless sky.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

Christian perfection, in all its fullness, can never be a matter of experience. If one grows and strengthens day by day, conscious all the while of developing in the graces of the gospel, how is it possible for him to know that he has reached perfection? He may feel to-day that his cup is full and can hold no more, but with to-morrow comes to-morrow's blessings and unexpected joys, and the heart which he thought yesterday had expanded to its full capacity, he finds is still capable of enlarging, and he makes perceptible advance. Thus the Christian finds himself "growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." None but the most fanatical dare assert that they are full and completely satisfied.

Complete satisfaction can not be realized this side of heaven when the body wakes in the likeness of the Master (Psa. xvii, 15; I. John iii, 2). No state or experience can be reached beyond which it is impossible to go. St. Paul insisted that God is able to do for us "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." The idea, then, of experiencing perfection is out of the question. It is not only unscriptural, but, believed, would prove the undoing of any and every soul that dared to make a profession of perfection. In such cases there would be nothing more to strive for, and striving would cease. Deterioration and retrograde would result.

The law of spiritual life is somewhat in its operations similar to the law of natural life. According to the law of nature, perfection is immediately followed by decay and death. This is true both in animal and plant life. "First the blade, then the corn; after that the full corn in the ear"—then decay. Such would be the inevitable result in the spiritual life if perfection were attainable and a matter of experience. But who will undertake to say that spiritual life declines in any sense in an individual who maintains his integrity, and continues to cultivate the Christian graces. Exactly the opposite is the fact: as the "outer man perishes, the inner man is renewed day by day." The path of such a soul "grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

But there is such a thing as perfection in the Christian life. It is limited to kind. It has no reference to degree. This perfection of kind is found in the essence of the gospel, which is love. This is the natural outcome of the good seed planted in the soul. It springs up under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and produces fruit—the fruit of love, which can not be otherwise than perfect. In some cases the development may be feeble and slow, but as far as the work goes, it is perfect in its kind. If allowed to effect its purposes—that is, if there be time and opportunity (Heb. vi, 3) and diligence—a surprising growth may be attained. But the essence of the life is nothing different after long years of experience from what it was when the soul first found and knew the Lord. Like the love of an old man for his mother, it is the same love he had for her when a child, but it is stronger, and he knows better why he loves her.

Mr. Wesley, strongly opposed to the wranglings of men over the doctrines of the gospel and the possible attainments under grace, cut the whole matter short by teaching that the sum and substance of religion is "to love God with all the soul, and all the mind, and all the strength." This love casts out all fear, even the fear that hath torment. This love may be realized by all who will exercise faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. And that faith may be exercised now.

At no point in life can one obtain all that is to be had in way of gospel blessings. Men of all shades of religious belief agree to this, and insist on growth in grace. There are differences of opinion concerning theories, etc., but all have the same object in view—to know God and spread scriptural holiness throughout the world. While all may not see alike, they can feel alike, and work in harmony. The Lord evermore join us in the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace!

IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

It was our pleasure to attend two District Conferences in North Mississippi: the Holly Springs at Byhalia, and the Corinth at New Albany. Notwithstanding the intense heat, we greatly enjoyed both Conferences. At Byhalia we were with old friends to whom we ministered in other years. The reunion was pleasant indeed. At New Albany we were acquainted with but few save the preachers, but as everywhere else in all our travels, we found "fathers and mothers, and brothers and sisters," lovers of our Lord, and in hearty sympathy with Methodism.

We shall not attempt anything like a full report of the Conferences. Suffice it to say that the work in every department is in fine shape. A hopeful spirit prevails. The spiritual condition of the church is good, and the financial outlook, except in two or three charges, is quite equal to, if not beyond, anything known in the past. Only one thing causes apprehension: the long, dry spell which is destroying the growing crop of corn, especially the early planting. The corn crop was a failure last year in many sections, and two failures in succession will bear hard on many of the farmers. The cotton prospect is fair, and with suitable seasons, the late planting of corn will turn out fairly well.

We must qualify our statement as to the success of the church in all departments. We are sorry to say that the reports in regard to the Epworth League were not all encouraging. The brethren somehow feel that the League does not work well in our country charges. Several efforts to maintain the organization have failed. In the towns the League succeeds. How to "make it go" in the country is a problem.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, presiding elder of the Holly Springs district, presided the first day; after that Bishop Morrison came in and conducted affairs to the close of the meeting. He preached twice to the delight and edification of the large audiences that waited on his ministry. Rev. W. M. Young, presiding elder of the Corinth district, directed affairs from beginning to close, and it is safe to say that no District Conference we have attended this year had more painstaking or thorough oversight and direction. Brother Young is making a model presiding elder.

Better preaching we have not heard for a long time. It was systematic, sound, gospel preaching. It was delivered with unction, and attended with power. We take occasion to say again: If our preachers generally give the people such gospel sermons as it has been our fortune to hear, the church, so far as soundness in doctrine and spirituality are concerned, is safe. There can be no cause for alarm.

The hospitality of the people was abundant and willingly extended. The number of representatives from the churches was large, though not full. All fared well. Many more would have been made welcome, and they would have been well cared for.

At Byhalia the editor was entertained at Waverly Institute by Prof. A. M. Moore and family, Tennessee friends of long ago. It was pleasant to renew our friendship and call up the long past.

At New Albany, in company with Brother H. M. Klyce, of Corinth, we shared the hospitality of Brother H. E. Blakesley and his excellent wife. Brother Blakesley has long been editor of the New Albany Gazette, and has been a most active promoter of the moral and material interests of his town. He has succeeded wonderfully. The citizens are sorry that he is going to leave them. Our church at New Albany, remodeled at large cost, is a "thing of beauty," and well arranged. It has all the appearance of a new house, and the pastor, Rev. K. A. Jones, is in great favor with his people and doing good. So is my old friend and former co-laborer, Rev. J. W. Anderson, at Byhalia. The blessing of the Lord be upon the good people of North Mississippi.

THE SALOON POWER.

If the number of places where wines, liquors, etc., are sold in New Orleans is any indication of the amount of such beverages consumed, then, indeed, must the city be almost wholly given over to the drink habit. The corner saloon is everywhere in evidence, and between the corners, wherever groceries are sold, a drinking bar is established. Everybody seems to regard the sale of drink as a matter of course, and the grocery-man keeps it as a staple article of trade. But liquor sellers are becoming too numerous to please even those who believe that drinking in moderation is all right, and that a limited number of dealers is a necessity. A few, at least, are persuaded that enough of a good thing is enough; that too much may prove hurtful. Some are entering vigorous protests against the waste of so much time in the city council considering liquor petitions, especially those petitions which, if granted, would open saloons in quiet, residence portions of the city where saloons are not needed, and are not wanted by a majority of the citizens. They think the council should cut the matter short by rejecting such petitions, and put a quietus on the petitioner.

These protests are well. They have not come too soon. What is said in, and of, New Orleans will apply to the country generally, for the liquor power and influence is excited and felt everywhere, and it is not only increasing, but constantly growing more audacious, and less and less inclined to observe the laws of the land. Liquor men seldom complain of the tax imposed on them. It affords both license and protection. But, as a class, saloon keepers have no notion of being restricted as to the time of keeping open, or to the age and character of customers. They propose to sell at any time and to anybody. Sunday laws do not stand in their way. They may close the front door, but the saloon is open on Sunday, all the same. It has always been a puzzle to us that men of "good moral character"—certified to be such by their neighbors (the law, be it known, does not allow a license to be issued to a bad man)—deliberately set at naught the will of the people, and violate their own word, while other men who take no oath, and have no certificate of good moral character, quietly keep the law, close their houses of business at reasonable hours, and on Sunday behave as Christians should.

We quite agree with those who protest against the aggressiveness of the saloon, our common enemy. We go further and say: the saloon power, growing stronger and stronger, is fastening its grip tighter and tighter upon the throats of the people, and unless they soon rise up against it, they will find it too late to make a struggle. Unless the country abolishes the saloons, the saloon will rule and ruin the country.

PERSONAL.

Rev. S. B Myers was a pleasant visitor at the Holly Springs District Conference. He is in fine health, and doing a good work at Greenville.

A note from Rev. Elton Wilson, of the Louisiana Conference, informs us of the death of his mother, who passed away to rest on the twenty-first of June. She was a good woman and "her works do follow her." We hope to receive a suitable memoir in a short time.

We weep with our dear brethren, Rev. R. A. Sibley, and Rev. R. A. Sibley, Jr., father and son, who have been called to mourn the death of wife and mother. She fell asleep in Jesus on the twenty-ninth of June. For nearly fifty-four years she was the faithful wife of Brother Sibley, the senior member of the Mississippi Conference. A memoir by "One Who Loved Her" appears on our second page.

Rev. J. F. Evans, of the North Mississippi Conference, one of our purest and best men, died on Saturday, July 6. This painful intelligence did not reach us until the following Thursday. Rev. H. T. Cunningham wrote a notice in due time, but it failed to reach us; hence no mention could be made in last week's issue. Full particulars by Brother Cunningham will appear next week. We tender the bereaved family our sincere sympathy.

Mrs. Marie Pflug, one of the oldest members of our Dryades Street Church, this city, died at her home on the afternoon of the fifteenth. She was a native of Berne, Switzerland, and was in the eighty-first year of her age. She had been a resident of this city for the past forty-eight years. She was the mother of Mr. F. J. W. Pflug, who has been connected with the ADVOCATE office for many years past. Her pastor, Rev. T. B. Clifford, we hope, will furnish us a suitable memoir.

Greenville District.

MR. EDITOR: Everything is moving on nicely on the Greenville district. I found the district thoroughly organized, and as fine a lot of preachers as were ever put together in one district in Southern Methodism We are making some progress. Almost the entire assessments for missions have been paid. One new church and one new parsonage have been built since Conference. There have been a good many fine revivals and a number of additions on profession of faith. We have spent $550 on the district parsonage in fencing, furnishing and insurance, and in grading the lot. My predecessor, Brother Dorman, did a great work in buying and improving and paying for this valuable property. I am so thankful that he left it entirely out of debt. My heart thrilled with a sweet pleasure not long ago when a big-bodied, large-souled layman said: "How is Brother Dorman? I love that man; he is a noble fellow." Amen! I hear Randolph spoken of so often in loving remembrance. The fine corner-lots in our leading stations, so valuable now, were all secured to the church by the sagacity of Standefer. The district paid every assessment under the energetic leadership of Brother J. W. Honnoll, whose tracks can be seen everywhere here, and will remain until the resurrection morn. Eternity alone can tell the far-reaching effects for good of the wise management of J. W. Price.

I have not the space to tell of all the noble pastors who have worked here. Men like Shipman, who lived in a cabin, did his own cooking and washing, traveled for many weeks in a "dug-out," and organized and built some of the finest churches here, or like Brother Crowe, who has been an evangel of light, has gone all over this Delta, bringing hundreds of souls to Christ, and establishing churches and building houses of worship.

This district is what the combined efforts of every presiding elder, pastor, local preacher, layman and laywoman who has ever lived or labored here have made it. God is a good book-keeper. He never makes a false entry, and he never forgets so small a thing as the giving of a cup of water in his name. It is comforting to know that "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor." One thing we should ever remember. Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but it is "God that giveth the increase."

Truly and fraternally,

J. E. THOMAS

Missions in North Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: The following is the report of the treasurer of our Board of Missions on July 1 by districts:

Sardis—Foreign, $225; domestic, —. Grenada—foreign, —; domestic, —. Winona—foreign, $237.35; domestic, —. Durant—foreign, $229; domestic, $20. Columbus—foreign, —; domestic, —. Aberdeen—foreign, $2 50; domestic, —. Corinth—foreign, —; domestic, —. Holly Springs—foreign, $75 25; domestic, —. Greenville—foreign, $609.80; domestic, $121. Total—foreign, $1,278.90; domestic, $141.

Greenville is the banner district, having paid more than half the assessment. We are behind the receipts of last year at this time. Whole districts have paid nothing. More than one hundred charges have paid nothing. If an effort had been made, we certainly could have done better than this. Is there a single Board of Stewards in the Conference that has not done something in the way of support for the pastor up to this time, and yet we, who are the stewards of our missionaries at home and abroad, with just a few exceptions, have done nothing? We will, after this, give monthly statements from the treasurer, giving you an opportunity to change these figures. The command of our Lord was never clearer and louder than it is to-day. Our responsibilities and opportunities were never greater.

The Board of Missions are planning to increase our forces and advance the line. What do we propose to do? Your Conference Board has arranged for a canvass in the interest of missions at home and abroad. There will soon be in the hands of the presiding elders and pastors programmes for mass meetings to be held in every charge. If these meetings are properly conducted, they will yield a great harvest to the cause of missions in our Conference.

We hope the presiding elders and pastors will take hold of this and push it. We appeal to every delegate and visitor to the great Missionary Conference in New Orleans to help us as you can.

W. S. LAGRONE.

A Fatal Accident.

A fatal accident at the Orphans' Home has plunged us into great grief. Roy Wynn, one of our largest boys, and decidedly the boy of affairs at the Home, was killed on the tenth instant. He had for a long time wanted to work the colt to a cart. I had put him off several times with the promise that when crops were laid by, I would help break the animal. We were in quite a rush to get through plowing. I took advantage of the noon-rest to use one of the horses in going to town to buy provisions. Just as I was leaving one of the boys, Clarence Carroll, asked permission to hitch the colt. I forbade it with the usual promise. But they were toying with the temptation which in my absence proved too strong. The colt was hitched; the two boys were, after a short ride, thrown from the cart. One was killed, the other slightly hurt. Such are the facts, and I give them without comment, except to say that the boys had handled the colt till they had come to believe they were taking slight risk in hitching him up. They believed that I was unnecessarily cautious.

A Correction.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Brother J. R. Moore stated in his article, which appeared in last week's ADVOCATE, that I was financial agent for Mansfield College. Brother Moore is mistaken. I did act in that capacity for several years. When the college was in absolute need of money to save it from destruction, I threw myself in the breach, and what was accomplished in that critical period in the history of the college will live in the memory of a few people. However, the record is above, where let it abide.

A. F. Jackson, of Mansfield, La., is treasurer of the Board of Trustees, and will gladly receive any funds for the college. Let those who have at any time while I was agent given pledges of financial aid, remit to him.

I will add, further, that the old college is still on my heart, and that I rejoice in its present prosperity, and am exceedingly hopeful for its future. Cordially,

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

Millsaps College.

Prof. G. W. Huddleston and the Rev. J. R. Countiss will travel during the Summer in the interest of the college. Any help our friends will give these gentlemen to facilitate their work will be greatly appreciated. Persons desiring to communicate with them will address Prof. Huddleston at Jackson and Mr. Countiss at Pittsboro, Miss.

I will start for London to attend the Ecumenical Conference about the first of August, but letters addressed to me at Jackson will receive attention at the hands of Prof. R. S. Ricketts.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Meridian District:

Be sure to take collections for the distribution of the missionary edition of the ADVOCATE during the month of August. Remember, the paper will cost us two and a half cents a copy, and that we want to put it in every Methodist home in the district. Send the money direct to D. Boswell not later than the last week in July, and let me know how many copies you take, and whether you have enough, and how many copies you can spare to other charges that may need help.

Good Board at Centenary College for $8.75 per Scholastic Month.

This includes room-cleaning. The terms are cash at beginning of each scholastic month. Fair treatment, plain dealing, and no discriminations. Read the following, and be sure to write the Manager for any information you desire:

An interesting feature of Centenary College is its boarding department known as Pharr Hall. This department is under the management and personal supervision of Prof. L. L. Upton, who, assisted by Mrs. Upton, endeavors to make the "Hall" and dormitories pleasant and home-like. Those who board at the "Hall" may be sure that they will have all needful attention, both in health and sickness.

Parents need not have any apprehension about boarding their sons at the 'Hall,' the arrangements being such as to obviate the trouble commonly attendant upon dormitory boarding. A Professor rooming in each wing, coupled with the fact that nearly the entire Faculty live on the campus and college grounds, is a sufficient guarantee of proper environment and protection. As an indication of satisfaction and appreciation the following was written by one of the young men of the 'Hall,' and signed by every boarder:

"We, the undersigned students of Centenary College, have taken our meals for the last year in the 'Hall' conducted by Prof. L. L Upton, and take pleasure in recommending it as being well conducted. Everything is wholesome and well prepared, and better than we could have expected for the money."

You will be welcomed at the "Hall."
Come! L. L. UPTON,
Manager.

THE BEAR AND THE BOY.

About two hundred years ago a rich and powerful nobleman named Leopold was duke of the province of Lorraine. The duke was very fond of animals.

Among his savage pets was a great bear, whose name was Marco.

Marco was housed in a rough hut in a corner of his royal master's park. He was supplied with the best of food by the keeper of the animals; and on state occasions he was led out by a big iron chain and made to dance for the amusement of Leopold's friends.

Marco was fierce; and when he swung his shaggy head out of the door of his hut and showed his white teeth in an ugly snarl, no one dared to go near him. One blow from his paw would have knocked a man senseless, and those white teeth of his were very sharp.

One cold Winter night Marco, having swallowed his supper at a few gulps, shambled back into the farthest corner of his hut and curled himself up to sleep. He was just at the "falling-off" point, when he heard a sound at the house door. He started up; and what should he see but a small boy, hopping first on one foot and then on the other, and shivering with the cold!

The boy was a homeless child, who had lost his way in the duke's forest and had run into the bear's hut for shelter.

Marco did not know who this new comer might be, but he was so surprised that he quite forgot to growl.

Then a strange thing happened—so strange that, if this were not a true story, I should not ask you to believe it. The boy ran over to Marco and, peering into the shaggy face, cried joyfully: "Why, you are the duke's funny bear that I saw dancing the other day! Won't you be my friend? I need one so much."

The bear Marco did not understand what the boy said, but he understood the kind hand that stroked his head. That hand meant, "I love you." Marco had never been loved in all of his rough, bearish life—at least, not since the days before he had been caught in the deep forest, a frightened baby, screaming for his mother.

Now a great answering love filled his wild heart. He allowed the little lad to lie down beside him, warmed by his furry coat, and together they slept through the night.

In the morning the boy went away, but came back to his friend in the evening. This happened for several days. Marco shared his food with his visitor, and they became fast cronies.

One day the keeper was surprised to see that Marco left his supper untouched; and, instead of hurrying away to feed the other animals, he stayed to watch the bear.

Marco sat in the door of his hut, patiently waiting for his boy. The keeper offered to take away the food; but he received such a fierce look that he set it down again and hid behind a tree, to see what would happen next. In a moment, to his amazement, a child ran up to the bear. The keeper sprang forward to snatch him out of harm's way; but the boy had already thrown his arms about his faithful friend, and in a twinkling they finished the waiting supper together.

Duke Leopold was brought to the hut to see this wonderful pair, and soon the story of the boy and the bear had spread throughout the land.

Duke Leopold gave orders that the poor child should be brought to his palace, to be educated and cared for. The little lad made many friends in his beautiful new home, but I think that he never found a dearer one than the bear Marco.—Cora Haviland Carver, in Little Men and Women.

CAN'T YOU GO WITH ME?

A little girl when dying, and her father and mother were mourning, and mourning, the little one, being about eight or nine years old, said to her father: "Papa, you tell me that I must die; can't you come with me? The grave is so dark." Did it ever look dark to you in the grave? And the father said, "I can not go with you to the grave, my child." And then she said to the mother, "Mama, can't you go with me to the grave?" Enough to break the mother's heart, and the mother fell upon her knees and said: "No, I can not go with you there. I can not go with you there." She turned her face towards the wall, and then she thought—she had been in the Sunday-school, she has been hearing the glorious doctrine of the resurrection, and she turned about with a smile and said, "Mama, and Papa, I have found One that will go with me there." "Who is it?" "Jesus: won't He go with me there?" Yes, Jesus will go with you, not only with the little one, but with you. In the cold stream of death, Jesus will be with you there, Christ will be with you there, and you will come forth from the grave again to shine forever and ever in His beauty. Who will have this Christ to be his Savior? Who now is willing to come? May God bless you! "Whosoever will, let him come and drink of the water of life freely."—Exchange.

HER LOVE WAS GREAT.

From China comes a touching story of a native woman whose love for her Savior was so great that she gladly sacrificed a part of her life for the privilege of being able to tell others of Him.

At the Canton hospital, one women who was very ill, heard of Christ and learned to love Him. One day she asked:

"Doctor, how much longer can I live if I stay in the hospital?"

"About four months," was the doctor's reluctant reply.

"And how long if I go home?"

"Not more than two months."

"Then I am going home."

"But you will lose half of the life which is left to you," the doctor objected.

"Do you not think I would be glad to give half my life for the sake of telling my people of Christ's love?"

THE DAUGHTER OF A KING.

Rev. Ernst Gebhardt, a Methodist missionary in Germany, translated the hymn, "I'm the child of a King," into the German, and it became very popular. One Sunday, as the children had been singing it with great delight, the teacher suddenly asked: "How many of you feel that you are 'children of the King'?" A few hands went up. Then she inquired: "How many of you want to be children of the King?" Among the large number of hands that now went up was that of a bright little girl who attracted notice by her intense earnestness. A few weeks later she was attacked by diphtheria, and was soon unable to speak. Making signs for her slate, it was brought to her, and with weak, trembling fingers she slowly and painfully wrote: "I'm the child of a King; with Jesus my Savior." She could write no more, and in a few moments expired, to don her royal robes and sit upon her throne.—Selected.

PLACING THE RESPONSIBILITY.

I have read of a town meeting in Pennsylvania where the question of license was to be decided, says a writer in the Christian Observer. As the question was about to be put, there arose from one corner of the room a miserable female, wrinkled and gaunt, and, stretching out her arms, in a shrill voice, she cried:

"Look upon me. You all know me, or once did. You all know I was once the mistress of the best farm in the township. You all know, too, I had one of the best, the most devoted of husbands. You all know how I had five noble-hearted, industrious boys. Where are they now? Doctor, where are they now? You all know. You all know they lie in a row, side by side, in yonder church-yard—all, every one of them, filling the drunkard's grave! They were all taught to believe that temperate drinking was safe—excess alone ought to be avoided; and they never acknowledged excess. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and prospects with dismay and horror; I felt we were all to be overwhelmed in one common ruin. I tried to ward off the blow, I tried to break the spell—the delusive spell—in which the idea of the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons. I begged, I prayed; but the odds were against me.' And, with her arms flung high, and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch, she exclaimed: "I shall soon stand before the judgment-seat of God—I shall meet you there, you false guides, and be a witness against you all!"

She spoke and vanished. But when the chairman put the question, "Shall any license be granted for the sale of spiritous liquors?" the response was unanimous—"No!"

GRANDMOTHER'S REMEDY.

"Girls don't have to do anything!" declared Bobby, as he sat down with a thump on the shoebox in Grandmother's room. "Girls don't have to feed hens or fill the woodbox! I wish I was a girl, so I do!"

"Girls don't have to do anything!" exclaimed Grandma Stone in surprise. "Well, well, well! You come with me a minute, Bobby, and we'll see if you are right."

Bobby followed Grandmother into the sitting-room. But when they got there both were surprised, for, sitting in the big rocker, was Beth, her eyes full of tears.

"I wish I was a boy, same as Bobby!" she said, sorrowfully. "I'm tired as anything of dusting rooms. Boys don't have to dust or mend stockings or do anything! Oh, dear, dear dear!" and Beth hid her curly head in the duster and sobbed.

"Well, I never did!" exclaimed Grandmother. "Suppose you do Bobby's work to-day and he will do yours. I know that he will be delighted to change work with you."

But would you believe it! Grandma was mistaken, for Bobby shook his head.

"I'm going to feed the hens myself," he said.

Beth wiped her eyes in a hurry. "Girls never fill wood-boxes," she murmured.

Then they both laughed and stopped grumbling for that day. So, you see, Grandmother's remedy was a wise one, after all.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

Regeneration strikes the fatal blow in the realm of thought. Here is the tragic Waterloo. God proposes to qualify us for a great victory over the dominion of a sin-principle. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers. The carnal mind is at enmity against God. See the wisdom in the transformation of thought through a perfect redemption! The mind is like a mold. Thought—next in rank to principle, back of which analysis will not go—is stamped and fashioned after the similitude of the mental mold. Thought is the determining fiber that enters the fabric of character. In the new birth, the first fires of divine cleansing regenerate the mind. We find the solution of that command: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." The mentality of the Son of God must gain supremacy. Old things pass away, all things become new.—Exchange.

We hear it often said that life is but a day. It is said to express the shortness of our stay upon the earth. It is said, for the most part, sorrowfully. Let us reverse it and say, with more striking truth, that each day is a life. Every day is a life, fresh with reinstated power, setting out on its allotted labor and limited path. Its morning resembles a whole youth. Its eventide is sobering into age. It is rounded at either end by a sleep—unconsciousness at the outset and oblivion at the close. We are born anew every time that the sun rises and lights up the world for man to do his part in it. One thing at least may be shown of each day, as it dawns and darkens: it is that every one, short as it may be, embodies the fullness of the past and indicates what is long afterwards to come.—A Day's Duty.

Dandy, a Newfoundland, used to be given coppers to buy himself rolls. But one day he was observed to buy a roll when no money had been given him. Search was made in the room where the dog slept, and when the servant examined his straw bed the dog protested vigorously and tried to drag her away. At last it was discovered that he had hoarded seven pence half-penny beneath the straw.—The Evangelist.

That all who are happy are equally happy, is not true. A peasant and a philospher may be equally satisfied, but not equally happy.—Johnson.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc.

FRANCIS CASEY St. Louis, Mo.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

With these three things you can wash. Just so you can do many other things that are tiresome, unhealthy, unpleasant and wasteful. If it's necessary, well and good; but it isn't with PEARLINE washing. PEARLINE'S way is best, easiest, quickest, most economical—no soap, no washboard, no rubbing, little work—best results. 635

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

Died June 22, in his eighty-second year, Mr. CLAIBORNE BOWMAN, at his home, the residence of his son, in Yazoo county. Born in Pike county, this State, his father, Judge Richardson Bowman, with his wife, two daughters and the deceased, settled on land in Yazoo county in 1827, this property being still in the family. His father was a successful planter and business man, having a store on the plantation, and there the subject of this notice acquired the rudiments of business. During the Fall and Winter of 1835 to 1837 he was in the employment of a large cotton firm in this place, then called Manchester. When not so engaged his time was given to the plantation, his father's death having occurred in 1831. After the death of his mother, in 1840, he became virtually the head of the family, devoting undivided attention to its affairs and to the education of his sisters and brothers—duties which he most faithfully and intelligently discharged. In 1853 he was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Hays, widow of Mr. W. C. Hays, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stephens, all of this county. His marriage was fortunate and congenial, and there was never a happier home than theirs. With his wife came the lovely and affectionate daughter, Rebekah, now the wife of Dr. Henry Yandell, a former resident of Yazoo county, a most skillful and popular physician. This happy union, however, did not last long, as on March 15, 1855, the wife and mother died, leaving, besides her daughter, their infant son, Richie. For many years this daughter and son, both of kind and loving dispositions, cheered his home, and no father could have been more devoted and considerate. His wife being already a member of the Methodist Church, soon after their marriage he joined, and ever remained thoroughly consistent, always helpful to the preachers, many of whom were often entertained at his hospitable home. March 21, 1871, he married Miss Susan S. McCann, a member of the Presbyterian Church, a pious and most estimable lady, related by blood to some of the most honorable families of South Carolina. Her death occurred in 1898. His neighbors and friends, appreciating his public spirit and qualifications, elected him a member of the county Board of Police, and in 1851 a member of the State Legislature. During the first Cleveland administration he was postmaster of this place, always discharging the duties of the office with ability and the strictest fidelity. Since the removal of Dr. Yandell's family in 1889 to Washington State he has made his home with his son. For the past few years he had suffered with an incurable malady. The constant and untiring attentions of his nephew, Dr. Yandell Swayze, and Dr. J. W. C. Smith could not arrest, only alleviate the disease. His latter days were constantly cheered by the unwearying devotion of his son and of each member of his household. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. C. Evans, pastor of Benton and Midway Churches, and Rev. J. D. Burks (Baptist) at the residence Sunday afternoon following his death, and the interment, attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and acquaintances, took place at the old family graveyard, under the impressive rites of the Masonic fraternity, of which he had long been a member. He leaves to mourn his loss, in addition to his son and daughter, one sister, Mrs. Mary Jenkins, of Holmes county, and two brothers, Judge Robert Bowman, of this place, and Mr. John W. Bowman, of this county. Memorial services were held in the Methodist Church here, of which he was a member during his residence in this city. Thus we mark the passing away of a good man. His life remains a pleasing memory to his friends. X X

Yazoo City, Miss.

FRANCES JULIA MCKAY, daughter of Daniel and Miriam Mimms McKay, was born Nov. 25, 1829, near Vicksburg, in the Porter Chapel neighborhood, and died July 4, 1900, at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Quick, near Mylee, Miss. Her parents were natives of North Carolina, having moved about two years prior to her birth from that State. Both were of wealthy families, and thus she grew to young womanhood in the love of a large and refined family, surrounded by every luxury that wealth could afford. She was married to Mr. Faulkner, a noble gentleman of Vicksburg, Oct. 5, 1848, with whom she lived happily for nearly four years, when death claimed him and the youngest little daughter, and they were laid to rest in the same grave. November 14, 1854, she was married to Rev. Vernon H. Johnston, of the Mississippi Conference. They lived sweetly together until June 20, 1862, when death again left her without an earthly protector, and with four little girls to care for. Two of them preceded her many years to the better land. She was entirely broken up by the war, and had to labor for years to maintain and educate her two remaining children. Through all of her poverty, sickness and trouble she was never heard to utter a complaint against her kind Heavenly Father. Her faith increased as the years passed until there was perfect trust in her Savior. She was kind, generous, and possessed many noble traits of character. She joined the Methodist Church when young, and lived consistently to the end. She was a woman of deep spirituality, of marked integrity and spotless character. We miss her at every turn—at church, at home, in society, and everywhere. She was a profound Christian, seeking to know the deep things of the Spirit. She dwelt amid the high places of the kingdom of her Lord. There were no heights of faith that she did not earnestly desire, and there were but few, if any, that she did not attain. She talked of her visit to the better world just as if she were going to make a visit to all friends. She was recognized by all who knew her as a consecrated and devout woman. Converted in her youth, she was marked throughout her life by deep piety that left its impress upon all who knew her. She leaves two daughters, an aged brother, and many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Let us rejoice in the fact that she has gone into that land of eternal day, where there shall be no more night. R. F. WITT.

MISS FLOYE PERVY was born Aug. 30, 1877 and died of congestion June 15, 1901. Thus passed from earth to heaven the jewel of another home. Miss Floye joined the Methodist Church at about the age of twelve years. She was soundly converted at about the age of eighteen years, just previous to a severe spell of typhoid fever. This conversion took place in the quietude of the home near the hour of midnight. While Miss Floye was always good, yet her conversion left the divine stamp upon her. Her associates were unable to decoy her off into frivolity. The light of her Christian spirit was not a hidden one. Her feet associated thoughts of each day were with her Lord. Her lamp upon the floor, her Bible in her lap, there she humbly studied the Word of God. In all my acquaintance I have yet to meet one more universally loved. Both sinner and saint seem to think it a high privilege to praise her pure, attractive life. On the funeral occasion, though it was on Monday, the church would not hold the people. Each one was eager to pay their last respects. No pains were spared for her welfare here; no doubts can be had of her safety yonder. Oh, what a consolation this should be! Dear loved ones, we can only point you to the Lord, who doeth all things well. He has blessed you with this pure, saintly life, the memory of which should be power sufficient to anchor all her loved ones safe in heaven. God grant you the abiding presence of her dear Savior.

Her pastor, H. W. LANNERTAN.

LIZZIE J. DIXON, only daughter of J. N. and Angelina Conerly, was born Aug. 26, 1869. She was married to James A. Dixon, July 28, 1889, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Mt. Hermon, La., July 29, 1889, while Rev. J. H. Evans was pastor. She died in full assurance of hope on April 1, 1901, her only regret being that of separation from her only child, an infant of a few days; but even in this she expressed resignation, commending it to God. Sister Dixon was true to her church, faithful in attendance upon its ordinances, and intelligently alive to all of its interests. Many are the golden tributes coming from those who knew her best as to her worth and kindness in her home, her value as a neighbor and friend, and her readiness to help in every laudable undertaking for the good of others. To the bereaved husband, mother and infant child we extend sympathy, commending them to the God of mercy and love, who alone can comfort in such times of bereavement; and to the host of sorrowing friends would say: Live as she lived, and meet her again.

After taking Wine of Cardui, thousands like you have realized it. Wine of Cardui insures freedom from female diseases. At each recurring menstrual period, if care be not taken, slight ailments will appear. Nervous strain, loss of sleep, cold or indigestion start disorders which are not noticeable at first, but day by day steadily grow into troublesome complications. Wine of Cardui, used just before the menstrual period, will keep the female system in perfect condition and render it invulnerable to disease. The medicine is taken quietly at home. There is nothing like it to help women enjoy good health. Wine of Cardui costs only $1. Test this remedy, which is indorsed by 1,000,000 cured women.

Cairo, Ky., Sept. 6, 1899.

I take pleasure in writing a few lines in praise of your wonderful medicine, Wine of Cardui. It is the best medicine I ever heard of. I am thirty-six years old and have been sick all my life. I had a dozen doctors, but none of them did me any good. I have taken one bottle of Wine of Cardui and will take another with Black-Draught. I have been married six years and have a baby five years old. I had womb and kidney trouble. My monthly period was so bad that sometimes it came twice a month. I was too sick to do work for a family of three. I was in bed when I got the bottle of Wine of Cardui. Now I am up and can do most of my work. When I was sick I could not sleep at night. I sleep well at night now. A friend of mine advised me to use Black-Draught with Wine of Cardui. Mrs. ETTA KILLMAN,

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me. Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of a long-standing case of chills and fever by using two bottles.
J. C. STANLEY,
Engineer E. T., Va. & Ga. R. R.

Maxlay's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of a case of heart disease and indigestion of four years standing. I tried a dozen different medicines. None but Lemon Elixir done me any good.
TULES DIEHL,
Cor. Habersham and St. Thomas Sts., Savannah, Ga.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

I fully endorse it for nervous prostration, headache, indigestion and constipation, having used it with most satisfactory results, after all other remedies had failed. J. W. ROLLO.

REV. H. W. KNICKERBOCKER WITHDRAWS FROM THE CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR: For the sake of authenticity, will you please publish this letter?

Ten years ago I entered the Methodist ministry, and yesterday I stood for the last time in the Methodist pulpit. At the last session of the Los Angeles Annual Conference, held in October, 1900, a number of my brethren questioned the soundness of my doctrinal views, though no formal charges of heresy were made. At that time I did not think that I was in discord with the essential doctrines of Methodism, but in a statement made to that body I said, "If there should ever come a time in my life-history when I find that I am out of harmony with the essential doctrines of Methodism, I shall surrender the credentials which I can no longer honestly hold."

That time has come and gone. On the thirteenth day of June, 1901, I wrote to Bishop Duncan, tendering him my credentials, and telling him that I would hold the pulpit at Trinity Church until he could find and appoint my successor. His response was a very kind and brotherly letter, for which I was deeply grateful. He asked me if I could not revise my plans. Being assured that I could not, he appointed Dr. W. M. Leftwich as my successor, and to him I surrendered my pulpit on yesterday.

To leave the Methodist Church, the church of my childhood, the church of my family, the church to which I owe a debt that never can be paid, to break the ties of association and friendship of a life-time, is the saddest experience I have known. I go, not because I want to, but because I ought to. Indeed, believing as I do, it was morally imperative that I should take this step. There is nothing but love in my heart for the church, and all of her members, and I pray that God, who worketh in and through all things for the accomplishment of his purposes, may guide us all.

Sincerely,

HERMANN W. KNICKERBOCKER.

GOING ABROAD.

BY REV. H. C. MOREHEAD.

DEAR ADVOCATE: Since my earliest recollection there has always been to me a peculiar interest and charm in going on a visit, but this one specially above all others. The visit itself was born in thoughtful love. Our own dear children suggested it, and with the good wife and her mother provided the means necessary for the trip. For the first time in life the good wife is with me to enjoy all that is to be enjoyed. Then, too, the dear old mother and other relatives are with us. And besides all this, it has been the dream of my life to go to California; and being realized in the way it is, makes it indeed an exquisite pleasure.

Monday, July 8, was our starting day. As the time approached for our starting, our party grew beautifully less, but we had a select number, all the same. Mrs. Dr. Evans and Mrs. M. sees what is to be seen, and keeps us interested and entertained.

After bidding adieu to a few friends who had assembled at the depot to witness our departure and bid us God-speed, we were soon rolling through the beautiful prairies of the eastern part of our noble Commonwealth. As the sable shades of night drew their drapery about us, and cut off our vision, we were among the corn and cotton fields and ever-present and ever-welcome Sambos of our fair Southland. While the stars showered their smiles of light and love on us we sped through the fair States of Tennessee and Kentucky, and when the golden light of the new day streamed through our windows we were passing through the fertile fields of Southwestern Illinois. What changes occur in a little while! Negroes are now scarce, and as they come aboard the train to go from one point to another, they go into the same coach and sit with other folk; and they seem to relish it, too. Everywhere wheat, oats, corn and clover and grass gladden the eye of the beholder, but King Cotton is conspicuously absent.

At St. Louis we were made conscious of the fact that the International League Conference is still a drawing card. We had hoped, by starting early, to avoid the crowd along the way; but when we struck the throng, our minds were readily disabused of this fond delusion. Here our tickets had to be exchanged, and while there was a large and competent clerical force ready at the helm for service, the crowd of Leaguers to be served made the train more than one hour late in leaving the city. Missouri is much like Illinois in production. The waving wheat and oats and the nodding corn, the spreading and extensive meadow and the laughing stream, are things of beauty and joys forever.

Our time in Kansas City, like that of St. Louis, was all too short—only enough to get the refreshing soda cream and some nice and much-needed fruits.

Kansas is a great State. All night and most of the following day we were speeding through its broad and onward-extending plains. The eastern and middle sections—and western, too, as to that—with sufficient moisture, have the possibilities of fabulous production. When the problem of moisture is solved—if ever—Kansas alone has the possibilities to supply this great nation with wheat. But at present a large part of the State is worthless, except for grazing; and at this time, for lack of moisture, this is quite poor. Everywhere, though, the jack-rabbit, prairie-dog, and his companion and associate, the owl, are in evidence. For several hours we were subjected to the hot winds of these dry, barren plains. The positive and absolute relief, and the great joy of passing from this desert of death to beautiful life, can hardly be imagined. Moisture is the secret of it all. The ingenuity of man has harnessed the forces of nature, and now what was once a worthless plain is as luxuriant and as fertile as a garden. Damming the Colorado river, traversing the surface of the plain with irrigating ditches, explains it all. It is not the introduction of anything new, but simply the wise and right use of that that already existed. The introduction of life-producing water through these irrigating ditches does not send the thrill of life through all the country, but only to those parts and places brought into contact with it. As I mused on this wondrous beauty I thought it represented the barren soil of the human heart; the application of the water of life, the Holy Spirit, and when and wherever done, the wonderful effect. Instead of death there is life. This is no fancy. Thousands of instances everywhere witness to its truth. And then, as I thought on this line, I said: Salvation, to be effective, the individual must be brought in contact with it. The salvation of our Lord has been flowing through our land for the centuries, but still there are human souls as barren of life and love as though there had been no river of water of life, simply because it had not touched them. And then I thought, when all of that barren plain is brought in touch with this life-producing element—water—the whole of it will bloom as the rose of Sharon. So, too, when the water of life touches every part of the human family, vitalizing, thrilling, saving and sanctifying through and through, the transcendant beauty of the millennial dawn will be realized. The irrigating ditches are being multiplied, the barren places are being touched. Oh, that the time would hasten when the love of our Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea!

STUDENTS' CONFERENCE.

BY J. S. PURCELL, JR.

The eighth annual Southern Students' Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at the Bingham School, Asheville, N. C., June 21-30. It was a grand success. There were 126 young men representing the various institutions of the South, thirty-eight speakers, teachers and visitors—all filled with the word and spirit of God. We, as students, felt as Peter when on the Mount of Transfiguration—"Lord, it is good for us to be here."

With the Christ-like help of such men as Rev. C. R. Erdman, Mr. J. C. White, of Calcutta, India; Mr. R. E. Speer, Rev. H. C. Buckholz, Chester, S. C., and Rev. Stone, New York City, as speakers, and D. O. Shelton, Rev. R. M. Hodge, Mr. F. W. Anderson, H. M. Mollhany, Jr.; F. B. Edward, and others, as teachers, many young men came to a decision in life-work. Some volunteered for foreign fields, others for home work. All became enthused in the Y. M. C. A. work, and formed plans and made resolutions for better work in their institutions next year. May God's Spirit enable them to put to practice what they have seen and heard, and carry out those noble resolutions! We all ask more earnest aid of both faculties and students, that the Y. M. C. A. may have such an influence upon the young men that the day will soon come when no young man will go out from college without Christ in his heart. If the world is Christianized, we must first get the college men to be Christians, for they are the most influential men of today. God forbid that any institution should send out a non-Christian man to be a leader of men.

Brethren, pray God for more Christian work in the colleges of our land.

THE VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Vicksburg District Conference met at Bolton, Thursday morning, July 11; the presiding elder, Rev. E. H. Mounger, D. D., in the chair, and presiding in an able manner, with ease, grace, and dignity. All the itinerant preachers save two, several local preachers and laymen were present. On the whole, the attendance was very good, though the local preachers and laymen did not attend in full force.

Several visitors were in attendance: Rev. M. L. Burton, vice-president and business manager of Whitworth Female College; Rev. W. T. Griffin, agent for the Orphans' Home; Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Forest; Rev. R. Selby, of Brandon, and Rev. W. H. Monnger, of the Indian Mission Conference, who has charge of the South Vicksburg work.

Reports from the various pastoral charges were encouraging, showing the condition of the district to be very healthful. Revivals have been held on some of the charges, resulting in spiritual uplift to many and a number of accessions to the church.

The preaching was done by Revs. W. T. Griffin, M. M. Black, L. S. Jones, B. F. Lewis, J. G. Cammack, and R. F. Witt, each of them presenting the gospel in all its fullness and purity, encouraging their hearers to deeper consecration and more zealous work for the Lord.

The subject of missions was brought prominently before the Conference in a sermon by Rev. L. S. Jones, the reading of interesting papers, and the passing of resolutions. A missionary campaign was organized for the district, and each pastoral charge requested to hold a Missionary Rally. "The world for Christ!" is the battle-cry of the soldiers of the cross.

Revs. H. T. Carley, J. S. Newsom and F. E. Singleton were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission, the latter named having been licensed to preach at this Conference.

The following delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: E. S. Drake, W. J. Bell, T. A. Holloman, and Dr. G. E. Ellis, with W. A. Price and J. S. Newsom, alternates.

Bro. Carley and the people of Bolton made everybody comfortable and happy, for which suitable resolutions were adopted by the Conference and read at the conclusion before the public congregation.

GEO. P. MCKEOWN, Sec.

Whereas, Intemperance is one of the giant evils of the age; And, whereas, A dozen, or more, counties of our Commonwealth are still unemancipated from the saloon; And, whereas, In some sections where prohibition has carried, public sentiment is lamentably lax in regard to whisky drinking and illegal whisky selling; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Vicksburg District Conference, that we continue to wage unceasing and relentless war on the rum traffic until every drunkard factory is banished from our borders.

Resolved, That our preachers be requested to preach more frequently on the subject of temperance, and that we urge upon them to distribute temperance literature, and to use all possible means of instructing the people, especially the rising generation, as regards the awful ruin wrought by rum.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the action of our last Annual Conference requesting all of our ministers to co-operate with the W. C. T. U. in their efforts to secure the scientific temperance instruction of children.

T. A. HOLLOMAN.

CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Corinth District Conference convened at New Albany, Miss., July 11-14, 1901. A large number were in attendance, all the pastors in the district being present, and a larger number of laymen than usual. The Conference was noted for the harmony of action among the members and the display of brotherly love among the brethren. It was a very spiritual Conference. The presiding elder, Rev. W. M. Young, by his uniform kindness and courtesy, made all feel at ease, and even the local preacher felt at liberty upon the floor of the Conference. He is an admirable presiding officer as well as a fine preacher.

The first day was devoted to the Sunday-school Conference, and a very interesting programme, previously prepared, was discussed with profit. The reports from the work showed an improvement in the Sunday-school interests in the district, there being a larger number of schools and a larger number of scholars than before.

Friday's session was given to the work of hearing the pastors' reports of their respective charges, all of which represented the church in the district to be in a prosperous condition. For several years the Corinth district has been growing, and this year promises to be the best in its history. With the present outlook we dare to express the belief that the time is not far distant when it will be among the best in our Conference.

Among the visitors were Dr. W. B. Murrah and Mrs. W. M. McIntosh, who addressed the Conference in behalf of Millsaps and Grenada Colleges, respectively, showing both schools to be in a prosperous condition and doing good work.

Dr. J. W. Boswell was also present, making himself agreeable with the brethren and talking up our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and preaching an able sermon at 11 o'clock on Sunday.

Rev. W. T. Griffin presented the cause of the Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home, taking a collection amounting to one hundred and forty-five dollars.

Miss Emma Gary, a returned missionary from China, delivered an entertaining address on the subject, "China."

Bro. Bachman was present looking after the Sunday-school interests and selling good books.

We were glad to have with us for a couple of days Revs. Q. A. Oats and K. M. Harrison, from the Aberdeen district.

Four young men were licensed to preach, viz.: C. N. Richardson, W. R. Goodelock, W. L. Storment, and T. J. Hopper.

Rev. J. A. Goad was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial into the traveling connection.

The lay delegates elected to the Annual Conference were: Dr. J. Y. Murry, Hon. G. L. Jones, Rev. M. T. McLain, L. P., and G. P. Hammerly, with H. W. Rees and T. Bynum as alternates.

The session of the Conference was held in the beautiful new church at New Albany. The entertainment by these good people was royal. The attendance by the town people upon the business sessions, as well as upon the preaching services, was very large. The pastor, Rev. K. A. Jones, with Rev. J. B. Randolph and others, were deeply interested and attentive to have nothing lacking for the comfort and pleasure of the Conference.

The next Conference goes to Dumas.

RANDOLPH A. TUCKER, Secretary.

DEATH OF REV. JNO. F. EVANS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: At 5:40 P. M., Saturday, July 6, 1901, the pure spirit of that guileless man, Rev. Jno. F. Evans, went home to God. At 5 o'clock the next afternoon, Sunday, July 7, we laid his body to rest in the Valden Cemetery. A notice was mailed to the ADVOCATE on Sunday night, but, for some reason, it did not appear in last week's issue.

Bro. Evans was seriously ill two months ago, but he rallied from this attack, and although ever afterwards quite feeble, he was apparently growing stronger when he was suddenly and violently stricken early Tuesday morning preceding his death on Saturday. The disease baffled all medical skill, although several physicians were in attendance. There were complicated organic troubles, and it is doubtful whether the doctors were ever fully satisfied as to the diagnosis. His sufferings were great, but his end was peaceful and triumphant. He lost consciousness soon after the noon hour of Saturday. For some hours previous to that time, at brief intervals, he recognized friends and talked calmly and dispassionately of his approaching dissolution. A number of times he exclaimed, "I want to go home," and a little later, "I'm going home." Just before he died he repeated with unusual vigor the words, "The way, the truth, and the life," and as life's frail bark left the shores of time, and weighed anchor for eternity, the man of God, raising his weary eyes, and waving his hand as if to bid adieu to those behind, uttered the words, "All is well." This was about the last intelligible speech that fell from his lips. This whole community is bereaved, for he was loved and honored of all. During the six months of our intimate association he seemed like a father to the writer. Funeral services were largely attended. It was his wish to be buried in Valden. This was expressed some years ago, and again during his last illness. The writer was assisted in the funeral services by the following brethren: Revs. G. W. Bachman, T. Y. Ramsey, W. S. Shipman, and J. C. Park. Rev. Mr. Hamon, of the Presbyterian Church, also participated.

A suitable memoir, prepared by his most intimate Conference comrade and life-long friend, will appear in due time.

Miscellaneous Notes.

It was announced a few weeks since that Dr. S. A. Steel would connect himself with an industrial school for girls at Athens, Ala. The Doctor gave out that he had $100,000 in sight to help him in his work. Now it is announced that he has been elected to the presidency of Logan Female College, Russellville, Ky., and that he has accepted the position.

The heated term now upon the country has been unprecedented in many sections, and hundreds of deaths have been the result. This editor was in Byhalia, Miss., when the thermometer was at the highest, the mercury ranging in private instruments from 101° to 106°, according to location. New Orleans at that time was a pleasant Summer resort, compared to any point in North Mississippi.

Gov. Dockery has set an example that other executives might follow in time of distress. He issued a call to the people of Missouri to observe July 21 as a day of fasting and prayer, and to assemble in their usual places of worship, and to call upon God to avert the disaster threatened on account of the prevailing drouth. We have national thanksgiving days, and call upon God in time of pestilence; why not pray for rain?

According to all accounts, the International Epworth League Convention, which has just closed its session at San Francisco, was the largest in attendance ever held. Notwithstanding the great distance and expense, the attractions of the route and the oft-told tale of the glories of California was too much for the young folks—and some old ones. We dare say many of the excursionists never before had an idea of the bigness of their country.

The first issue of Go Forward, the new paper launched by the Board of Missions of our church, has been received. It is a monthly paper, 16 pages the size of the Epworth Era; price, 25 cents a year. It is filled with excellent matter concerning missions and missionaries, well edited and well arranged. Surely, if low-priced papers is what our people demand, they can not complain at the price of this. We like everything about this paper except the name.

The most delightful spot we have found anywhere in recent years is Seashore Camp Ground. During these hot days it gives one a sense of relief even to think of the place, if he has ever been there. Not the least of the blessings of the place is the pure artesian water, as clear as crystal, good to the taste, and healthy. The grounds will be open until the first of November. It is not too late for the heat-stricken of our towns and cities to go down there and rest. The good water and sea-bathing will help them.

THE UNFORGOTTEN DEAD.

DR. JOHN T. BASKERVILLE.

It is refreshing to recall the face of Dr. John T. Baskerville. His name is cherished with pleasure. I often heard his character discussed when I was a child, and in my boyish mind and heart I admired him and entertained a secret desire to see him. He was a great friend of my father, and I admired anybody that loved him. When I first saw him I was not disappointed. I thought I looked into the face of a great and good man, and years of after-acquaintance worked no change. I do not mean to say that he was great in the way that the world estimates greatness, but he lacked no virtue essential to a Christian, and in some he was pre eminent. His Christian character, his zeal for the Master, his experience in grace, his well-stored mind and ability to impart instruction, all conspired to make him great. His services, when in the active work, were in demand, and proved exceedingly valuable to the church.

Dr. Baskerville was born in Mecklenburg county, Va., Feb. 17, 1802. He studied medicine, and graduated in the profession in Baltimore at the early age of nineteen. How long he engaged in the practice of medicine, the few historical facts before us do not say: about seventeen years, we judge, as he was not licensed to preach until February, 1839. It was near this time that he commenced his itinerant career, which was spent wholly in the Memphis Conference, with, perhaps, the exception of his first, when that part of the work in which he labored was embraced in the Tennessee Conference. His educational acquirements, together with his bright mind and business qualities, brought him into prominence almost at the beginning of his life as a preacher. One year after he joined the Conference he was appointed to Somerville station. He filled the place two years. This was unusual at that day for one so young in the ministry. His next appointment was to the agency of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, at Jackson, Tenn. His services in establishing that school, it is said, "were invaluable." His work abides. His success in this line called for his energies as agent of La-Grange College, in Alabama, then the joint property of the Tennessee and Memphis Conferences. He spent six years in the field in the interest of these two schools—from 1843 to 1849. After this he was appointed to circuit work. He traveled the Wesley circuit, and then the Somerville—each two years. These charges were as "good appointments" as Southern Methodism afforded. No man shunned them at that day because they were circuits, and the Doctor "served them with just pride, referring to them often as the very best representatives of the great missionary enterprise of our church." At the close of his pastorate on Somerville circuit he was placed on the supernumerary list, and there remained until the close of his useful life—May 1, 1873. He was twice married—first to Miss Margaret P. Malone, and next to Mrs. A. T. Hare, whose maiden name was Ware. His first wife left him three children—one daughter and two sons. The elder son was for several years a popular and useful preacher in the Memphis Conference; the younger is today a professor in Vanderbilt University, and one of the brightest members of the faculty.

The Doctor was above medium height, slender and slightly stoop-shouldered, with fair, or rather florid, complexion, large nose, and small hazel eyes as bright as diamonds. His hair, when I knew him, was white. He was exceedingly active in his movements, spoke rapidly, and had a habit, much after the style of Bishop Early, of repeating words and phrases. This he did often when it was not at all necessary to emphasis. It was purely a habit. He was an impulsive and excitable man, and when under the influence of a good sermon or speech of any kind, he was sure to be heard even if he had to stop the speaker. When the fire burned, like the Psalmist, he was obliged to speak. Nobody thought it strange. It was just like him. He was sui generis in nature, characteristics and methods.

As a preacher, he was useful, but never took high rank in popular estimation. This was so not because his sermons were lacking in thought or learning or other essential elements, but because of the manner of delivery. His voice was not pleasant, and his language sometimes abrupt. Many men with half his sense and learning were more popular as preachers. He was not a dull preacher to sharp ears, and to those who attended service for the purpose of worshiping God, he was an edifying preacher. He was clear, methodical and earnest in the presentation of the truth, as orthodox as Richard Watson, and like St. Peter, a son of thunder. He forged thunderbolts and hurled them at sin in language so plain and pointed that the most obtuse could not fail to understand. He struck from the shoulder—aimed at a mark and hit it. The sin and the character singled out were named, and if a guilty party happened to be present, he was sure to feel the force of his heavy blows. He was equally plain and earnest in enforcing the practical duties of the Christian life, and he practiced what he preached. This was well known, and it gave emphasis to his speech. He was impulsive in his preaching as in everything else, and frequently said things in a way many people thought to be out of place; but he never intended to be unkind or coarse: he was too much of a Christian for the one, and too much of a gentleman for the other. He desired to be understood. He read the books; knew what was in them, but he was not pedantic. His habit of study was maintained until the last; he kept pace with the times; was up with the current of thought, but never imbibed any sentiment contrary to sound doctrine. In these respects he was a model preacher.

Dr. Baskerville excelled in the graces of the gospel. The depth of his personal piety and the amount of his religious enjoyment we may never know. If we judge by the outward expression—not in words, but in deeds—we are assured that the one was not shallow, nor the other lacking. He was charitable in the Pauline sense. He loved God and his fellow-man; was always ready to advance the glory of the Master, and to benefit his race. He was particularly zealous in the cause of missions. In his active days our church was more interested in the welfare of the slaves of the South than in missions to foreign lands. The Doctor was behind no man in devotion to the spiritual interests of that class. He owned many slaves; knew their nature, character and needs. He knew how teachable they were under the influence of the gospel, and did all he could to save them. One room of his dwelling was set apart and fitted up for their convenience in worship. He called them together morning and night; he prayed with them, and they prayed with him and his family. He preached to them, held class meeting among them, and together they sang and shouted. What he did for his own servants he tried to do for others. The cause was on his heart, and nothing so stirred his sympathetic and loving soul as a searching sermon on missions: and he was among the foremost of the men of princely liberality on Wesley circuit when the annual collection for missions was raised. The amount was not always contributed in dollars: leading men gave "bales of cotton." The writer has seen more bales of cotton subscribed for missions in half an hour at Wesley Camp Ground than many rich men give in dollars for a whole year. Much of this liberality was due to the lead and influence of Dr. Baskerville. He was just as liberal in the support of the ministry, and in donations to men who had no claims on his means. Besides these qualities, he had others which justly commended him to good society and to all Christians. He was clean-handed and a man of pure words.

Many anecdotes are told of the good Doctor—some of them because they are amusing, others because they are true; all because they illustrate his singular character. At a certain town during the early years of his ministry he held a love-feast. When the meeting was open for short talks on Christian experience the brethren and sisters were slow to begin. The Doctor was surprised, and, looking around in his peculiar way, began to exhort them to speak. As nobody seemed inclined, he thought it best to call them out by name. The first called was an old and saintly sister. The next was a brother named Ned Davis, almost a perfect duplicate of Ned Brace, a famous character in Georgia Scenes. When Brother Davis arose he was already at the weeping-point, and commenced talking in a trembling voice: "Brethren and sisters, I was the only son of wealthy parents." "Yes," said the Doctor, "and badly spoiled at that" "I grew up," continued Davis, "a very wicked and wayward boy, engaged in all the follies of the day; and reared as I was, I found it hard to break off my sins; and even after my conversion it was difficult for me to keep religious." "Yes," responded the Doctor, "it's a hard matter for him to be religious. He's the hardest man to keep in the church I ever saw." "But," added Davis, "it was my fortune to marry a good Christian woman, and she has been a great blessing and help to me in my Christian life." "Yes," urged the Doctor, "if you'd always do what your wife tells you, you'd do better than you do now, sir." That ended the relation of Brother Davis' experience, but the love-feast continued. I saw the Doctor once roused to the highest pitch of enthusiasm under a strong sermon on missions. In the midst of the discourse the preacher told of a large planter in Mississippi who, at a time of great excitement about negro insurrection, said he was "not afraid of living negroes, but of dead ones—afraid to meet them at the judgment," because he had failed to do his duty by them. The Doctor was overcome, and, jumping to his, feet, exclaimed: "Brother B! Brother B! Please stop and let me tell an anecdote." The preacher stopped, and he told his missionary story, and then said: "Now, go on, Brother B." The preacher proceeded in his vigorous style, as though nothing had occurred, but the Doctor's enthusiasm did not abate, and with the planter's words ringing in his ears, he continued for several minutes to encourage the preacher: "Give it to them, Brother B. Ah, those dead negroes! those dead negroes! They will confront us at the judgment. Give it to them, Brother B." The congregation was not disturbed, and the collection that day was one of the largest on record.

The Doctor and Uncle Ad. Manly, a noted and useful local preacher, held a meeting at a place popularly known as "The Corner." They labored until both were tired, and one evening called on Brother Goode, a Protestant Methodist, and an old man. His time-limit for preaching was two hours. Knowing his failing, when he consented to preach, the Doctor judiciously added: "Short and sweet, Brother Goode: short and sweet." It was then arranged for Brother Manly to exhort and call mourners. All the preachers occupied the pulpit, and Brother Manly fell asleep. Bro. Goode occupied one hour on the first proposition, and then deliberately announced, "Secondly; and here," said he, "a broad field opens before us." The Doctor thought it was too broad, and did not intend that his meeting should be killed in that way, and he shouted out: "Call the mourners, Brother Manly, call the mourners! The preacher is going to preach all night." This waked Uncle Ad., and thinking the time had come, he rose up and commenced exhorting with all his might. The old preacher didn't comprehend the situation. He thought he had "struck it rich," and fired afresh, for a little while, he laid on with power. But the two were more than a match for him, and he was soon drowned out. The Doctor did right, but his method was amusing.

The generosity of Dr. Baskerville was well known, and it was exhibited in the most natural and ingenuous way. Soon after the war he met an old friend, a preacher. They had not seen each other for a long time. The conversation elicited the fact that his old friend was short of supplies. They met at a flouring mill about half way between their homes. When about to part the Doctor said: "Brother B., I want you to come to see me. If you'll come, I'll give you ten bushels of wheat." They lingered a little, and the offer was increased: "If you'll come to see me, I'll give you fifteen bushels of wheat." That was tempting; the preacher all the while promising to visit him. Still they lingered and talked, and the amount was again increased: "If you'll come to see me, Brother B., I'll give you twenty bushels of wheat." They finally parted, and the Doctor's last words were: "Brother B., I'll send that wheat to the mill for you." And he was as good as his word. And many such like deeds Dr. Baskerville was in the habit of doing. "The liberal soul deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand."

Noble, open-hearted, liberal Dr. Baskerville! The fervid preacher, the lover of his race, the consecrated man of God, he laid all on the Lord's altar. He did not trust in his riches, but in the living God, who gave him all things richly to enjoy. He distributed freely, willingly communicated, and laid up in store for himself a good foundation against the time to come, and laid hold on eternal life. He passed away in peace, and lives in heaven.

LETTER FROM KOREA.

BY DR. R. A. HARDIE.

Much of the two months of the quarter ending March 31 was spent in getting settled in our new home. Nearly all the Sundays of this time, however, were taken up in conducting Dr. McGill's services in this port. The last month was spent in the interior in the province of Kang Won, largely in one place, Chi-Kyung-Tu, where I organized the first Christian church in that province. This trip was in many respects the most satisfactory I have ever had. For many months there had been a great deal of interest manifested in the country surrounding Chi-Kyung-Tu, but it was largely on the part of bad men who wished to make the people believe that they had received "power and authority" from the church which they were exercising in imprisoning, beating, and extorting money from those who did not comply with their demands. Bro. Morse and I had visited this region just after our last annual meeting, and found the adherents at Chi-Kyung-Tu under the influence of a renegade member of a sister church, who was doing them much harm. Many of those professing interest did so to the hope that under the protection of the church they might escape oppression by the "pediar's guild," which was at that time very active in Kang Won Do. Two of the leaders attended the Seoul Bible study class in the Winter, and there learned much of what the church really represented and what Christianity is. On their return they dismissed their renegade, above spoken of, and when a short time after I came to Chi-Kyung-Tu, I found a class of about forty persons who were willing to spend time in study. The women were at first too timid to meet with the men; so I arranged to give them one service a day alone. We met four times a day in all, and during all the time I made everything to work round repentance. But little else was preached, and I had the joy of what I have longed for, but had not yet seen—Koreans sufficiently convicted of sin to weep on account of it. We had some blessed meetings. Toward the close of the meetings twenty-two persons presented themselves for examination for baptism. Fifteen—eleven men and four women—were received. The place in which we met was not half large enough to accommodate all who attended the Sunday services, and the members determined to get a new place. A collection was taken, and over $60 raised by themselves on the spot. Wood is plentiful and labor cheap, so that with this amount they will be able to build quite a good-sized chapel.

But little has been done in the port as yet. Partly because we have had no place to meet, and partly because I thought it best to assist Dr. McGill until the matter pending between his mission and ours is settled. I had not begun services of our own until yesterday. Now that we have Mr. ———, place of which I am writing you under a separate cover, I will hold services there on Sunday. The building is only 10x20 feet, but it will do for a short time. After my next trip to Kang Won Do, I will be confined to the port for the Summer, and will do some dispensary work. I have accepted the customs service here, but only on condition that my connection therewith is not to interfere with my itinerating.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

BY MISS LELA C. WRAY.

In darkness to some unknown shore, where the rocks of sin, the whirlpools of fashion and the tides of Sabbath-breaking will, like a cruel, subtle foe, destroy our souls? Or are we drifting in the light of eternity to the pleasant transition stage of a more glorious and perfect life?

Are these not questions of vital importance? And can they be too carefully weighed when we consider the evils of to-day that are threatening our cities and towns, and condemning them in the presence of an Almighty God? If we would know how thousands of peoples are spending the Sabbaths in cities, we have only to refer to the daily papers. It is a special day set apart for picnics, attended with music and dancing, boat excursions, and many other things to make the day an unhallowed one.

Are we, as Christian people, to stand silently by and see the altars of the Lord thus desecrated without uplifting a hand to suppress the evil? Shall we not view it with terror, and by faith and perseverance, humble and consistent trust, and confidence in a high and overruling power, swear eternal fealty to the purpose of right, and seek to dethrone an evil that is establishing its altars in our homes, and in the hearts of our young men and young ladies?

Where are the mothers and fathers of these homes? Are they, by their example and consistent lives, trying to lead their children to higher and nobler things, or are they silently looking on, thus signifying their approval, and by their sympathy spurring the soul on to greater evils?

May the Lord help, not only parents, but every Christian in this entire land to-day, to awaken to a sense of danger to the evils that are surrounding our homes, for life inevitably takes much of its shape and coloring from the plastic powers that operate in youth.

Is it not now that the thoughts of Christians should assume their most valued characteristics, and by their concerted efforts seek to overrule the customs that are in defiance to God's laws? Custom! "Thou gaudy torment of souls!" leading us until we are gradually drawn into thy fathomless whirlpool.

Lord, help us to examine our hearts and lives, and if we are giving our time and influence to aught but good, may we remember that, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap!"

Pope, Miss.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

DEAR ADVOCATE: There is a desire on the part of many Sunday-school workers for a column in the ADVOCATE, to be edited by a practical Sunday-school worker, and to be used as a workers' exchange. We do not care for comments on the lesson, because our church literature now has the best that can be obtained; but we would like to have a column where we can feel free to discuss methods of practical work.

Dr. Atkins, at the McComb City convention, said that Louisiana and Mississippi were fifty years behind the times in Sunday-school methods, and in enthusiasm for and interest in the work. The earnest workers of the two States named are desirous of changing this order of things, and of making our Sunday-schools the equals of any in the world, and I believe I voice the sentiment of all when I say that by the grace of God we will do so. In this age of marvelous achievement we can not afford to be behind the times. Our people have just as much sense and just as much consecration as can be found anywhere. All they need is to be aroused to their privileges and opportunities, and then our Sunday-schools will go to the front with a bound. To create more interest and enthusiasm, we believe a column in the ADVOCATE would be of advantage.

The announcement has been made of the engagement of Prof. Hamil for exclusive work for our Southern Methodist Sunday-schools and for the holding of Institutes. We should be prepared to distribute whatever knowledge and benefit we can get from him to the remotest bounds of our Conferences. His work and the lessons he will teach us should have the widest publicity. Let us let our light, and all the light we can borrow and reflect, shine through the columns of the ADVOCATE.

RESOLUTION.

Caseyville, Miss., July 11, 1901.

Rev. J. W. Boswell, D. D., New Orleans, La.—

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: The following resolution was passed by the second Quarterly Conference of the Caseyville circuit, Mississippi Conference, at its recent session at Union Church, Miss.:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Quarterly Conference that it is the religious and imperative duty of officials and heads of families of the M. E. Church, South, to be subscribers to at least one of the Conference organs. That this resolution be spread upon the Minutes of this Conference, and a copy sent the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

(Signed) J. B. BOWEN,
J. A. MOORE.

A call to duty is quite as likely to come from behind, or from either hand, as from before. Even God's call on a man is not always "Come;" it may be quite as positively "Go." Many a man who is waiting for a divine call is looking upward and forward, and wondering why he hears nothing from that direction, while all the time there is an actual pressure upon him from behind and on both sides, in the providential circumstances in which he finds himself, that leaves him no alternative but to hold back in resistance of divine pressure, or to go forward in the only path open. Providences are from God, quite as plainly as a voice out of heaven. A pressure may be from God, as surely as a drawing.—Sunday-School Times.

THE SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

There has just been held our District Conference at Batesville, Miss, where Rev. D. W. Babb, with his very hospitable people, gave and we received delightful entertainment. This scribe was one of the "asked-for" guests, very much to his pleasure. The good women who labor with us in the gospel in the Home and Foreign Missionary cause held sessions on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning of June 26 and 27. The exercises on Wednesday evening were very profitable.

The District Conference was called to order by Rev. W. S. Lagrone, P. E., at 2:30 P. M. Ben P. Jaco was elected secretary. The programme as arranged for Sunday-school Conference was taken up, and with the excellent papers, good speeches, and general discussion, much practical benefit was obtained. The reports of pastors showed that there were in this district 2 Epworth Leagues, with a membership of 55; also 36 Sunday-schools, with 206 officers and teachers, and 1,590 pupils. Six schools have missionary societies. Topics were discussed as per programme for Conference proper, in which vital questions were considered most earnestly and thoroughly. Surely good shall come to all our people from these discussions, in which both laymen and pastors participated. Among the heartfelt talks made, we shall all profit by the things said by Rev. A. A. Lomax, pastor of the Baptist Church at Batesville, and "delegate at large" to all meetings for the spread of Christ's kingdom within his reach. Pronounced position was taken with reference to temperance, observance of Sabbath, inter-collegiate athletics, and revivals. The brethren were warm in their purpose to promote temperance, observance of the Sabbath, and revivals, and equally determined to prevent the inter-collegiate athletics. Reports show 157 members received this year, 54 adults baptized, 17 prayer meetings, no class meetings; 54 family altars, 192 church papers taken; about one-third of pastors' salaries has been paid, and over $2,500 expended on churches and parsonages.

P. B. Jones, P. T. Callicott, A. S. Yarbrough, and Rev. W. N. Duncan were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with J. T. Gaines and W. M. Oliver as alternates.

The preaching, which was good to the use of edifying, was done by Revs. R. A. Ellis, C. P. Moss, J. W. Malone, D. D.; L. D. Worsham, Jas. Porter, W. B. Murrah, W. W. Mitchell, and Amos Kendall.

Addresses to the children and young people were made Sunday afternoon by B. P. Jaco and O. L. Savage.

Dr. C. F. Reid, of Corea, was with us, and delivered a strong address on affairs in China.

Dr. Murrah, Dr. Malone and Mrs. McIntosh represented the schools, while W. T. Griffin represented the Orphanage, receiving in cash and subscription over $100.

The attendance was good, only one pastor being absent, which was caused by illness. There were laymen from the farthest appointments and from nearly every charge. By all this was pronounced a most interesting Conference. We meet next year at Popes, Miss.

Painting Her Portrait.

"If I could be such an old lady as that—so beautiful, serene, sweet and lovable—I shouldn't mind growing old," said a young girl the other day, speaking of a white-haired visitor who had just departed.

"Well, if you want to be that kind of an old lady, you'd better begin making her right now," laughed a keen-witted companion. "She doesn't strike me as a piece of work that was done in a hurry. It has taken a long time to make her what she is. If you are going to paint that sort of a portrait of yourself to leave the world, you'd better be mixing your colors now."

The merry words were true; and, whether she willed it or not, the girl was already "mixing the colors" for her portrait, and drawing day by day the outlines of the mature womanhood which shall yet brighten or darken the lives around her. Many a careless, selfish girl has in her inmost heart no higher ideal than "to be like mother" when she shall have reached mother's years; but in the meanwhile she is content to be as unlike her as possible. She has an idea that age brings its graces with it, and that a beautiful character comes, like silver hair, naturally and without effort.

Girls, you are outlining your future and choosing its coloring now. The woman you wish to be must begin in the girl.—Forward.

The man without a purpose is like a ship without a rudder; a waif, a nothing, a no man. Have a purpose in life, if it is only to kill and sell cxen well; but have a purpose, and having it, throw such strength of mind and muscle into your work as God has given you.—Carlyle.

WAYNESBORO, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER: I would like to say through your columns that I am helping Bro. Embree in a revival at one of his churches. We are having a real good meeting. Quite a number of conversions and additions.

Brethren so desiring might make arrangements with me to help them in their revivals, as I have a few vacant weeks during the Summer and Fall not yet promised.

W. D. BASS.

Corinth, Miss.

HARPERVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I have just closed my first protracted meeting. It was held at Hillsboro—lasted five days. Congregations were large; the church would not hold them at night. Had a good meeting. Christians greatly revived; seven additions to the church (4 by certificate). Good order and serious attention at every service. Bro. J. C. Long did most of the preaching, and preached with power and demonstration of the Spirit. Bless the Lord for his presence with us during the meeting.

I visited one of my members, old Mother Bustin. She will soon be ninety-seven years old. Is very much afflicted; suffers a great deal, but her mind is clear, and she is leaning on the Savior, perfectly resigned, and waiting for the Master's call. It is a spiritual benediction to be with her. God bless the old mothers in Israel that still linger with us.

My next protracted meeting will be held at Good Hope Church, and I am praying for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon us there.

Your brother in Christ,

IRVIN MILLER, P. C.

Walnut Grove, Miss., July 13, 1901.

LUMBERTON AND POPLARVILLE.

We had Rev. G. H. Galloway with us in a meeting at Poplarville for a week—June 18-24. Bro. Galloway did some fine and earnest preaching, and throughout in most admirable spirit. Such work will always bear fruit. We had a few genuine conversions, two accessions, and a number of church members were benefited.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Tupelo, Miss., was with us in Lumberton from June 29 to July 5. Notwithstanding the world beats heavily against us—excursions, picnics, Fourth of July, etc.—yet the victory was on our side. Bro. Bowen is a superior character, a fine preacher, and a great revivalist. Though against great odds he got hold of the town, and if he could have remained a few days longer, no doubt a much greater work would have been accomplished. The church was much worked up; a number of conversions, and nine accessions. Bro. Bowen has promised to come back, and we will be ready for him the next time.

We are under lasting obligation to these good brethren for their earnest and Holy Ghost preaching. They have brought us closer to our Lord.

B. S. RAYNER.

JACKSON DISTRICT.

At this writing we have just completed our second round, consuming something more than half the Conference year. How to arrange satisfactorily nineteen appointments for twelve weeks, give every place a Sunday, and every charge the Sunday in course on the especial work, and make no conflicts with appointments of others, is indeed a hard problem to solve. We try to accommodate all, but our almanac and arithmetic fail to agree. The finances of the district are on preachers' salaries in advance of last year at same season; Conference collections encouragingly so. The great Missionary Conference in New Orleans has sent its inspiration among the preachers especially.

Our District Conference was a decided success, and our Missionary Day was like unto the days in Tulane Hall. Every brother was present either in person, or had his paper before the Conference, and the enthusiasm was abounding. Pledges for full collections for missions were made, and Sunday-schools and Leagues pledged for surplus funds.

We have passed through a heated term unknown among our people. Crops are suffering as much from the intense heat as for want of rain. Unless there be rains soon, all will be cut short.

With dread we face the third quarter. Invitations to stop and rest a while must be thankfully declined. No rest possible so long as our almanac and arithmetic are so far apart. So far no serious sickness has visited the homes of the brethren, and all are entering vigorously into the protracted-meeting season.

Sorry, Mr. Editor, that you did not get to our District Conference. Our efficient secretary will send you an account of its proceedings.

T. B. H.

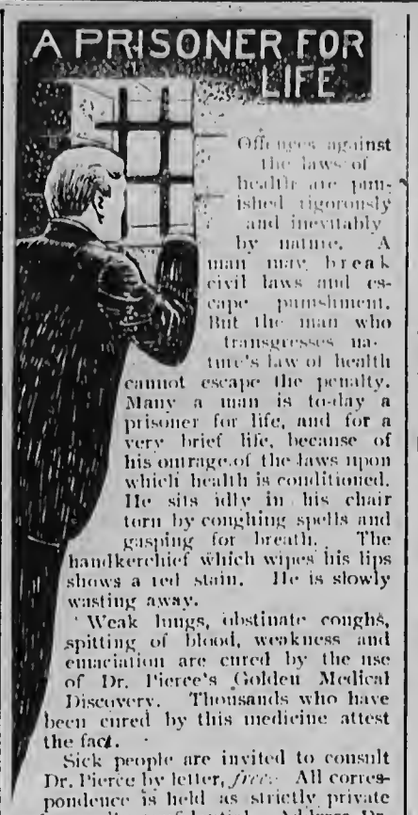
CARROLLTON AND M'ANENEY.

MR. EDITOR: We held our third Quarterly Conference for Carrollton and McAneny Church, at Valley Hill, the thirteenth and fourteenth of this month. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, gave us two excellent sermons, and dedicated our new church at that place. This congregation and community merits high commendation for the early completion of this worthy enterprise, which was accomplished by assiduous labor and self-denying contributions. This neat church is an honor to any community, and stands as a monument of the fidelity of this little band to the cause of Christ, and an exponent of their faith in God.

We have held a protracted meeting at Carrollton, resulting in the accession of six persons to the church, and the revival of the faith and fervor of the membership. Rev. E. B. Ramsey, of Paris, Tenn., was with us, and expounded the Word of God in his usual forcible manner. Our people were highly entertained and edified by his preaching. Hope to send you some more subscribers for your (our) excellent paper soon.

Your brother,

EUGENE JOHNSON.



A PRISONER FOR LIFE

Offenses against the laws of health are punished rigorously and inevitably by nature. A man may break civil laws and escape punishment. But the man who transgresses nature's law of health cannot escape the penalty. Many a man is to-day a prisoner for life, and for a very brief life, because of his outrage of the laws upon which health is conditioned. He sits idly in his chair torn by coughing spells and gasping for breath. The handkerchief which wipes his lips shows a red stain. He is slowly wasting away.

Weak lungs, obstinate coughs, spitting of blood, weakness and emaciation are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Thousands who have been cured by this medicine attest the fact.

Sick people are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." The sole motive for substitution is to enable the dealer to make the little more profit paid on the sale of less meritorious medicines.

"Three years ago I had the grip," writes Mrs. Tillie Linney, of Gravel Switch, Marion Co., Kentucky. "It settled on my lungs, and the doctor said I had consumption. I took six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am thankful to say I am entirely well. You may print this letter if you see fit to do so."

Many addresses and essays from District Conferences, Sunday-school Conventions and Epworth Leagues are on hand. They have invariably been sent in at the request of the bodies before which they were delivered. It is quite out of our power, for lack of room, to print them all. Some of them may appear in the future, but we make no positive promise to that effect.

Dr. Rankin, of the Texas Advocate, solemnly avers that Dr. W. B. Palmore—he of the St. Louis Christian Advocate—"has lived about sixty years as an incorrigible and self-centered old bachelor" We had no idea that the lively and versatile editor had reached the patriarchal age. If he has lived an old bachelor about sixty years, then he must be at least eighty-five years of age. Will Dr. Palmore tell us what the almanac says about it?

A report from one of the District Conferences in Texas says: "There was a good attendance of local preachers, who entered heartily into the work of the Conference. While their presence was expected, their service was efficient, and was appreciated by the other members of the Conference." We have found the same thing true at several District Conferences which we have lately attended. At one or two the attendance of local preachers has been better this year than usual.

We ventured to say, two or three weeks since, that, notwithstanding the widespread demand for the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith, many Presbyterians are still adherents of Calvinism, pure and simple. Now we learn on authority of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) that the staid old Presbyterians of the First Church, Nashville, were not at all pleased with the sermon of Dr. Van Dyke, preached a short time since in their pulpit. It was too well seasoned with Arminianism.

The libel suit, Underwood vs. Cunningham and Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, as recently announced, resulted in a verdict, by jury, against the defendants. The amount of damage assessed against the Publishing House was $15,000. Motion was immediatly entered for a new trial. The motion was heard a few days since. The judge decided to grant a new trial, unless the plaintiff would consent to a reduction from $15,000 to $3,000 damage against the House. If accepted by plaintiff, it is doubtful whether the Book Committee will agree to it. The committee, it is thought, will appeal the case rather than make a compromise.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The Seashore Camp Ground is located on the Gulf shore, between New Orleans and Mobile. It is "beautiful for situation," the joy of three Annual Conferences, a place to which many from all sections resort for rest and recuperation. Here they find all that is needed for a tired body and a hungry soul. There is absolutely no reason why people living in near-by cities should go North to lake or mountain, if fresh air, cool breezes, delightful shade and bathing are what they want. And, if they desire to turn aside from the busy cares of life, and engage awhile in purely religious services, they can find no better place than Seashore Camp Meeting.

The ground has a water frontage of fourteen hundred feet, and runs back to the Louisville and Nashville railroad, a distance of near, or quite, a quarter of a mile. The whole encampment is thickly shaded with native trees of great variety. The large and strongly built tabernacle, capable of comfortably seating about two thousand people, is less than one hundred yards from the water's edge. On three sides of this tabernacle cottages are located. This is called Tabernacle Square. Near one corner of this square is a large two-story cottage for the accommodation of preachers. This is Wesley Hall. The grounds are laid off in squares, and is thickly settled with cottages, nearly every one of which is occupied. The camp is the property of the church, and is controlled by a Board of Trustees taken in equal numbers from the three adjoining districts: The New Orleans, the Seashore, and the Mobile, representing the Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama Annual Conferences. The presiding elders of the three districts are, by virtue of office, joint superintendents of the camp meeting. This year the meeting was under the direction of Revs. S. S. Keener, W. W. Simmons, and W. M. Cox, presiding elders, respectively, of the New Orleans, Seashore, and Mobile districts.

The meeting this year, which began July 10, was the thirtieth, and the most successful of any for the past seven or eight years. The number in attendance on the ground was smaller than for several seasons past, but those who came for the real good of the meeting, and who attended the services, was larger than usual. The results were encouraging. No account was kept of the number of conversions. To put it at fifty is moderate. Christians were active, and were mightily strengthened in the faith. The preaching was of a high order, judged from a scriptural standpoint. Nobody indulged in smart preaching. There seemed to be a determination among the preachers to know nothing save Christ and him crucified, and though the "preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom," it was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The work of the Holy Spirit in conviction and conversion was stressed, and penitents were invited to the altar. They came and bowed (not on straw, as it used to be at old-time camp meetings, but in clean, pine sawdust), and were converted. We saw as many as twenty penitents at the altar at one time. The absence of the methods of the modern evangelists was notable, and we think it likely that every Christian, preacher and layman, thanked the Lord that it was so. Had there been that spontaneous outburst of song, led by a volunteer of competent voice, we could not have told that the exercises were in anywise different from those conducted by our fathers at the old-time camp meetings. But here there was an organ, and an appointed leader, with a choir. The singing was good; far better, in fact, more hearty and more edifying than the music in our town and city churches, and it contributed largely to the interest and success of the camp meeting. Rev. F. M. Keen, of the Mississippi Conference, was the leader. He has not only music in his voice, but melody in his heart, and a man of taste and judgment. The organists, Miss Bessie Thompson and Miss Nettie Sutcliff, did their part well.

First and last, there were about forty preachers present. They were our own home-preachers. No strangers or great men from a distance were on the ground. No curiosity was aroused as to who would occupy the stand; no contention among the people as to who was the best preacher. Nobody was found to say, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas." All were of Christ, and ready to receive the Word at the mouth of anyone appointed by the authorities. There was no rivalry. A half-dozen brethren did most of the preaching. It was never announced at one service who would preach at the next. This, together with the fact that no imported preachers were hired for the occasion, we think largely accounts for the success of the meeting.

To the regret of all, our senior Bishop Keener was unable to be present. He has always been a leader, and greatly interested in Seashore, but this year he was afraid to encounter the excitement, and undergo the fatigue of the occasion. His mantle falls on a noble son, who is thoroughly interested in the work of the church, and who loves Seashore Camp Ground with all his heart. It was the fortune of the editor to be in only at the last of the feast. The little we had of the meeting, though worn out with long travel and intense heat, we very much enjoyed. We shall linger on the ground for several weeks.

AN OBSTRUCTIONIST.

The millennium is far in the future. We could consistently say this if every sinner in the world at this time were a professing Christian. The bigotry and envy and jealousy of different orders calling themselves Christian must be destroyed, and there must be universal recognition of fellowship, before the dawn of that happy period to which all good people are looking. But fellowship in Christ, to say nothing of church fellowship, is far from being universal. And some so-called Christians—valiant in defense of doctrine, and zealous for "the church"—when it comes to fellowship, or brotherhood in Christ, instead of promoting this most desirable end, are obstructionists to all intents and purposes. A case in point: A Baptist brother of our acquaintance is advertised as holding a meeting, "in which all denominations are interested." It is added that he proposes to "run the devil out of" the town. Whereupon a champion rises and says: "We have a suspicion that his Satanic Majesty is always willing to vacate when he can get 'all denominations' united in a meeting, for he knows the sacrifice of the truth, and the hypocrisy that is practiced, will do his work all right without so much concern on his part." The man who wrote that sentence calls himself a Christian. It would seem sufficient to call in question the wisdom of the policy of all denominations in a town joining in a meeting, and for special reasons condemn it; but to go so far as to charge all concerned with hypocrisy, and doing the devil's work, is to do violence to the Master's instruction, "Judge not." A critic shows the possession of a wrong spirit when he undertakes to question the motives of men. And in this day, when it is so important to bring Christians closer together for common warfare against sin and the wicked one, it is not only out of place, but unpardonable, to characterize such united efforts as are mentioned as the devil's work, and those engaged in it as hypocrites.

FITTING-SCHOOLS.

The vast good that has come to our colleges and universities and to our church through fitting-schools, not only demonstrates their importance, but suggests the wisdom of establishing as many as are needed. The more we have, the larger will be the number of students in our higher schools. The thirst for knowledge will be greatly increased. We can name two such schools located within the bounds of the Tennessee Conference that furnish the very best of material for Vanderbilt University. Two or three have been long established in the Memphis Conference, one of which is the property of the church, the others under its auspices. Another has recently been inaugurated. There are two in Arkansas under the general supervision of President Millar, and are feeders of Hendrix College. Others might be named.

We ought to have such a school for our boys in North Mississippi. It ought to be established with special reference to Millsaps College. There is no such school in North Mississippi under the control or auspices of our church. It is quite time we were taking action in the matter. There are reasons sufficient why we should take action at the earliest moment possible. We will not name them now. We simply throw out the suggestion, hoping that friends may be enlisted, and induced to show their opinion. Let us have an expression.

We have in mind (and have had for a long time) a suitable locality, with the very best surroundings. And if we have been correctly informed, there is at the place a suitable house. Whether it can be secured, we are unable to say. This is a matter for after consideration.

PROTESTANTISM IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Notwithstanding the opposition of Roman Catholics to the establishment of Protestant missions in the Philippines and other islands wrested from Spain, and their prophecy of utter failure should the work be undertaken, missionaries have gone into these islands and have achieved great success. Our brethren of the M. E. Church are doing a wonderful work in and around Manila. A missionary, writing to the Christian Advocate (New York), says: "The people are not coming to us en masse, as has been represented, but thoughtfully, and after hearing the truth for weeks, and months, and reading the Bible for themselves." He reports over one thousand as having joined the church at one place, and over eight hundred couples married by the missionaries. At another point he reports a congregation of about five hundred, four hundred of whom have formally united with the church. Many of these give satisfactory evidence of having been soundly converted. These reports are encouraging, considering the attitude of the Filipinos to the clergy, who heretofore ruled with an iron hand.

God is blessing his people, and strongly opening the way for the propagation of the gospel. This is the day of the church's opportunity. May their eyes be opened to see it, and their hearts and hands be ready to respond!

A SIGNIFICANT MOVEMENT.

Under the head of "A Significant Movement," in our last issue, Rev. W. W. Drake makes an important suggestion. It is to the effect that the Louisiana Conference follow the example of the Tennessee, and prepare for an Institute of Biblical and Theological Study specially for the benefit of the undergraduates of the Conference, said Institute to be under the direction of the Conference Examining Committees. He further suggests that the Examining Committees of the Conference take the matter under consideration and be ready for action at the ensuing session.

We are in sympathy with Brother Drake's idea, and not only give it our endorsement, but beg leave to make a suggestion, which, if adopted, will greatly enlarge the usefulness of the Institute. Our suggestion is that the Alabama, the Mississippi, the North Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences join in this movement, and meet at some suitable time at Seashore Camp Ground. Everything necessary to such a meeting is there. The encampment is open from the first of April to the first of November. No special preparation would be necessary to entertain the preachers. A week or ten days' stay would cost them no more at Seashore than it costs at Vanderbilt for the same length of time. And it would cost no more to secure lecturers at that point than at any other. Let us hear from the brethren on this point as well as on the suggestion of Brother Drake.

THE OUTLOOK.

We have attended eight District Conferences in the bounds of our patronizing territory, and have heard from many sections which we were unable to visit, and we give it as our deliberate opinion that the church, spiritually and temporally, is in as good a condition as we have ever known it. Our people are loyal, and devoted to the interests of the Master; many of them more than ordinarily consecrated to the service. We have never known laymen to show more intelligent devotion to the church than many of them have in our public gatherings. The preachers are giving to the work all their energies. They were never more active or determined to succeed. And they are succeeding. They are men of one work, in that they are wholly given to the ministry, but in their ministry they do many things. They seek the lost, encourage believers, comfort those who mourn, and reprove the erring. Besides, in a large measure they are the Lord's stewards, and collect means to enlarge the Lord's kingdom. The preachers' hands and hearts are full. In many places the Lord is pouring out his Spirit and saving the people. There is on all sides a gracious ingathering of souls. Brotherly love and peace abound. The outlook is bright.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

We have received the announcement of the third annual Tri-State Epworth League Conference, which will begin its session on Wednesday, July 31, at 11 A. M., and close on Friday night, August 9, 1901, on Seashore Camp Grounds, near Biloxi, Miss. This Conference is composed of representatives of the Epworth League from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The promoters of the enterprise say that "the idea of a Summer School or Training Conference has been so well received, and such enthusiastic interest taken in the ones held previously, that a permanent organization has been effected for the purpose of continuing these gatherings. It is hoped that many Leaguers will take advantage of the opportunity to attend, and also visit this delightful seaside resort."

Though primarily designed for Epworth Leaguers, yet members of all young people's societies are invited to attend, and will receive a cordial welcome. They will also be granted all the privileges of the Conference. For information address Rev. Geo. D. Parker, Station B, New Orleans.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. G. Harbin is working in the interest of the Epworth League. He delivered an excellent address at Byhalia.

Rev. C. F. Emery, pastor of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., called in our absence. We thank him for thus remembering the ADVOCATE.

Bishop Fitzgerald is spending a while in the North, hoping to recuperate sufficient to enable him to make the trip to London to fill his place in the Ecumenical Conference.

Rev. H. C. Morehead, of the North Mississippi Conference, is enjoying himself on an excursion to California. He has written us one interesting letter, and we expect others.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Tupelo, spent a week recently with Rev. B. S. Rayner at Lumberton, Miss., assisting him in a meeting. What results attended his efforts we have not heard.

Prof. B. E. Young, of Millsaps College, is at the University of Chicago doing graduate work in the Modern Language Schools of that institution. He will be engaged until September.

In our recent trip to North Mississippi, we met our old friend and schoolmate, Prof. E. H. Randle. He is located at Hernando, and has a fine school. We were glad to learn that he is doing well.

Mr. John T. McTyeire, eldest son of the late Bishop McTyeire, died last week in Nashville at the residence of his brother-in-law, Dr. Tigert. In his youth he was well known in New Orleans.

Mrs. LaPrade, wife of Dr. W. H. LaPrade, is in St. Louis, whither she went to spend a few weeks with her son, Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr. We trust her visit will not only be pleasant, but beneficial.

A cable dispatch from Bishop Galloway to his wife at Jackson, Miss., announces his safe arrival at Rio Janeiro, South America. The long voyage gave the good Bishop time to rest a little while.

Delegates are getting ready to sail for the great Conference in London. Dr. F. N. Parker, the delegate from Louisiana, will leave early in August. He will be absent about six weeks. Mrs. Parker, we learn, will accompany him.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, agent for our Orphans' Home at Water Valley, is doing excellent service in behalf of the Home. The hot weather does not seem to deter him. He secured about $140 at New Albany. How much at Byhalia we did not learn.

Brother J. N. Tucker, writing from Hattiesburg, Miss., informs us that he has withdrawn from the M. E. Church, South, and has cast his lot with a sister church. May the Lord grant the brother's prayer, viz.: that he may be more useful in his new home than in the old.

Bishop Morrison, after the close of the District Conference at Byhalia, went on Monday, the fifteenth, to Capleville, Tenn., about twelve miles from Memphis, where he dedicated a new house of worship. The brethren kept the Bishop busy as long as he was in reach.

Rev. R. A. Tucker, of Guntown, Miss., spent last week with his brother, Rev. E. A. Tucker, assisting him in a meeting at Victoria. A short note from him informs us that the prospect was good for a successful meeting. These brothers are promising young men, following in the footsteps of a sainted father.

In justice to Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of Vaiden, Miss., we will say that he wrote a notice of the decease of Rev. J. F. Evans, who died July 6, in ample time for the ADVOCATE of July 11. In justice to the editor we say: That notice did not reach the office until the paper had been printed and mailed. We hope this explanation of the delay in giving the sad news to our readers will prove satisfactory.

A Plea for the Epworth League.

I was very much surprised, not long since, when in attendance at a session of a certain District Conference within the bounds of the North Mississippi Confere, to find that the sentiment of the majority of the preachers who expressed themselves, or reported on the subject, was decidedly in opposition to this tender scion of our church. I have often noticed a disposition on the part of older brethren to quietly ignore the League, instead of fostering it with paternal care, with a view to using it when more fully developed. There has ever been an unspoken hostility, an inclination to minimize its importance. Out of the score of brethren who made reports of their work, only a few sheepishly acknowledged to having organized a League in their charges, but did not seem at all proud of the bantling.

Not very many years after its inception in the mind of its originator, I dwelt in a rural region of one of the Delta counties in the "Black Belt." My neighbors were all tillers of the soil, many of them renters on our home-place. An unpretentious chapel had been erected on this land by its owner, himself seeking membership. Immediately it was dedicated, a surplus soon accrued in the treasury of the flourishing Sunday-school from its hebdomadal collections. The suggestion was made to organize an Epworth League. Our preacher, a progressive young man, was requested to order the literature for the established course of reading, and organize us. For two years it was in full operation; all the departments—devotional, literary, and charitable—in good working order, each member being required to preside in turn. As members were few, ages ranged, as one minister said, anywhere from ninety to under fifteen, so as to utilize all available material. Dues were always freely paid, and when death invaded our ranks, decimating our numbers by taking some of our brightest members, and by the removal of others, there was money in the treasury. The devotional exercises, when properly conducted, familiarize the young with articulate petition, thus insuring them to bearing the burden of public prayer, which is often borne with such fear and trembling by those who take it up in later life. The literary exercises, either selected, written, or recited, tend to invigorate the minds of the young, for "reading makes a full man, conference a ready man, writing an exact man." The charitable part, though not frequently called into play (except to visit the sick) in that land of plenty, was good training in following divine precepts.

While I deplore as unwise this action on the part of these brethren, strong in thought and patient in effort, in thus seeking to lop off this arm of the church, I can but think that opposition will not stamp out the movement; that, if ignored, neglected, or even relegated to the shades of oblivion, will, phœnix-like, rise from its former ashes, and these young soldiers of the cross will, out of their failures, make "stepping-stones to higher things."

So I trust the brethren will take heart of grace, and bid them God-speed, expecting of them great things in the future. Y.

EDUCATION IN THE SOUTH.

THE RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY ONE OF THE BEST EQUIPPED IN THE COUNTRY.

"The Randolph-Macon System" of educational institutions in Virginia would ornament any of the most enlightened communities of the world. Randolph-Macon Academy, at Bedford City, Va., is particularly well equipped for study, comfort and recreation—equal to the most advanced school in the United States. The buildings are very large, stone and brick, in spacious grounds, at the foot of the Peaks of Otter, an inspiring Southwest Virginia mountain view. The academy buildings and grounds have every modern appliance to keep the student in comfort, to offer a desirable cuisine, and to afford the greatest range of wholesome amusement. The faculty is large, composed of educators of reputation and wide success; the course of study is based on the principles that have made it possible to make a success of half a dozen great schools and colleges within the borders of one State. While the instruction is very thorough, the terms are very low, with special inducements to ministers. Catalogues may be had on application to E. Sumter Smith, Principal, Bedford City, Va.

At Seashore.

MR. EDITOR: We, wife and myself, have just returned from the Seashore Camp Meeting, where we spent several days resting and enjoying ourselves. It was delightful almost beyond description. Our trip was made possible by the kindness of our people. I was not able to spare amount out of our living, and the good people gave me my expenses, and a suit of clothes to wear down there. Sister Mattie McDonald, of Cane Ridge Church, conceived the plan, and started the ball to rolling, by writing to members of the different churches to assist her in raising the necessary amount, and members of Cane Ridge, Harriston, Rodney and Bell Grove churches fell into line with a will, and they never stopped until they had enough to bear my expenses and buy me a suit, as above stated. And then our two noble sons said their mother must go, and backed up the saying by furnishing the money to pay all her expenses. Oh, how thankful we feel to Sister McDonald and all the brethren and sisters that contributed to our trip. We certainly enjoyed it very much and were also greatly benefited.

The Seashore Camp Ground is a delightful place to me. I would never miss a meeting there if I could help it. The grounds are delightful. The order almost perfect. The managers always thoughtful and accommodating, looking after every interest of the ground. The preaching was of a high order, and the results this year good. If God spares us, let us all go next year, and help to make it a great camp meeting. It ought to be the camp meeting, and place of meeting, for the three Conferences—Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana—to meet in one special and united effort each year to be endued with power, and better prepared to go out and spread scriptural holiness over these lands. God bless the Seashore Camp Ground and all the people. A. D. MILLER.

Dancing vs. Church Members.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: If you will give me a little space in your valuable paper, I will try my hand at an article on the above subject, which, I hope, will provoke some discussion on the part of those who are better able to prosecute the dancing church member, and maybe can suggest some way out of this predicament.

There are in the bounds of this pastoral charge some members who are continually doing what I call the hurtful thing, dancing. If you try to get, or persuade them to stop it, they at once say they don't see any harm in it; and will often say that dancing is not half as bad as some other things that members of the church do. And then they will remind you that Bro. "A." was a good man, and a good preacher, and he didn't say or do anything with us about it; so you have all these things to contend with—why some of the best people in town give dances, etc.

Brother, what are we to do about it? "Turn them out," somebody says; "use the Book of Discipline." Yes, that's all good; but we are to be careful, lest in rooting up the tares, we root up also the wheat; so I find it a very hard subject to deal with.

But, then, after all, I can not see why persons who come and accept the vows of the church, and say they will be governed by the Book of Discipline and all these things, want to go back to the things of the world. There is something wrong somewhere. They either know nothing of God's power to save, or have backslid, or—well, I don't know what.

Will some brother who has had these things to contend with in his pastoral work tell me through the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE how I may overcome the evil, to some extent at least?

For fear this may find its way to the scrap-pile, I'll forbear writing any more.

The Lord bless the dear old ADVOCATE and its editor.

Your brother in Christ,

Response to Letters of Sympathy.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: I, with my bereaved children, desire, through the ADVOCATE, to return one grateful response to the many letters of sympathy that each day's mail has brought us since the death of husband and father, which occurred on the afternoon of July 6. These missives, like white-winged messengers, breathed peace and hope and trust. True it is that Jesus, the supreme Comforter, is alone able to heal the bruised, bleeding heart, to gather its broken tendrils and weave them back again, by the power of his love; yet words of sympathy from absent friends do bring balm to wounded feelings and help the mourner to look away from self to Him who "trod the wine press alone," and impressing the sweet truth that He who drank the cup of sorrow to its bitter dregs will surely comfort those who trust Him.

Dear friends, with all our heart we thank you for your brave, sweet words, and we fervently thank our God for the gift of friends whose love for our ascended husband and father they so feelingly express.

In sorrow, yet in hope,

Hollins Institute

Established 1842 for the Higher Education of Young Ladies

will open its 59th session on the 11th of September, 1901. This is a school in which all the solicitude, watchcare, supervision and inspiration of a cultured Virginia home prevail, and during the past session 236 pupils from representative families of 21 states were enrolled. Literature, Languages, Histories, Sciences, Music, Art, Elocution, etc., are taught under high standards. The Faculty and management is composed of 12 gentlemen and 23 ladies. The Eclectic system is used. Diplomas are issued in all departments, each of which is presided over by a University graduate. The school is located on the N. & W. Ry. (Shenandoah Division) 7 miles north of Roanoke City, in a region abounding in scenery beautiful beyond description, and redolent of health. There are six main buildings, all of brick, with extensive verandas, all connected by covered ways. It owns 500 acres of land and valuable mineral springs—Sulphur and Chalybeate, which combine largely to the health and vigor of growing girls. For illustrated catalogue address JOS. A. GOD IN EVERYTHING.

Let us be very careful how we divide things into outward and inward. The time will come when we should get rid of even scriptural uses of outward, alien, strange, foreign. All these words are doomed to go. "I saw no temple therein," said John. Why did he not see a temple in heaven? Because heaven was all temple. He who lives in light does not even see the sun: he who lives in God has no moon, for he has no night. But men are crafty and expert, almost, at making little definitions, parties, separations, and the like. I will tell you what I have heard, and you will tell me whether it is true. There was a man who rose in history, I suppose long ago, and he divided music into sacred and profane. I never heard any profane music; I do not believe there is any. But some men would be nothing without their little definition: they live on that bare bone. I have heard sacred music, and I have heard music profaned, perverted, taken away to bad uses, made a seduction on the road to hell. But we must get back to real definitions and proper qualities, and see things as God meant them to be seen. You sing some sweet little Scotch song—is it profane because it is not in the psalm book? It might be in the psalm book for its sentiment, its lilt, its tone, its power of touching the highest, sweetest, tenderest associations of life and memory. I will not have it called profane. You can sing sacred music profanely; that is often done. I would not give you anything for music, however sacred may be the words which it expresses, if it be not sung in the spirit of its own sacredness. It kills me to think that a man could sing, "He was despised and rejected of men," and then go away and drench his throat with intoxicating drinks. If such an irony were possible, we should assemble to consider it, repudiate it, anathematize it; for it takes out of the heart of Christ all that made that heart what it was, and gives it to the mocker and the men of cruel tongue.

I have also heard of profane history and sacred history. There is no profane history. History truly written and true to human experience is an aspect of Providence, an elucidation of that marvelous mystery which penetrates all life, and that whispers to us in many a moment of unexpectedness: "The very hairs of your head are all numbered; not a sparrow falleth to the ground without your Father knoweth; it shall be given you in the same hour what ye shall say;" and the same night when Herod would betray the hated apostle the angel will be there before Herod can get his key into the lock. I believe in God. I believe that the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord. I believe that God knoweth my downsitting and my uprising, my going out and my incoming, if so be I live in his spirit and give him the poor tribute even of a trembling faith. Who is it that rises among us and splits up history into sacred and profane? What right has such a man to define and separate and classify? I would follow the historian who sees God in everything, in the defeat as well as in the success of the battle: I would follow the humble faith which sees as true an answer to prayer in a negative as in a positive. Profane history? is it a lie? I am not referring to history that is falsely written and written with a false purpose, but I am referring to the inner history, the history that God designs, inspires, and conducts, and all through the ages of that marvelous unfolding I hear a voice saying, "He shall reign whose right it is:" and I am satisfied with a great satisfaction.—Joseph Parker, D. A VOICE.

There is no sound of marching armies; there is no tread of hosts. There is no visible gathering of mighty forces, before which old monuments and hoary institutions go down, in which principalities and powers are overthrown. Only a voice. All the people were going in and out as in other days, when suddenly a voice was heard. It was only a voice, the voice of one crying, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand." And all the land was moved. And that voice was taken up by another, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand," and the whole world has been moved. The sound had gone forth into the ends of the earth, and nations hear it and stand to listen to it.

So it is by the law of the kingdom of God; the voice, the word, is the mighty power, for God is in it. It is a sound, a word spoken, the speaker himself not always known or remembered. It is a message; the messenger disappears, but his word live son. It is an influence; once set in motion the personality is lost, and yet the impulse continues to move others. The message tells us of another, and we hasten from the speaker to the one we seek. The influence gives direction to the life, but the person who exerts the influence disappears, and we look forward to that for which life is now ordered. The speaker disappears, but his voice continues to be heard; his work goes on; it is taken up by another, and then by another, and so multiplies itself as a new life in other lives, as a new force generating other forces, all tending to bring the world to Christ. The speaker disappears; he goes into oblivion not with sadness, but with the consciousness and the joy that the purpose of his life has been fulfilled. He dies, but his voice lives, and at length Christ reigns in a world redeemed and glorified. "This my joy is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease."—United Presbyterian.

NATIVITY OF OUR AUTHORS.

The new edition of Oscar Fay Adams' "Dictionary of American Authors" has moved George H. Warner to an inquiry into the nativity and geographical distribution of the makers of our literature. He sets out the results of his researches in a recent issue of the New York Times' Saturday Review, and some of them seem to deserve attention.

It is to be noted, in the first place, that, in spite of the enormous immigration, comparatively few authors are of foreign birth. Mr. Adams' book covers the period from the first settlement of North America to 1895, and names about 6,500 authors. Of these only about 700, or 11 per cent., were born outside the United States. England contributed 227; Ireland, 95; Scotland, 86; Wales, 12; Canada, 45; other British possessions, 10. Of non-English-speaking countries, the Germanic, including Austria, naturally lead, with 51. It is rather surprising that France should have furnished 28 and Italy 13, as against only 15 from Scandinavia.

Of the native born, New England furnished 2,360, or about 37 per cent. The other Atlantic States north of the Potomac supplied 2,000 more, or 30 per cent. Deducting also the foreigners, and those of unknown nativity, leaves about 20 per cent. to be divided among the other thirty-four states. Massachusetts easily leads in gross number of authors, with 1,243. But Connecticut shows the greatest percentage, with 430 authors to a present population of 750,000. New York ranks second in gross numbers, but her authors' birth rate is only one-third that of Massachusetts. Pennsylvania, although its metropolis was our first great publishing center, has been still less productive, having but 613 authors out of four-fifths New York's population.

Of the middle Western States, Ohio naturally leads, as does Virginia among the Southern, with 174 and 235 authors, respectively. Indiana, in spite of the attention that her writers have recently attracted, had produced but 55 authors of books up to 1895, while South Carolina had 118, North Carolina 71, Kentucky 70, and Georgia 56. Illinois and Tennessee, in the same period, had produced but 47 and 34 authors, respectively. Of the remaining states only Michigan, with 35; Alabama, with 28; Missouri, with 26; Louisiana, with 21, and Mississippi, with 19, produced more than 10 authors each. The District of Columbia, surprisingly enough, gave birth to 42. It is to be noted that all the foregoing figures concern authors of definite books, and not merely of "articles," occasional poems, and special monographs.—Exchange.

WELCOME SYMPATHY.

Sympathy with bereavement or calamity is commonly expressed by saying something better left unsaid, or by sitting down and weeping with the sufferer. An electric, if rough specific for grief, to be commended, because it placed the afflicted one in instant communication with his normal self, is found in the following story of two boys printed in Pearson's Weekly:

A fourteen-year-old boy went into his mother's presence recently, with a black eye and swollen lips, a ragged scratch across his face, and torn coat-sleeves.

"Jack," cried the mother, as he came in, "have you been fighting again?"

"No," rather sullenly.

"Then, what is the matter with your face?"

"Jim Green's ma is dead," he replied.

"What has that to do with your disfigured face?"

"Well?"

"I didn't know what to do to make him happy again, and feeling sorry for him, I just went up to him and let him hit me five times."

"Did it help him?" asked the mother.

"Help him?" echoed the boy, in a surprised tone. "Of course it did! Don't you think it would make me feel better to whack a fellow who had licked me every week for a year?"

A BOY'S RELIGION.

If a boy is a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ, though he can't lead a prayer meeting, or be a church officer, or a preacher, he can be a godly boy, in a boy's way and in a boy's place. He need not cease to be a boy because he is a Christian. He ought to run, jump, climb and yell like a real boy. But in it all he ought to be free from vulgarity and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco in every form, and have a horror of intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful, generous. He ought to take the part of small boys against larger ones. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be a party to mischief, to persecution, or deceit. And, above all things, he ought, now and then, to show his colors. He need not always be interrupting a game to say he is a Christian, but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refuses to do something because he fears God, or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for things of God he feels the deepest reverence.—Ex.

We know the community; have known something of the methods used there in revival meetings, and we are sure the brother has not misstated the fact. It is shocking to think that under the guise of preaching the gospel, men are profane enough to attempt an imitation of the Holy Ghost, and for days manipulate a crowd in order that a big count may be made of results. All such methods are the furthest removed from Bible faith. It is seeking a sign—the very thing Jesus Christ rebuked in his day. When people are snared into a committal of themselves to a line of life they afterwards regret, serious harm is done the cause of God and the salvation of the people. It is monstrous that in this age of the world so-called gospel ministers will burn "strange fire" before the Lord's altars until the people doubt the sincerity of genuinely, honest men, and faithful ministers. These words of the great apostle to the Gentiles deserve the prayerful study of our ministry: "Therefore, as we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."—Wesleyan.

In Bohemia, when geese are to be driven long distances to market, they are shod for the journey. The method of shoeing is as simple as it is effective. The geese are made to walk repeatedly over patches of tar mixed with sand. This forms a hard crust on their feet, which enables them to travel great distances without becoming sore-footed.—Presbyterian.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

Judge WILLIAM CLINTON PIPKIN was born in St. Helena parish, La., near Darlington Church, Oct. 30, 1833, and departed this life March 22, 1901, in Greensburg, La. His father, Rev. Barnabas Pipkin, settled at that place about 1828. His maternal grandfather, Henry Hanna, lived and died in Amite county, Miss., near Centreville, and was a member of the Mississippi Legislature for thirteen years, and a member of the first Constitutional Convention of that State. Judge Pipkin first attended the schools at Darlington, which were then very good. Among his teachers were Rev. Wm. Parks, Milo Smith, and Judge J. E. Wilson. Under the latter he was prepared for college, and entered the Sophomore class at Centenary College, and graduated with the second honors of a large class in 1854. Among the members of his class were Dr. Sanford Perry, Rev. Geo. H. Clinton, Dr. J. W. Saunders, Root. A. Pugh, C. N. Hines, C. S. G. Foster—all now dead, and all men of distinguished eminence. Among his college mates were the late Col. W. L. Nugent, of Jackson, Miss.; Judge T. P. Clinton, of St. Joseph, La.; Judge W. B. Spenner, of New Orleans; Judge J. H. Brigham, of Morehouse parish; and of those now living: Judge John S. Young, of Shreveport; Judge T. C. W. Ellis, of New Orleans, and Judge Anthony Sambola, of New Orleans. After graduating he successfully taught school at the old Darlington Schoolhouse, in the meantime studying law. He passed a very creditable examination before the Supreme Court at New Orleans in 1858, and moved to Monroe, La., and located for the practice of his profession, but on account of a long and serious illness of his sister, he returned to his old home. He then formed a copartnership with the late Ashford Addison at this place, where he has remained and practiced his profession for more than forty years, except when interrupted by the Civil War. He joined the Confederate Army in 1861 at Camp More, joining Company F, 16th Louisiana Regiment, St. Helena Rebels—D. W. Thompson, captain—and was made orderly sergeant. On the reorganization at Tupelo, Miss., in 1862, he was elected first lieutenant—E. John Ellis, captain—and served honorably until the close of hostilities. In the Fall of 1865 he was appointed district attorney for the district then embracing the parishes of St. Helena, Livingston, St. Tammany and Washington, and served for about two years. He was a vigorous and successful prosecutor, always believing that no guilty man should escape, but that justice should be tempered with mercy. He was elected parish judge in 1874, and served his term out. Judge Pipkin was married in 1878 to Miss Josephine Wright, who, with one daughter, four brothers and one sister, are left to mourn their loss. Judge Pipkin's home life was beautiful and attractive. Selfishness had no place in his generous and brave heart. He lived for those whom God committed to his charge. His was a sunny life. Always cheerful, he brought much sunshine into the lives of others. To make others happy was his chief joy. A child whose home was near our brother's residence said, "I miss Judge Pipkin so much." Little children loved him and delighted in his company. Flowers open to the sunlight. There was nothing small about our friend. His ear was open to the cry of the poor. Widows' interests were safe in his hands. No orphan ever lost a cent when he had charge of an estate. He was the embodiment of honor. No one ever entered the threshold of his happy home without feeling at home. To entertain a minister of the gospel was an act of sincere joy. More than one has said, "I never heard Judge Pipkin say an unkind word of anyone." It was an inspiration to be in his company for days and hear no unkind words from his lips. His speech, his silence reflected his noble heart. He was too brave to stab in the back. Everyone loved the judge for the reason he seemed to love everyone. In his later years his faith became brighter; the Bible became his constant companion. Our brother fell on sleep suddenly while talking to his wife. The Church, the State, his parish, the loved ones of the home circle, are all under the shadow of a great loss. We expect to see the friend of our early ministry in the city of God when the mists have cleared away.

I. W. COOPER.

We, the committee appointed to draft resolution regarding Miss MARY DOHERTY'S death, beg to report the following resolution:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his divine providence, to remove our friend and sister, Miss Mary Doherty, from our midst; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Bunkie Methodist Sunday-school, tender the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and while we bow in humble submission to his divine will, she will be sadly missed from our Sunday-school, and especially by the class to which she belonged. We are comforted, however, by the thought that she has gone to that higher and better kingdom to begin the life of peace and happiness which is the just reward of those who are faithful to the end; and while a bright and useful life has been cut short, we are satisfied that the pure Christian life she has lived, and the good example she has set before others, will live on. And we pray the Father, who doeth all things well, to use this as a means to convict the young people around us, and convince them that they, too, may be called as well as the older ones; hence the necessity of making immediate preparations to meet the issue. And we would especially petition the Father to be with those who are left behind to mourn her departure. May he sanctify these afflictions to their good, and may it be the means of drawing them closer to him who can soothe all sorrows and comfort those who are in distress.

Respectfully submitted.

MISS FLORA WATSON,
MISS ANNIE ROBERTS,
C. A. KNOLL,
Committee.

STEPHEN WESLEY, son of J. B. and E. A. Blackburn, was born April 17, 1900, and died June 20, 1901. It seems hard at times, viewing the matter through the flesh, to realize that little Wesley has already been translated into the home beyond this veil of tears, for, indeed, it seemed that there could be nothing amiss for him to dwell with us here; but viewing the matter as the spirit teaches, it only seems natural that such should be, as this earth is not the home of the soul, and, indeed, it is only fair and merciful that the Lord should be gathering his precious jewels to deck his crown, making preparation to meet his bride.

PAPA.

After about two weeks' illness the patient sufferer, little JOHNNIE W. ANDERSON, infant son of Rev. W. L. and Ida Anderson, aged fifteen and a half months, on the sixth of June, 1901, passed peacefully from the parsonage home in Maryland, near McNutt, to the paradise of God, to live with the pure and good. All that could be done by loving parents, skilled physicians and faithful friends, was done to save him, but God saw fit to call him home. Parents and friends, be faithful only a short while, and you will meet him again in a brighter world.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh, being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

CHURCH FINANCES.

BY S. B. M'CUTCHEN.

Is there a subject on which more stress is laid or which is more discussed than that which pertains to the financial question of our church? The number of enterprises in this connection undertaken by our denomination, keeps this kind of work constantly under way.

It may not be out of place to enumerate some of the objects which claim our support. First, education. At the last General Conference a movement was put on foot to raise one and a half million of dollars as a Twentieth Century Offering, which is equal to about one dollar per member of our church. Second, missions. Our Missionary Secretaries are making a commendable effort to raise an extra fund for the purpose of extensive work in China, and are meeting with success.

Third, our Conference collections, enumerated as follows: Missions, foreign and domestic. Church extension. Conference claimants, viz.: Superannuated or wornout preachers and their widows and orphans. Education for Centenary and Mansfield Colleges, as well as for the General Board, and Paine and Lane Institute. For the support of the Bishops of our church, and printing the Minutes of the Annual Conference. For these objects an assessment is made by the Annual Conference and apportioned between the seven presiding elders districts. The amount assessed to each district is apportioned among the different charges by the district stewards.

The preachers in charge are responsible for these collections, and it is left to their discretion as to how they will collect these funds.

Fourth, the allowance for the support of the preacher and the presiding elder are fixed for the former, after conferring with the preacher by the Board of Stewards, and the latter by the district stewards.

These are the institutions of the church, which each member obligates themselves to support. In this paper we wish to lay more stress on the obligation resting upon us to support our pastor, as in this the members are directly responsible.

Do we consider the obligation resting upon us, take an active interest in church work, and contribute systematically and regularly? If we do not, how can we expect that all accounts will be paid in full? Let us impress upon our minds the importance of having a system of giving and collecting.

Moses planned for the support of the Levites, who had charge of the priestly offices. Christ said the laborer was worthy of his hire, and commended the liberality of the widow who gave the two mites. Here we have the spirit of giving exemplified—the small offering is as acceptable as the larger. There should be no excuse for a church not meeting her obligations. Let every member of the church be assessed by the Board of Stewards, and this assessment submitted to them for any changes that the member may wish to make. When this is done, the obligation is on the member to pay the amount.

This, then, is a basis on which the stewards can calculate on raising the amount of the apportionment for the pastor and presiding elder.

Let it be understood that no member agreeing to an assessment can honorably avoid meeting this obligation. In the fifth chapter of Acts we are told of two persons who lost their lives for not keeping their obligations. Are we better than they? Should we fail to meet the trust reposed in us? How careful, then, should we be in meeting any promise made. Take the business world. We hear it said this or that man's word is as good as his bond. Yes, it is confidence that we have in each other that moves our commerce, estimated at sixty billion annually. We now have a population of 77,310,000, with a per capita circulation of $28.31, which gives us a money circulation of $2,190,609,144. Of this amount there is in the treasury of the United States $276,686,084, leaving about $1,900,000,000 in the hands of our people with which to meet their obligations and handle the products of our country. This is a small amount to handle the trade of our country, and were it not for the confidence reposed in each other, business would be stagnant and the country bankrupt. Destroy confidence, and we would have a panic, and chaos would be the result.

So the preacher has confidence in his congregation to pay the amount promised. Should they fail to keep this promise, he is disappointed, and is forced to fail to meet any little debt he has been compelled to contract during the year; so he is humiliated, and the church has been damaged. His promise is based on the promise of the church, and when the church fails to keep her obligations to him, he can but fail to keep his obligations to others; and when he thus fails he is not only personally injured, but also injured in his ministerial capacity. He has thus become the innocent cause of injury to the church and the cause of Christianity. So, then, let us remember that we must be honest before we can become truly and efficiently religious.

We hear it said by some church members that they will not pay any more for the support of the pastor, because he has offended them in some way, or failed in the performance of some duty, which may be true; but this by no means allows anyone to repudiate the obligation which they have assumed. For the same reason they might refuse to pay any obligation, no matter how binding.

DANCING IN OUR SCHOOLS.

BY REV. P. E. DUNCAN.

The amusements in which the children of Christian parents indulge is to them a subject of no small moment. There are some amusements that in themselves seem innocent, but when we put them to the test of tendency, they assume a different complexion. Of this class is the modern dance, the attendant evils of which have called forth the condemnation of every Christian church.

The question is sometimes asked at college, "What harm is there in a lot of girls dancing together?" If that were all, we could see none. But who will affirm that? There is a law of universal application, the law of affinity, that like attracts like. Become proficient in cards, and we gravitate to the card club; become proficient in dancing, and we gravitate to the ball-room; become proficient in the service of God, and we gravitate to his sanctuary.

Why is it that in many places our Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavors and Baptist Unions have but a bare existence? It is because the world has preoccupied the hearts of our young people, and chief among those agencies in effecting this in many places is the modern dance.

The old adage is true in moral as well as physical life, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." It is a very difficult task to stop a dancer after the taste has been formed; it is a comparatively easy thing to prevent if begun in time. The first drink, first card, first dance is the danger point.

Our government has discovered that it is much easier to prevent a contagious disease entering our land than to cure it when it has come. The greatest thought of the medical profession to-day is the prevention of disease by hygienic laws. A veluable lesson they set the Christian in preventing the spread of that worst of all germs—sin.

Now to the case in point. We have in our State a great institution of learning, of which every Mississippian is proud—in fact, one might say the entire South, as it is a pioneer in the industrial education of women, placing our daughters upon an equality with our sons in the practical race of life. We are proud of her high standard of scholarship, her able Christian president, and his efficient co-laborers. The school was never more prosperous or popular than it is to-day. There is one feature of the school, however, of which we are not proud—the Friday night weekly dance. We are aware that it is a State, and not a church school. Mr. Hopkins, in his book, "Law as Love, and Love as Law," claims that the citizens of a State have a right to crystallize into law those principles that best conserve the interests of her people. We believe that any unbiased mind will admit that the modern dance, as practiced to-day, is detrimental to the moral and physical condition of a people. But we claim to be a Christian State, and upon higher than civic reasons do we hold that this Friday night appendix should be abolished. Some of the evil results have come beneath the writer's notice. To see a bright young girl leave home with every evidence of an ardent Christian life, return home an expert dancer, an attendant of every ball, religious fervor gone, is enough to engage our prayerful attention. And my observation is, perhaps, the same as many other pastors, for this institution has representatives from the entire State.

I have been informed that a majority of the girls participate in the dance, and was not surprised when told further that the passion for dancing was so great that it was detrimental to the spiritual life of the school.

We do not believe that every young lady who engages in the dance there becomes a regular attendant at the ball-room, but we do believe, without exception, that everyone who engages in the dance does violence to her Christian character. They know that they take the first step across the line drawn between the Christian and the sinner. They also weaken the binding force of their solemn vows, thus making it more easy to break any other that may conflict with their pleasure. There is, besides, a subtle influence in the dance, an enthusiasm it engenders that suppresses the serious thoughts of life.

There are two other institutions of the State where dancing is engaged in. Against these we haven't a word to say, if it helps to cheer saddened lives of the inmates of our two asylums. But for a high institution of learning, that stands for an exalted womanhood, to foster an amusement, every tendency of which is downward, thus thwarting the very ends of the institution, we think is a reflection upon its high character. Were a circular letter addressed to the patrons of this institution upon this amusement, we believe there would come such an expression of protest against it that the honored president of that institution, backed by its Board of Trustees, would be only too glad to relegate to the Stygian shades, where it belongs, that standing temptation and destroyer of our noble girls. German and round dances are not proper amusements for female colleges patronized by Christian people.

MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Monroe District Conference convened in Winsboro, La., June 27, 1901, with Rev. J. M Henry, the efficient presiding elder, in the chair. He is not only large in size, but also has a "big soul," and makes a fine officer and leader. The preachers all love him. W. R. Harvell was chosen secretary. The entire session was pleasant, harmonious, profitable, and spiritual. All the preachers were present but Rev. J. E. Denson, and a goodly number of lay delegates—more than usual The district is in a fair condition, spiritually; Sunday-schools doing well, some accessions to the church, a few conversions, finances better than usual, a few W. H. M. Societies doing fine work.

One evening session was given to the subject of missions, when Rev. J. R. Moore delivered a very fine address on the New Orleans Missionary Conference. Rev. S. J. Davies also addressed the Conference, his subject being, "Personal Religion in Relation to Missionary Work."

Mrs. M. E. Carr, secretary of W. H. M. S., was present, and read quite an interesting and encouraging paper, showing what our good women are doing for the advancement of God's kingdom.

Half the preachers said they would bring up collections in full, and the other half are going to do their best to have a full report.

Rev. M. H. Hunnicutt was recommended for admission on trial.

J. B. Reily, C. M. Nobles, Albert Haily, H. C. Voss were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; alternates: T. L. Hansey and W. W. Drake.

Collinston was chosen as the place for holding the next session of the District Conference.

Suitable resolutions were passed endorsing the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and pledging the editor our hearty support.

Bro. Neill made us feel at home, giving each man the best home and an abundance of ice water, which was very palatable.

Thus ended a few days spent together at Conference, which was edifying and refreshing, and we all left with renewed strength, determined, by God's help, to do more than ever to bring men to Christ and build up the church. W. R. HARVELL, Secretary.

OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

BY REV. G. W. BACHMAN.

The article of Bro. N. A. Mott, in this week's ADVOCATE, on "Sunday-Schools," has the right ring. His suggestions are wise and timely, and should provoke thought and discussion. I feel sure that our good editor is willing to gratify the "desire of many Sunday-school workers for a column in the ADVOCATE, to be edited by a practical Sunday-school worker, and to be used as a workers' exchange."

The Sunday-school is acknowledged on all hands as being one of the most important interests of the church of to-day. Upon its success depends largely the church of the future and the early evangelization of the world. Therefore, it becomes those who have this great work in hand to lay it upon their hearts in study and prayer, and to avail themselves of all means to obtain knowledge that will be helpful in its promotion.

I do not know that we of "Louisiana and Mississippi" are ready to plead guilty to the charge made by our able and highly esteemed Sunday-school Editor, Dr. Atkins, that we are "fifty years behind the times in Sunday-school methods, enthusiasm, and interest;" but it is evident that we are not near so well "up to date" in practical work and efficiency as we should be, and as it is our privilege to be.

Too much of our Sunday-school work is simply superficial and perfunctory. There is lack of intelligence, consecration and energy on the part of pastors, superintendents and teachers that is necessary in order to the greatest results. Light, encouragement and inspiration are needed, in order to which let us have the "Workers' Exchange" column in the ADVOCATE. In this let successful Sunday-school workers briefly give their views, observations and experiences in the various phases of the work.

From my point of view, I would suggest the following as subjects of importance for consideration just now, viz.: The Functions of the Conference Sunday-school Board, Grading the School, Teachers' Meetings, The Home Department Work, How to Teach a Class, The Use of the Bible in the School, The Need of Normal Institutes, The Importance of Organizing the School into a Missionary Society.

We have men among us, both lay and clerical, who are capable of writing intelligently on these and other matters pertaining to the work, and whose views would be helpful to the less learned and experienced. Let such be heard from through our Conference organ. Their writings will add interest to the already excellent paper, and will tend to promote a good cause.

BY REV. H. W. RICKEY.

"How happy they
Who, from the toil and tumult of their lives,
Steal to look down where naught but ocean strives."

What a goodly company—socially, intellectually, religiously! The cream of three Conferences, such associations set the joy-bells of memory chiming anew the blessings of the fellowship with the household of God.

The Revs. Keener, Simmons and Cox were the spiritual leaders. Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana wheeled into line, and charged not as a light brigade, but as a solid phalanx, and Satan was sore discomfited. The preaching was pointed and powerful. It aimed at something definite, and hit true. The simplicity and the certainty of tone gave a directness. It was what Henry Van Dyke would call "straight sermonization." They went in to save souls; they impressed you not as men with a manuscript, but men with a message, burning to drive it home.

The Alabama preachers are a noble set of men. The gentle Dickerson, the frank Cumming, the gifted Trawick, the alert Glenn, the promising Crymes, the honest Rineheart, the diligent Cox, made up a combination capable of pulling any camp meeting out of the slough of despond.

The Mississippi delegation—who could help loving Simmons, admiring Leggett, rejoicing with Meadow, respecting Featherstun, and being strengthened by L. S. Jones' efforts?

As for Louisiana, the clever and courteous LaPrade, the genial Keener, the robust Henry made up a strong preaching trio. Time would fail me to tell of others not less worthy, but whose company good men love to keep.

As to results: Reclamations were numerous, confessed conversions, 80 to 100; several accessions to the church, and an uplifted faith in camp meetings as a soul-winning institution. Its day of usefulness has only begun, instead of being over.

The many thoughtful and delicate attentions one receives from the superintendent, the management, the tenters, are they not laid up in our hearts? There is no place where they do more for Methodist preachers. A valet is kept on hand day and night at Wesley Hall for their convenience, and the dinings out were seasoned with the spice of conversation and the sauce of wit.

The grounds are growingly beautiful. An ideal spot as a nerve restorer. It gets into the very brain and heart a soft, soothing influence like choral whisperings from the vasty deep; "voices sweet from far and near, ever singing in one's ear, 'Here is rest and peace for thee.'"

A vacation! What do with it? Head straight for that place so full of memories as dear as ever the heart of an angel sang into the ear of God.

We stood out on the pier at the even-tide; the lights sent shafts fathoms down into dark waters; the stars began to blink as if they must wake up to their night's work; the moon crept from behind Deer Island, and smiled down ripples of silvery laughter as they kissed the waves, to leave such good things behind.

"'Tis lone on the waters,
When eve's mournful bell
Sends forth to the sunset
A note of farewell!"

NOTE FROM TUPELO.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Please allow me to state through the ADVOCATE that Tupelo station subscribed $75 to the Twentieth Century Fund last Winter, and it will be paid. We hope to increase that amount by Conference. By some innocent mistake our report did not reach Bro. J. R. Bingham in time to be published.

Miscellaneous Notes.

We have received a copy of the address of Dr. C. W. Carter, P. E., to the members of the M. E. Church, South, in the Crowley district. It is principally devoted to missions, and is an earnest presentation of the cause. It shows how the church in the Crowley district has grown; also the increase in missionary contributions, and earnestly exhorts to greater things. The many facts presented by Dr. Carter, and the exhortation so hearty, are obliged to accomplish good.

Dr. Urquhart, of the Alabama Advocate, is decidedly of the opinion that the reason why men do not go to church in larger numbers is because they "lack confidence in the piety of their wives, mothers, and sisters." Too many of the women go to church on Sunday, and have card parties and wine suppers on Monday. The good Doctor may be right as to those men who are out of the church, and not inclined to be religious. But can he tell us why so many men who belong to the church have ceased to attend? Surely the wives, mothers and sisters are as consistent as these.

UNCLE TOMMY LAMAR.

More than one third of a century has passed since I first saw Uncle Tommy Lamar. During the roll of these years I have forgotten many men and things. But I have never forgotten him. The day and the place when and where we met are well remembered. The circumstances and all connected with that meeting were stereotyped on the spot. The facts have been recalled more than a thousand times. It was in the middle of December, and the day was cold. I was junior preacher, making my first round on the Oxford circuit, which was then in the Memphis Conference. He lived in the extreme northeast corner of the circuit, and in a country strange to me, but I secured directions, and had no difficulty in reaching his home. The old gentleman was not about the house when I hailed, but the good wife and daughters answered my call and made me welcome. After a comfortable warming I went out to look after my horse, as was my custom. Just as I unsaddled him an old man approached. He was tall, large, broad-shouldered, and clad in coarse homespun, rather "the worse for wear." He was clean-shaven, and good looking; just such a man as a boy preacher "takes to" on first sight. That was Uncle Tommy Lamar. Of course, I knew him, but he did not know me. He was not expecting to see "the new preacher;" least of all did he expect to see a beardless boy. He greeted me with a smile. It was a broad smile, and did not narrow as I told him my name and mission. When I told him I was the junior preacher he seemed to be amused, and laughed outright; and as the saying is, "His mouth stretched from ear to ear." The idea of the great Methodist Church sending out such a specimen of humanity to preach tickled him all over. But Uncle Tommy did not "despise my youth." He received me in the name of the Lord, and "esteemed me highly in love for the work's sake." I found in him a friend and father.

I never knew anything of Uncle Tommy's early life, and made no inquiries. My knowledge of his ancestry was obtained from him in the course of ordinary conversation. He told me that he was "descended from the ancient Juggernauts." The Huguenots were intended, but I did not remind him of his mistake. Had he said Beelzebub, I would have held my peace. I simply knew him and his family as I found them in the back-woods forty years ago—poor, illiterate, but honest, religious, from the oldest to the youngest, and all devoted to the church. They were Methodists. Uncle Tommy was a man of strong common sense and good observation, and what he lacked in education he made up by the judicious use of these natural qualities; and when his devotion to Christ, his "gifts and grace" and holy zeal were considered, nobody was surprised that he occupied such a commanding position in the neighborhood and church, or that he was the ablest man in prayer in all the country. In my forty-two years of travel I have never met his equal in the humble walks of life. There was a personal magnetism about him that was irresistible, a warmth of nature that made everybody comfortable in his presence, and a freeness and frankness that secured for him confiding friends wherever he went. His influence was only bounded by the range of his acquaintance.

His influence was as great in his family as elsewhere. Such is not always the case, even with good men. I have known some fathers whose religion was respected by his children, but it did not have about it power sufficient to attract and hold them to Christ. It was different in this country household. Uncle Tommy was the priest of his home, and all under his roof felt his influence as a Christian. They lived together as Christians. This was so when I knew them, and at the time the household was large and made up of two families. The father was then about sixty years old, and living with his second wife, who was a widow when he married her. The two families, when united, brought together twelve or fourteen children, and they were evenly divided. The risk to happiness was a fearful one to take, but the confidence in the two old people was implicit, and the marriage proved fortunate. A stranger would never have suspected anything of the kind, and had he lived with the family, he could not have told which set of children were the old man's, and which the old woman's. There was a perfect blending of the elements. They loved and reverenced the father. I call to mind an incident which indicated their confidence in him. It was thrilling. It occurred during a meeting at the chapel, a little log-house where the family held membership. The interest was intense, the altar crowded with penitents and Christians eager for the conversion of their friends. At an opportune moment the congregation was called to prayer, and Uncle Tommy was asked to lead. He was in his best mood, and prayed with power. Only those who knew the old man, and had heard him in prayer, can have a clear understanding and appreciation of the effort and the scene that followed. No words can fitly describe the prayer or its effect. During the prayer the people were wrought up to the highest pitch of religious fervor. At the close a momentary silence prevailed, when one of the daughters, a lovely girl about seventeen years of age, approached him, while still on his knees, and, slapping him on the shoulders, exclaimed in a clear voice, and from the fullness of a loving and grateful heart, "Thank God for such a father." No scene or effect was intended by the innocent girl, but a shock of electricity could not have startled a silent assembly more suddenly. Such was the confidence of the community in the old man's religion that the daughter's exclamation seemed to run them wild. The outburst of holy joy was loud. It was a scene never to be forgotten.

Uncle Tommy held three offices in the church. He was class leader, steward and exhorter. His duties as leader were not oppressive. The preachers held class meeting twice a month, and the preacher-in-charge renewed the class book from year to year, and, as leader, he did little more than take charge of the book. Nor was the stewardship burdensome. The membership was small, and all, like the steward, were poor, and what little was paid was no trouble to collect. His office as exhorter gave him anxiety and trouble. Sense of duty only kept him in it, and, in spite of that, he would sometimes act the Jonah. This was because of excessive timidity, which was positively painful to him. Though so gifted and fluent in speech, he would never exhort after a sermon, which was customary in those days, if he could avoid it. The year I was on the Oxford circuit he attended one of our camp meetings, about twenty-five miles from his home. It was the occasion of the fourth Quarterly Conference, and the presiding elder was in charge. In arranging the work, he appointed Uncle Tommy to exhort after the early morning sermon, and notified him the evening before. It was all the old man could do to exhort at an ordinary meeting in the presence of the circuit preachers; to speak before the presiding elder and other strange preachers was more than he could stand, and when looked for next morning, he was missing. He had risen a long while before day, and at the hour for exhorting he was at home. Even at his advanced age it frightened him to pray in public. I have heard him say that frequently, when called on, he got so scared he "would have to shake his foot to see whether or not he had any toes." But he loved the church, worked for it, delighted in all her ways, and highly enjoyed all the services, if he had the least assurance that the preacher would let him alone at the close. Often half the enjoyment of a good sermon would be lost in dreading what was likely to follow.

It was really no trouble for the old man to pray; and no one unacquainted with his timid nature would suspect that he was in an agony. I was amazed, as well as agreeably surprised, the first time I heard him. I heard him often, and I thought he could get nearer heaven on a cold day in that little open log-house than any man on earth. In that land he had no equal. If I ever heard two men who surpassed him, they were Bishop Paine and Rev. Thomas J. Neely, recently deceased, of the Memphis Conference. There was another man in the circuit of considerable fame as a leader in public prayer, and many people thought he was Uncle Tommy's superior. The ability of the two was frequently canvassed. It happened once that they met at old Hickory Flat Camp Meeting, and the respective friends of the two men among the sinners made a bet, and staked their money, each party confident that their champion could beat the other praying. Wash Jeter was called on first. He prayed powerfully, and his friends were jubilant. They did not suppose any man living could do better. Uncle Tommy's friends lost spirit, for they acknowledged that Brother Jeter's prayer was "hard to beat." When Uncle Tommy was called on, he soon had the congregation, as Bishop Kavanaugh used to say, "in a sanctified uproar." By the time he was half through Wash Jeter's backers handed over the stake — completely beaten. Such a bet was not only wicked, but out of place; and, of course, the two men were ignorant of the plan. It would have shamed them both had they heard of it, and caused them to leave the ground. We mention it only as an indication of Uncle Tommy's power in prayer, and of the people's interest in hearing him.

Uncle Tommy's home was humble, and destitute of the luxuries and many of the comforts of life, but he was generous and open-hearted, loved his friends and the preachers, and delighted to divide with them what little he had. I often ate at his table, and felt it a privilege and a blessing to abide under his roof. He was unlettered—read little save his Bible—but he had good sense and much experience in grace, and could talk of God and his mercy, and I felt proud to sit at his feet and learn. He followed his children, and spent his last days in Arkansas, maintaining his integrity to the last. Should I be so fortunate as to reach the heavenly land, I expect to be greeted by Uncle Tommy Lamar.

The company in which you will improve most will be the least expensive to you.—Washington.

FROM COVINGTON, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Sojourning awhile of late in Covington has brought to mind many things "of auld lang syne."

Last Sabbath I had the pleasure of worshiping with a small congregation in the New Old Church, of which Bro. F. G. Hocutt is the present pastor, and is serving his third year. Through Bro. Hocott's indefatigable efforts the old church has been remodeled and modernized to such an extent that none of the pastors of former years would recognize it if they could revisit the same at this time. They all belonged to "the noble army of martyrs," and nearly all of them have gone over to join "the great majority." Some of the names I now recall I will mention. The first I knew was Rev. J. W. Lusk. He succeeded Rev. Peter Emerson Green, both of whom were Holy-Ghost livers as well as preachers. Bro. Lusk was here in 1850-51. I think J. Bowen, with J. W. Boyce as junior, came next; then Archibald Nicholson, Geo. T. Vickers, R. Dew, G. Bancroft, B. Shelton, and R. B. Downer. After the war H. Bower, H. R. Singleton, Geo. T. Vickers, L. Featherstone, M. B. Sherbrough, G. F. Gillespie, N. B. Young, J. W. Backus, J. D. Crymes, J. Peebles, J. W. Brown, R. B. Downer, who was the last of the Mississippi preachers. From the Louisiana Conference there was Thomas Brown, A. Campbell, J. C. Currie, J. B. Kent, H. Wallace, J. Jennings, F. G. Hocutt. These may not be in order as they served, and some may have been omitted.

Covington circuit was quite large, and before the railroads were built the preacher's traveling outfit was a pair of saddle-bags and a trusty horse or mule—sometimes a buggy. The work these preachers did is not dead, but follows on after them. Rev. Thomas Clinton was the first Methodist preacher that traveled this circuit.

Some abler pen than mine might fill in between the lines. Many things of interest that I have not mentioned, or have forgotten.

But to return to the church. Sunday last Bro. Sourlock preached in the absence of Bro. Hocutt. Having met him at Algiers in 1885, I was glad to clasp his hand once more. He is here for his health, and is resting also. Another friend I met was Sister W. F. Warren. She and I had worshiped together when we were young and Bro. Lusk was pastor, and are, perhaps, the only two that are living that were here then when the pulpit was reached by a flight of stairs, as high, perhaps, as the one from which Neander fell in his burst of impassioned eloquence before the students. A heavy rainfall kept the congregation indoors some time, and gave us an opportunity to recall the many changes that had taken place in the old church. The plastering was removed, the galleries and columns also, and the walls are ceiled in a very artistic manner with pine ceiling, trimmed and varnished, and the old many-paned windows taken out and beautiful stained glass, with large and small panes, with ventilating appliances which give a subdued light and ample circulation of air. The tower on one corner adds to the attraction and convenience of the entrance.

Sister Hocutt took me out of the rain and into the parsonage, where we enjoyed its peaceful quietness and hospitality; and so passed a Sabbath day in Covington.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY COMMENCEMENT.

The forty-first annual commencement of the Southern University was one of the most interesting in the history of this great institution. On Sunday morning, the ninth of June, a large, cultured audience assembled in the beautiful college chapel to hear the annual sermon delivered by Bishop Galloway. Of course, all were expecting a great treat, and they were not disappointed. His text was the forty-sixth verse of the seventh chapter of St. John, and his theme was, "Christ, the Incomparable Teacher." For nearly an hour he held the attention of every one of that large congregation with his fine thought, clothed in eloquent, beautiful language. He showed how the greatest leaders of the world's history, with all their toiling and genius, had failed to impress the world with their greatness for any length of time, while Christ, who never even wrote but once, and then in the sand; who never argued, but threw out facts and words of wisdom everywhere with a careless abandon, was still living in the hearts of men, and not one of his words had ever been lost. Of course, it would consume too much space to give even a synopsis of the sermon; but with such a subject and such a speaker, there could be naught else but a grand discourse.

The sermon on Sunday evening before the Y. M. C. A. was delivered by Rev. W. P. Hurt, of Selma, a former graduate, and was a strong, thoughtful effort, full of sound advice to the young men.

On Monday morning, at 10:30, the Sophomore prize declamation took place. There were twelve speakers, all of whom showed that they had been well trained. Mr. D. G. Wilkinson, of Gastonburg, Ala., was awarded the gold medal, and Mr. H. B. Heidleberg, of Mississippi, received the second prize.

On Monday night the Junior exhibition took place, when eight young men contested for the Junior medal, which was won by Mr. R. E. Sessions, of Montevallo, Ala.

On Tuesday morning Rev. A. L. Andrews, of Montgomery, delivered an address before the Alumni Association on "The Claims That the State Has on Her Educated Manhood." It was full of good counsel and splendid thought, and was delivered with great earnestness and power. Rev. Dr. J. A. Duncan, pastor of Centenary Church, Chattanooga, next addressed the two literary societies on, "What the World Owes to Her So-called Visionary Men." He showed how all the great inventions and marvelous achievements of the present day are but the fulfilled dreams of the past. His address was out of the ordinary line of thought, and the audience was charmed and delighted.

On Tuesday night was held the most interesting contest of all—the oratorical contest between the Belles Lettres and Clariosophic Societies. Two young men from each society declaimed for the $25 gold medal, which was won by Mr. J. D. Carpenter, of Tryon, N. C.

Wednesday was the greatest day of commencement. There were sixteen young men graduates and one young lady. Six of the young men spoke for the Senior medal, which was won by Mr. D. C. Turnipseed, of Flora, Ala. He also won the essayist medal. After awarding diplomas, prizes, etc., and making announcements, the Doxology was sung, and this most interesting commencement was a thing of the past. The college has enjoyed a year of prosperity, and hopes for yet greater things in the future. It has sent out hundreds of noble young men to bless and uplift the world, and if her friends will rally to her support, she will unfurl her banner to the breeze, and accomplish grand and noble things for Southern Methodism.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE W. H. M. S.

Report of Sardis District Conference, held at Batesville, as given by the delegate from the Sardis H. M. S. to her society, and forwarded by Mrs. W. H. Wall, president of Sardis Society:

At 8:30 P. M., June 26, the joint exercises of the F. and H. M. Societies of Sardis district were opened by singing, "Joy to the world." Bro. Lagrone led in prayer. Mrs. McIntosh read a verse from the Book of Esther, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." She spoke impressively about women of to-day coming to the Lord's kingdom for a mission time like this. "We are going down the valley" was sung by five gentlemen. Welcome address was made by Miss Ora Johnson. Mrs. Varner, who was to respond, failed to attend, and Miss Julia Jones simply and sweetly returned thanks for the society. Mary Lagrone recited a beautiful poem, "Starless Crowns;" a pantomime, "Jesus, lover of my soul," was rendered by five little girls; a solo followed by Stella Bobo; Miss Violet Dyer recited, "For love's sake;" Mrs. Potts sang, "The Holy City," and then came the collection.

Thursday, at 9:30 A. M., the H. M. Conference opened, with Miss Julia Jones, district secretary, presiding. Mrs. McIntosh gave a talk on joy in the Lord. Then followed prayer, music, and the district secretary's report, which was a full account of the year's work, showing how H. M. work is growing year by year, and was very encouraging. Then came reports from delegates. Sardis Auxiliary had a fine report; 20 members, and at work in all departments. Batesville, 11 faithful workers, and hopes to increase work and funds; local department working well. Como had no delegate. Coldwater doing well; 12 names on Baby Roll. Courtland a small society, but working well. Mrs. McIntosh spoke feelingly of the grand work of home missions, of the necessity of caring for foreigners on our own shores, of the rescue work and work among the negroes. She said it was sometimes further to our kitchen than to China, and she had rather have her cook say she was a Christian than anyone. Minnie Lee Friend recited, "The Master's Questions," which was appropriate on mission work; then was read a leaflet, "Father's New Parsonage," and after a song the ladies retired to give place to the preachers and members of the District Conference.

NOTICE.

To the Officers and Members of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference—

DEAR SISTERS: Please read carefully the following appeal, and respond as God has prospered you. One dollar, or even fifty cents, from each auxiliary can be raised by a little extra effort, and will aid in a good cause. I shall take pleasure in forwarding any money contributed to the address of Mrs. E. K. Griffith, Jacksonville, Fla.

MRS. E. R. KENNEDY,
Conf. Cor. Sec.

Lafayette, La.

Jacksonville, July 12, 1901.

To the Conference Secretary, W. H. M. Society—

DEAR SISTER: The Bishops, at their late session, passed the following resolution in regard to rebuilding McTyeire Memorial parsonage on its former site, or some other suitable ground:

"That for the rebuilding of the McTyeire Memorial parsonage at Jacksonville, Fla., the Woman's Home Mission Society be requested to make special effort."

In answer to that resolution, we distribute this appeal to you, that you may have an opportunity to present it to your auxiliaries, and add your mite to the good cause. You can have no idea of the destruction and desolation that exists here; it is as complete as the Galveston horror.

More than two-thirds of the members of McTyeire Memorial are homeless, and almost the entire membership lost their business in the fire, and many of them are still out of employment.

It is impossible for us to rebuild our parsonage without help. We appeal to each Conference Society to send us twenty-five dollars. This, distributed among the auxiliaries of your Conference, would be less than $1 for each.

This is a case of immediate necessity, as our pastor had to send his family away from the city for lack of a home. Send contributions at once. MRS. E. K. GRIFFITH.

Some of our preachers need to understand that they have no right to enroll a member, whose membership is elsewhere, without a certificate of transfer. To coolly sit down and write a brother preacher, "Take So-and-so's name off your roll—he has cast his lot with us," is not disciplinary and is not right. We have known a local preacher to be thus summarily enrolled, his license renewed at a District Conference, and his name recommended for admission into an Annual Conference, while his membership was yonder where he left it, no certificate of church relations having been asked for or given. The Discipline plainly says that he shall not be recognized as a local preacher without a certificate from his presiding elder or preacher in charge. It is not safe to trample law under foot even in a good cause. —Midland Methodist.

Each one of us is bound to make the little circle in which he lives better and happier. Each one of us is bound to see that out of that small circle the widest good may flow. Each one of us may have fixed in his mind the thought that out of a single household may flow the influences that shall stimulate the whole Commonwealth and the whole civilized world.—Dean Stanley.

What are Humors?

They are vitiated or morbid fluids coursing the veins and infecting the tissues. They are commonly due to defective digestion but are sometimes inherited.

How do they manifest themselves?

In many forms of cutaneous eruption, salt rheum or eczema, pimples and boils, and in weakness, languor, general debility.

How are they expelled? By

which also builds up the system that has suffered from them.

It is the best medicine for all humors.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DOWNSVILLE, LA.

Rev. B. H. Sheppard, writing from Downsville, La., under date of July 22, says: "The work moves on very nicely; twenty-five accessions up to date, and fifteen infants baptized. We have a large field, and one white unto the harvest."

SIMMESPORT, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: It affords me pleasure to report to my predecessor (through you) in the Simmesport and Marksville charge, a good meeting at Simmesport, condnoted by Bro. Dan E. Kelly, resulting in the addition of seven adult members to the church. The membership was much quickened.

The W. H. M. Society has just placed a new set of pews, at a cost of about $336 30; also a new organ.

Your brother,
J. A. PARKER.

ZACHARY, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a meeting at Zachary, which resulted in seventy bright conversions and twenty-six accessions to the church. About one-half of those converted were members of the church who had never been converted, so I think I can safely say we have a converted church at Zachary. The Lord be praised!

Eli and Sam Riggs were with me. Eli did nearly all the preaching; Sam led the prayer meetings, and did a great deal of personal work. The brothers have decided to work separately in the future, as a large majority of preachers do not care to have more than one to assist them in their meetings. I have been associated a great deal with Eli, the elder brother, in revival work for the last five years. I can, therefore, heartily recommend him to the preachers of the Conference, if they need good and efficient help. He has been with me in very hard places, but I have not yet known him to fail. He, with Bible in hand, preaches a plain gospel, though in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. He resorts to no new-fangled or clap-trap methods, but to such as God has so wondrously blessed in our church for more than one hundred years. Sam, the younger brother, is a young man, with wonderful zeal and energy, and was very efficient and successful in our meeting. J. B. CASSITY.

ZWOLLE CHARGE, LA.

DEAR BROTHER: The Lord is blessing this part of his vineyard. Bro. C. P. Smith, from Crowley, La., assisted me in a meeting embracing the second and third Sundays in June at Noble, which resulted in great good to the church. The entire town was moved toward God and a better life by the power of the gospel, as delivered by this faithful servant of God. Notwithstanding the dry weather and oppressive heat, the interest increased as the meeting went forward, until the last night the house would not accommodate the people. There were nine accessions to the church, among whom were some of the leading people of the town. Several others accepted Christ, and, we think, will come into the church.

I have just closed a ten days' meeting at Bayou Sale, which is among the best I ever held. There were between thirty and forty conversions, which will work and talk for the Lord. Others claimed the experience of sanctification. There were twenty-nine accessions on profession of faith, backsliders were reclaimed, and the church gloriously revived. I baptized eleven adults and eight children, took up my Conference collection, and got $20 more than our assessment at that point. To God be all the glory.

C. F. STAPLES, P. C.

A GLORIOUS VICTORY.

We closed a ten days' meeting at New Iberia on the night of the fourteenth instant, which, under the circumstances, was a gracious victory for our God and church. This is the hot-bed of Catholicism, with all its moral laxness, and disregard of God's laws. Sabbath-breaking, social evils, sin and iniquity of every kind was in the ascendency. The people would not come to church. We had no way of "crying aloud" against these evils. Our voice was not heard; and while we were opposed to the employment of the popular evangelists, still, when we diligently sought a solution of our vexing problem, the Spirit of God seemed to point us to the method we pursued. We secured the services of Rev. Abe Mulkey, and for ten days he was as a voice crying out against sin. He fearlessly and faithfully pointed out the sins of the people. The largest audiences that ever attended Protestant services in this town were in constant attendance upon these services. The mayor, marshal, sheriff, councilmen, congressmen, judge, lawyers, doctors and business men, Catholics, Episcopalians—many of them that never entered a Protestant Church before—were interested listeners. The meeting far exceeded our expectations. While men will continue as before in sin, and while the outward effect on the lives of the people may not be as perceptible as we would like, still a deep, abiding work has been wrought, for which we devoutly thank God. The entire town came under the influence of the meeting. Our church is greatly revived. We received forty-three accessions, with more to follow. We now feel that we have a new lease on life, and that our entire work will assume a different aspect and soon be numbered among the best works in the district. We realize that our work is just begun, that much depends on our concerted action; and we ask the brethren to pray for us, that God may so direct his forces here so that we may present him a church (inward and outward) "without spot or wrinkle."

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN, Pastor.

WESSON, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER: By the kind invitation of the Bishop of Wesson, I am here assisting him in a revival meeting. His own well-known revival power and enthusiasm would insure the success of a meeting without the aid of another. Not only is Dr. I. L. Peebles abundant in ministerial labors, having received into the church this year upwards of one hundred and thirty members and baptized more than ninety children, but he is skilled in the healing art and is much sought after by the suffering.

In the matter of pastoral visiting, doubtless, he is without a peer in the Conference, unless it is Dr. W. C. Black, who, they tell me in Jackson, starts out on his rounds before breakfast.

Wesson is a delightful place, and the people are hospitable. The congregations are good, sometimes taxing the capacity of the building. There have been to date nineteen accessions and a number of conversions. The meeting is still in progress. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,
C. F. EMERY.

LORMAN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Our third Quarterly Conference for Harriston circuit, Natchez district, Mississippi Conference, has just been held, and we had a very profitable meeting. Our worthy presiding elder, Bro. T. W. Adams, was at his post, and preached us two very fine sermons, to the delight of his hearers. His sermon on Sunday was on missions, at the close of which he took a collection, and got not only enough to pay the assessment for both foreign and domestic missions, but to pay a little balance due for Bishops, and ran over enough to meet all other Conference collections for that church. The collection was in cash and good subscription. Oh, how good I feel over it. Now, I hope that will be the beginning of the end. I hope the other churches will follow suit, and meet quickly the demands upon them. God bless them all. The stewards of the circuit also made a fine showing for the support of the preacher-in-charge and presiding elder. Our people are certainly very kind and considerate for their pastor and family. May God graciously bless them all, and give them great prosperity!

FROM M'COMB CITY.

The church at McComb has been blessed by the presence of the Sunday-school Convention and of the District Conference, and already we are anticipating the pleasure and the profit of entertaining the Annual Conference in December. The Ladies' Aid has put in the church elegant electric light fixtures, and are now busily engaged in adding two rooms to the parsonage.

This material improvement has not been without spiritual growth. We now have five weekly prayer meetings, including that of the Epworth League. Two of these are held in the church and three are held in the homes of the people. The interest aroused in these prayer meetings has increased the attendance on the regular services of the church, so that during this heated season we have had our largest congregations. Not only so, but the old stand-bye have been praying so earnestly for a baptism of the Holy Ghost, that every one has began to look for convictions and conversions at every service, and God does not disappoint us. Last week four were added to the list of our praying members; two were converted and a large number so convicted that they asked for prayer. About twenty of our ladies have arranged to organize a W. F. M. Society on next Sabbath.

These are some of the visible signs of God's presence with us. Much, much remains to be done; but that God who has blessed the work of his servants through all the past years, will continue to bless. The men and women who have borne the heat and burden of the day shall yet see the fruit of all their self-denying labor and rejoice together over the full salvation of hundreds of souls.

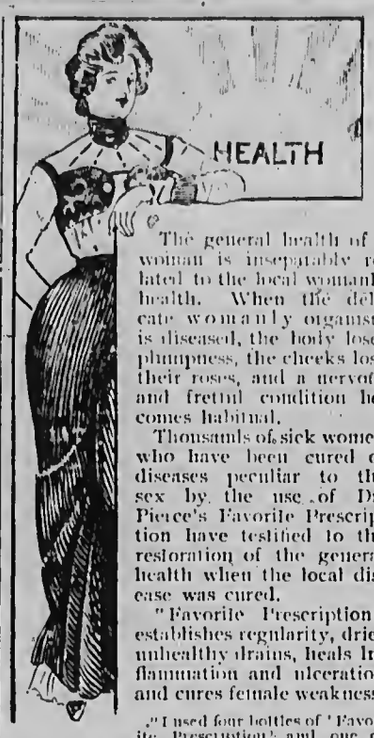
ORPHANS' HOME HOSPITAL.

Responses to Rev. W. G. Harbin's call for means to assist in building the hospital at our Orphans' Home, Water Valley, are beginning to come in. The first is from Lexington, Miss., as follows:

BRO. HARBIN: Please find inclosed $4.25 from our Junior Epworth League, contributed as a thank-offering to the building of the hospital in connection with our orphanage at Water Valley. Hoping you the greatest success, I am.

Very sincerely,
(MISS) MAGGIE B. FOSTER.

Souls are made sweet not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting something in—a great love, a new spirit, the Spirit of Christ. The Spirit of Christ, interpenetrating ours, sweetens, purifies, transforms all.—Drummond.



The general health of a woman is inseparably related to the local womanly health. When the delicate womanly organism is diseased, the body loses plumpness, the cheeks lose their roses, and a nervous and fretful condition becomes habitual.

Thousands of sick women who have been cured of diseases peculiar to the sex by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription have testified to the restoration of the general health when the local disease was cured.

"I used four bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mrs. Elmer D. Sheater, of Mountjhope, Lancaster Co., Pa., "and can say that I am cured of that dreaded disease, uterine trouble. Am in better health than ever before. Everyone who knows me is surprised to see me look so well. In June, when I wrote to you, I was so poor in health that at times I could not walk. You answered my letter and told me what to do. I followed your advice and to-day am cured. I tell everybody that with God's help Dr. Pierce's medicines cured me. If these few words are of any use to you, you are welcome to use them. They might help some other poor suffering woman."

This issue of the ADVOCATE has been delayed on account of repairs to the engine.

Any preacher must feel happy and amply repaid for all his work when he sees growing up under his ministry young men and women "on whom he can call for active work at any time, with the assurance that he need not call twice." And as the young in due time are to take the places of the old, the preacher ought to make the very best of his opportunities.

The simple gospel of Jesus Christ is complete in itself, and sufficient for the needs of the soul. Otherwise we had as well abandon our houses of worship, disband our churches, and seek happiness by the use of our own natural resources. This is what the self-confident and unconscionable egotist does. He is a self-worshiper; to all intents and purposes an idolater.

Some of our Baptist exchanges are spelling "Bishop" with a big B, and seem to take great pleasure in parading their pastors as "Bishops." That is all right. The Bishop is a New Testament functionary—an elder having the care of churches. The difference between a Methodist and a Baptist Bishop is: one is the overseer of all the churches, while the other is limited to one or two. Essentially, Bishops in both churches are the same.

It is reported that a "Methodist preacher" in the North offered a "gold coin" to every child brought to him for baptism. Fifteen were presented, and in the hand of each was placed a gold dollar for a moment, and then put into the care of an officer of the church, who deposited it in a bank, to draw interest until the children become of age. Unless some other reason besides a desire to baptize children moved the preacher to take such action, we are obliged to say that he loves sensation. It is simony reversed, and not a whit more to be commended.

In our sketch, last week, of Dr. Baskerville, we said his elder son "was for several years a popular and useful preacher in the Memphis Conference; the younger is to-day a professor in Vanderbilt University." The statement was true when the sketch was written, several years ago. Since then, the elder son, Rev. G. B. Baskerville, re-entered the itinerancy, and is now a presiding elder in the Memphis Conference, and the younger, Prof. Baskerville, has entered into rest. We were absent from the office when the sketch was put in type, and we failed to read the proof. Hence the error.

JOB AS AN ENSAMPLE.

Good men of old are named in Scripture as worthy to be imitated in spirit and example. None worthier than the patriarch Job is mentioned. He is pointed out by the Almighty himself—that, too, before there had been any test of a severe character applied. In the days of his prosperity, even when he had become the richest man in all the East, he was remarkable for his loyalty to God, and his love for humanity. In the days of his distress he looked back to his former life, and rejoiced in the fact that he was devoted to God, and used his wealth for the benefit of others.

"Hast thou considered my servant, Job," said the Almighty to Satan, "that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?" He loved and feared God because it was right, and not for any selfish or secular consideration, as was charged by the wicked one. His spirit and example are specially to be commended to persons in great distress. No man ever suffered more, or was more patient under the rod.

The chief characteristic of this man's religious life, exhibited under most trying circumstances, was his resignation to the divine will. He regarded his possessions, everything he had, including his family, as gifts from God, who had a perfect right to deal with him and his as he saw fit. Everything that affected his life, he looked upon as providential. Hence he had no complaints to make. If God had a right to rule in his life, it was his business to be patient and submissive. How sublime was he in the exhibition of that patience! When bereaved of his children, "seven sons and three daughters," he fell upon the ground and worshiped, and said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." When his property was swept away—a calamity that most men would be slow to accept as a blessing, or as proof of God's wisdom and goodness—he "sinned not, neither did he charge God foolishly." In the depth of his sufferings, afflicted "from the sole of his foot unto his crown," accused of hypocrisy by "miserable comforters," and foolishly advised by his wife to "curse God and die," he maintained his integrity, and in the fullness of an all-conquering faith he proclaimed, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Was there ever a clearer manifestation of patience, submission, and complete trust in God? Dear reader, if you are mourning on account of the death of loved ones, or suffering through the loss of property, or wading the deep waters of affliction, remember God is the same to-day that he was in the time of Job, and that Job's patience was a triumph of his faith in God. Job is an ensample to all the saints.

THE CONGRESS OF RELIGION.

The Congress of Religion, so called, held its seventh general session in Buffalo, New York, June 26 to July 1. It was not much of a "Congress," judged by the report made by one who was in attendance, and in sympathy to some extent with the object of the gathering. Notwithstanding it was held in Buffalo, and the Pan-American Exposition having an average daily attendance of 26,000 persons from all parts of the world, the number who gave attention to the twelve sessions of the Congress averaged "scarcely more than one hundred." That was discouraging indeed.

Doubtless, had the Congress been held at another time and place, with no rival attraction or sensational producing occasion, many hundreds would have looked on, to gratify curiosity, if for nothing else. But the truth is, the Christian people of our land, as ready as they are to extend the hand of fellowship to all who profess to love the Lord, are not willing to recognize any un-Christian or anti-Christian form of religion as on an equality with the religion of Jesus. This was done in the "Parliament of Religions," in Chicago, in 1893, and this Congress is the successor of that Parliament. It is true that the object of the Congress, as set forth, is not quite so broad, but it looks towards the breaking down of our denominationalism, which we are no more ready to do than we are to sit on the same platform in perfect equality with the followers of Confucius or Buddha.

The object of this Congress "is to unite in a larger fellowship such existing societies as are in sympathy with the movement towards undogmatic religion, and to foster the organization of non-sectarian churches on a basis of absolute mental liberty." This, it seems to us, no loyal churchman can do. "Absolute mental liberty" is denied to none, and all who feel hampered in their church relations may retire, without doing violence to their church vows, or any great damage to the church of which they are members. But so long as they continue in fellowship, consistency requires that they withhold their influence from organizations that tend to break up their communions. No preacher can encourage such a Congress, with its avowed purpose, and at the same time honestly eat the bread of the church at whose altars he ministers.

We can readily see how the pastor of the People's Church, Chicago, can join in such a movement, for that church is the outcome of such liberal sentiments; but how the pastor of a Baptist Church, or Presbyterian, or the rabbi of a Jewish Synagogue, can open their doors and entertain a body of men who purpose their overthrow, is something we can not understand. As a Methodist, we are fraternal, and carry our brotherly feelings as far as possible; but we are not going to join hands with those who would wipe Methodism from the earth.

CARING FOR ORPHANS.

Why are Protestants always berating themselves and each other for "failure to care for orphan children?" The Roman Catholics are constantly being praised for their great charity in this respect, as though they were the only Christians that paid attention to the fatherless and homeless. Protestants, it is often affirmed, do nothing of the kind—at least, nothing worth mentioning. We slander ourselves.

Of course, we have not a word to say against the work of Roman Catholics in this direction. They are to be commended, but it should be borne in mind that their care of orphans is usually, if not invariably, in asylums located in large cities, and that wherever located, they are supported by the public, not by Roman Catholics exclusively. Protestants, who outnumber Roman Catholics in the United States about fifty millions, and are more numerously scattered through the country, exercise their charity in caring for orphans in a more quiet way—a way not so easily seen, and never paraded before the public. They are cared for by private families. To what extent can never be told, for no record, as far as we know, is kept. The neighborhood in which an orphan can not be found, cared for by some kind family, is an exception.

If what we say above is true, then it is at once seen that the difference between Roman Catholics and Protestants in the general care of orphans is one of method. Both do the same work, but differently. Roman Catholic families, as a rule, do not shelter orphan children. No doubt, here and there they do. We have, during several years past, frequently made inquiry of men in public and private life, and we have found but one man who ever knew a Roman Catholic family to take care of a fatherless child; and that man never knew but one. The reason is plain: They have public orphanages.

Why Protestants have never availed themselves more generally of the Roman Catholic method we undertake not to say, but we do undertake to say that it is not for lack of charity or disposition to care for the helpless. And, if in the matter of a general and systematic way of caring for orphans, Protestants have been remiss, we are glad to note that they are seeing and acknowledging their error, and are building and equipping for them pleasant and commodious homes. If, however, this means the abandonment of the old method, then the number and capacity of public orphanages must be largely increased. Present facilities are not adequate.

Mississippi Methodists have an opportunity to demonstrate the worth of an orphans' home, not in a great city, but in the country. So far it has justified its right to existence, and to call upon the public for means to maintain it. We are much encouraged. The boys and girls, now being trained, educated and developed, give promise of making useful men and women. The Church in the State has nothing before it more worthy of their gifts than the Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home at Water Valley. It is doing a great work for the fatherless.

AN ERRONEOUS STATEMENT.

A brother of a sister denomination is quoted by one of our exchanges as saying that the Methodists of Georgia raise for missions "an average of $1.13 per capita, at an expense of $40,000; and the Baptists raise 46 cents per capita, at an expense of $5,000." We do not know how much the Baptists of Georgia raise for missions, nor how much it costs them. The brother who makes the statement may be correct. But as to the Methodists of Georgia, he is poorly informed. We take it for granted that he is talking of Southern Methodists, as they are the principal body by that name in the State.

The official figures show that the Southern Methodists of Georgia, numbering 162,297, paid last year for missions, both foreign and home, $47,530.21, or a fraction less than 30 cents per capita. If we add to the above figures what the women of Georgia raised in their separate societies, the amount would probably be $75,000, or a fraction over 46 cents per member. The women of the North Georgia Conference raised $27,113.50. The figures for South Georgia are not at hand.

The ugly thing in the paragraph quoted is the statement that the Methodists of Georgia collect their money for missions at an expense to them of $40,000 a year. This was intended not so much as a fling at Methodists for extravagance, as a thrust at what the Baptists call the "Board Method" of collecting money. As a matter of fact, not a man or woman in Georgia is paid anything for collecting money for missions, unless one happens to live down there who is an editor or General Secretary.

We have no General Home Mission Board, except the Woman's (our work of this character being conducted by the several Annual Conferences), and the Home Mission money, $155,625.83, is collected and disbursed absolutely without expense, save for stationery, postage, and other small amounts for incidentals. There is no salaried officer. Our General Board, located at Nashville, which has to do with the foreign work alone, costs for general officers $7,500, and for clerk hire, we estimate, sufficient to raise the salary expense to $12,000. In the absence of figures, we dare say, after deducting amounts received for subscriptions to missionary literature, the total expense of the office will not exceed the half of $40,000 a year—about 8½ per cent. of all collections for foreign missions. If we include the amount collected for home missions, the expense of the whole work is only about 5 per cent. of the annual receipts.

Possibly our estimate of cost, taking into consideration the traveling expenses of two Secretaries, may be too small. If so, we stand ready to be corrected.

MERIDIAN IN MOURNING.

Our church in Meridian is in great sorrow. A note from the presiding elder, Rev. G. A. Guice, and also one from Rev. J. M. Weems, pastor of Central Church, inform us that Rev. W. M. Stevens, pastor of West End Church, passed peacefully to rest after a brief illness, on the evening of July 22; and on the afternoon of the twenty-third Mrs. Alford, wife of our preacher at South Side Church, Rev. L. F. Alford, after a few days of sickness, went home in triumph. Brother Stevens and Sister Alford were highly esteemed in Meridian for their works' sake, and will be greatly missed. We deeply sympathize with the loved ones who are left to mourn.

OUR SCHOOLS.

During the present month parents and guardians will settle the question as to what school they will send their children and wards. Many boys and girls who have gone through the public or private high schools at home will go abroad to complete their education. On account of health, and possibly for other reasons, not a few will select a school north or east of our patronizing territory. Their attention is directed to schools advertised in our columns. If you are looking away from home for a school, investigate "The Randolph-Macon System" of schools of Virginia. The schools are not co-educational, but five schools at five different places under one management. Hollins Institute, Hollins, Va., claims attention. Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., the "oldest college for women in the world," asks for patronage. Then come Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn.; Virginia College for Young Ladies, Roanoke, Va., and Shorter College for Ladies, Rome, Ga. These are followed by Centenary Female College, Cleveland, Tenn.; Howard Institute, at Mount Pleasant, Tenn., Martin College for Young Ladies, at Pulaski, Tenn., and Powhatan College for Young Women, at Charles Town, West Va.

In our columns are represented The Mooney School for boys, at Franklin, Tenn.—a safe place; and the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala. Of course, every young preacher who desires full equipment, as well as many others who purpose obtaining a university education, will go to Vanderbilt.

Inside our own territory we have as good schools as can be found, both for preparatory and higher education. We have Centenary College, Jackson, La.; Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss.; East Mississippi Female, Meridian, Miss.; Belhaven College for Young Ladies, Jackson, Miss.; Edward McGehee College for Girls, at Woodville, Miss.; Stanton College for Young Ladies, at Natchez, Miss.; Millwood Institute, Jackson, La.; Chamberlain-Hunt Academy, Port Gibson, Miss.; Cooper Institute, Daleville, Miss., and the Poplarville High School, Poplarville, Miss. We have also the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, and Tulane University of Louisiana, New Orleans. In addition to the general announcement of Tulane University, we also have a special announcement of the Medical Department of Tulane.

Turn to our advertising columns, read the addresses, and send for catalogues and information. Presidents, or secretaries of faculties, will take pleasure in corresponding with you.

PERSONAL.

A note from Dr. Cooper, president of Centenary College, informs us that Prof. Munsey Roberts, A. M., Vanderbilt, has been secured as principal of the Preparatory Department of the college.

Dr. J. W. Malone, of Oxford, has had a serious attack of sickness, but at last account he was improving, and, without backset, we dare say, has about recovered. He overtaxed his strength during the hot weather.

Rev. W. G. Evans, of Grand Cane, La., attended the Seashore Camp Meeting, and remained on the grounds, with his wife and children, resting, after the close of the meeting. He will remain a couple of weeks longer.

We had a pleasant call last week from Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir. He reported a good and successful meeting at Kentwood, in which he was greatly assisted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Grenada. Urgent business called him to the city, but he did not tarry long.

We had the pleasure, this week, of meeting Rev. J. H. Williams, of Slidell. He had just returned from his appointment on the coast, and reported a good meeting; fifteen conversions, and ten members added to the church. The meeting was very helpful to the membership.

We were sorry to miss seeing Dr. W. B. Murrah, who called a few days since in our absence. The Doctor is getting ready to start to the Ecumenical Conference, London, to which he goes as representative from the North Mississippi Conference. We wish for him a safe and pleasant journey.

Rev. H. H. Ahrens preached for our congregation at Crowley, La., last Sunday. Bro. Ahrens makes himself useful in several ways: preaching, lecturing, leading the song service when necessary, and working in the interest of the Daily Picayune. He is a great newsgatherer and a successful solicitor.

During the present Summer and Fall, Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Centenary, will assist in meetings throughout Louisiana, and help secure the collections for education, and otherwise interest our people in educational work. In the meantime Prof. H. B. Carre will act as vice-president of the College, with control in the absence of Dr. Cooper.

Don Carlos Emery, son of Rev. C. F. Emery, of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., was licensed to preach and recommended for admission into the traveling connection by the Jackson (Miss.) District Conference, recently held. Brother Emery is a young man of great promise, and it is predicted that he will have a useful career.

The Rev. W. W. Holmes, A. B., Millsaps College, 1900, who has spent the session of 1900 and 1901 at the Vanderbilt University, has been elected principal of Montrose High School, at Montrose, Jasper county, Miss. Miss Mayme Bruton has been elected first assistant, and Miss Mary Brue the music teacher. This school is the property of the Forest district.

The Forest District Conference, recently held, licensed Geo. W. Shearer to preach, and recommended Rev. W. W. Murray for deacon's orders, both of Carthage circuit. W. M. Thornton, P. L. Blackwell, J. A. Lindsay and C. W. Taylor were elected delegates to the Mississippi Annual Conference, with D. M. Womack, W. W. Murray, L. P., as alternates.

Rev. G. P. McKeown informs us that "Allan Stevens, the beautiful child of Rev. E. H. and Mrs. S. M. Monnger, of the Mississippi Conference, died at their home in Warren county on the twenty-third of July." We know how to sympathize with our dear brother and sister, and offer them both our sympathy and our prayers. May the good Lord heal the afflicted hearts!

A New Departure in Southern Educational Matters.

Centenary College, of Jackson, La., has introduced an innovation in Southern educational matters that will, doubtless, in the near future, prove a very popular as well as a very necessary and distinct feature of regular academic and collegiate courses, to-wit: a Commercial Department, embracing a thorough course in penmanship, short-hand and type-writing, book-keeping, banking, corporation, and expert accounting, business forms and law, and other features pertaining to a thorough business training.

The absolute need of the average person for a certain degree of familiarity with the established forms and rules of business practice is particularly accentuated in the college student and graduate, and the serious disadvantage to which he appears without it—often reflecting discredit and doubt on his other qualifications—was the primary factor in determining this new departure. When it is considered that a plain, practical business education is of valuable assistance, not only in every trade and profession, but in private life, and profession, but in private life, and for the first time, how far reaching and important is this movement. In fact, we have reached a period in our advancement, and facilities for advancement, that render an ignorance of such matters a reflection upon any person of intelligence.

Some of the advantages claimed by the introduction of this new department of Centenary College are:

1. By a judicious application of time and energy, the saving of the time and money necessary to take such a course after completing a regular college course.

2. The opportunity of those not able, either from lack of money or time, to take both full courses, to combine such features of both as will prove of the most practical and substantial benefit in every-day life.

3. The facility afforded those of limited means to obtain a commercial course who can not afford the expense attendant upon a similar course in the larger cities.

It is optional with the student to take the Commercial Course in part or whole, and in connection with other studies or not, as preferred. The new department is entitled Centenary College Commercial Institute This should guarantee its efficiency.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

A DAUGHTER WORTH HAVING.

Two gentlemen friends, who had been parted for years, met in a crowded city street. The one who lived in the city was on his way to meet a pressing business engagement. After a few expressions of delight, he said:

"Well, I'm off; I'm sorry, but it can't be helped. I will look for you to-morrow at dinner. Remember, two o'clock sharp. I want you to see my wife and child."

"Only one child?" asked the other.

And then they parted, the stranger getting into a street-car for the park. After a block or two a group of five girls entered the car. They all evidently belonged to families of wealth. They conversed well. Each carried a very elaborately decorated lunch basket. Each was well dressed. They, too, were going to the park for a picnic. They seemed happy and amiable until the car again stopped, this time letting in a pale-faced girl of about eleven and a sick boy of four. These children were shabbily dressed, and on their faces were looks of distress. They, too, were on the way to the park. The gentleman thought so; so did the group of girls, for he heard one of them say, with a look of disdain:

"I suppose those ragamuffins are on an excursion, too."

"I shouldn't want to leave home if I had to look like that, would you?" This to another girl.

"No, indeed; but there is no accounting for taste. I think there ought to be a special line of cars for the lower classes."

All this was spoken in a low tone, but the gentleman heard it. Had the child, too? He glanced at the pale face and saw tears. He was angry. Just then the exclamation, "Why, there is Nettie; wonder where she is going?" caused him to look out upon the corner, where a sweet-faced young girl stood beckoning to the car driver. When she entered the car she was warmly greeted by the five, and they made room for her beside them. They were profuse in exclamations and questions.

"Where are you going?" asked one.

"Oh, what lovely flowers! Whom are they for?" asked another.

"I'm on my way to Belle Clarke's. She is sick, you know, and the flowers are for her."

She answered both questions at once, and then glancing toward the door of the car, saw the pale girl looking wistfully at her. She smiled at the child, a tender look beaming from her beautiful eyes, and then, forgetting she wore a handsome velvet skirt and costly jacket, and that her shapely hands were covered with well-fitted gloves, she left her seat and crossed over to the little one. She laid her hand on the boy's thin cheeks as she asked his sister:

"This little boy is sick, is he not? He is your brother, I am sure."

It seemed hard for the girl to answer, but finally she said:

"Yes, miss, he is sick. Freddie never has been well. Yes, miss, he is my brother. We're going to the park to see if it won't make Freddie better."

"I am glad you are going," the young girl replied in a low voice, meant for no one's ears except those of the child. "I think it will do him good; it's lovely there, with the flowers all in bloom. But where is your lunch? You ought to have a lunch after so long a ride."

Over the little girl's face came a flush.

"Yes, miss, we ought to, for Freddie's sake; but, you see, we didn't have any lunch to bring. Tim—he's our brother—he saved these pennies so as Freddie could ride to the park and back. I guess mebbe Freddie'll forget about being hungry when he gets to the park."

There were tears in the lovely girl's eyes as she listened, and very soon she asked the girl where she lived and wrote the address down in a tablet which she took from a bag on her arm.

After riding a few blocks she left the car, but she had not left the little one comfortless. Half the bouquets of violets and hyacinths were clasped in the sister's hand, while the sick boy, with radiant face, held in his hand a package, from which he helped himself now and then, saying to his sister in a jubilant whisper:

"She said we could eat 'em all, every one, when we got to the park. What made her so good and sweet to us?"

And the little girl whispered back:

When the park was reached the five girls hurried out. Then the gentleman lifted the little boy in his arms and carried him out of the car across the road into the park, the sister, with a heart full of gratitude, following. He paid for a nice ride for them in the goat carriage and treated them to oyster soup at the park restaurant.

At 2 o'clock sharp the next day the two gentlemen, as agreed, met again.

"This is my wife," the host said, proudly introducing the comely lady; "and this," as a young lady of fifteen entered the parlor, "is my daughter."

"Ah!" said the guest, as he extended his hand in cordial greeting, "this is the dear girl whom I saw yesterday in the street-car. I don't wonder you call her a darling. She is a darling, and no mistake. God bless her!"

And then he told his friends what he had seen and heard in the horse-car.—New York Evangelist.

Confidences with Mother.

He was a shy little fellow, quite undemonstrative in his nature. But he had a secret in his little heart—a secret which he wished to share with the dearly loved mother.

The mother was sitting by the window with her sewing basket at her side. She was darning a hole in the knee of the shy little fellow's stocking. The boy edged up to his mother with an important look on his face, as if he were to divulge something of great importance, as he whispered:

"Mama, I wish to tell you a great secret, but I wish you to promise never to tell it—not even to Papa, or Leslie, or Kate, will you?"

"Most certainly, my dear, I will promise never to tell my little boy's secret. What is it?"

The boy bent down lower and whispered in his mother's ear:

"Marjorie Greenough is my sweetheart. Now don't you ever tell!"

The boy's finger was held up as a sign of guarantee for his mother, and with his face covered with blushes that he had been so communicative, he looked up into his mother's face. A smile was on it as she said: "Marjorie is a sweet little girl."

The boy had confided to his mother what to him was a sacred secret; it was in her keeping. Mother liked Marjorie. With a happy heart he went off to his play.

Two hours later he came back to his mother in tears, and in broken tones exclaimed:

"You told, Mama, you told, and you promised you would not! Kate has told Leslie and the boys, and they have been laughing at me!"

"Why, what do you mean, my child? I did not tell Kate a word. I promised I would not."

"No, but you told Aunt Helen when she came to see you this afternoon, and Kate was in the hall and heard you, and she said you and Aunt Helen laughed. Oh, Mama, I did not think you would, after you promised! I will never tell you any of my secrets again!"

What could that mother say? To her the little fellow's secret was a trivial affair—a cause for a smile and a little merriment with Aunt Helen—but nevertheless her promise was sacredly given to the child.

Ah! it is often the case that children are kept from confidences with mother for just such reasons. A promise given to a child should be as sacred as that to grown persons. One may say that such affairs are not of much moment beside weightier ones that come up every day, but they are.

The little fellow's secret was one of great importance to him. The telling of it to mother required a long deciding, but mother would never make a promise and break it. The secret was safe with mother, and so he told her. There is nothing so helpful to children as confidence in their mothers. The knowledge that they can go to them with their troubles and joys and talk them over, getting wisdom and good counsel regarding them, has proved a safeguard to many a child. The mother spoken of above not only broke her promise, but exposed her child to ridicule, which, with his sensitive nature, was more than he could bear.—Selected.

About Earthworms.

Unattractive and uninteresting though the familiar earthworms may seem, they have their place in the economy of nature. At the approach of Winter they burrow down deep below the frost line, and there they remain during the cold weather, often burrowing as deep as eight feet below the surface.

They are extremely sensitive to heat; and this is proven by the fact that they so quickly respond to the first warmth of early Spring, ofttimes coming from their underground retreats as early as February, when a warm rain has thawed the surface somewhat. We may see the castings of these primitive tillers of the soil long before we see any other sign of the awakening of the underground world.

Earthworms have no visible eyes. Their seeing apparatus consists of special single cells scattered among the epidermal cells of the skin, and connected with a little bunch of nervous matter in the body by means of a sensory canal. This simply enables them to distinguish light from darkness, which for them is sufficient, as they live underground anyway. In burrowing, the head is swelled by special action and the dirt is pushed away on all sides. It also swallows the dirt, which passes through the digestive canal. Darwin estimates that there are 100,000 earthworms in the upper six feet of every acre of ordinary soil.

They are continually turning over the soil and dragging down leaves and other matter, which helps to fertilize the soil and loosen the earth, allowing the air to reach the roots.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Proofs of Love.

Love always finds some practical convincing form of expression. Where love, ardent love, abounds it is scarcely necessary to speak it. It speaks for itself in unmistakable language. True love is very patient and always persistent. It has characteristic proofs which are readily recognized.

Love always manifests more or less of a passion to serve. Nothing is so gratifying and satisfying to love as an opportunity to minister. It never tires of service.

It proves its sincerity by willingness to suffer for the sake of others, or for the cause of truth and righteousness. Love and the spirit of self-sacrifice are near of kin. They always go together. In sacrifice love finds its supreme expression. It was so with the love of God. Sacrifice is the highest test of love. Here spurious love falters and fails.

True love is slow to believe an evil report and never indulges in evil-speaking. Tale-bearing is an offense to Christian love.

Where the love of God fills the heart and life, service is a joy; suffering and sacrifice for righteousness' sake will be cheerfully accepted, and that which stirreth up strife will be turned away, and that which makes for peace and quietness will be hailed with delight.—Exchange.

Little Sam's Answer.

This little incident that I am about to relate occurred in a little country schoolroom not far from the city of Philadelphia.

The clock was slowly ticking off the last minutes that belonged to the hour of twelve.

An air of uneasiness filled the room. The pupils were more interested in the movement of the clock than in their lessons.

At last there came from the lips of the teacher the welcome words: "Order, for dismissal." At once the scene changed; every face brightened as they hastened to obey the command of the teacher.

Now, among these pupils was a little colored boy of about twelve years, named Sam.

Sam looked so pleased, his little black face shone with delight. The teacher, noticing this, said: "Sam, what is the best thing you hear me say during a day?"

She supposed Sam would answer: "Order, for dismissal." But not so. His little face grew thoughtful, and in an instant he said: "The prayer what you say in the mornings before we sing."

Little Sam, ignorant and uncouth though he was, knew that we should count the prayer, "the little talk with Jesus," one of the "best" things of the day.—Emma C. Eastlack.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

Teachers Furnished.

We have several graduates and former students well trained as teachers, with fine Christian characters, suitable for college positions, high schools, city and country schools, and governesses; also music and elocution teachers.

Will put you in correspondence with one without cost to anyone. Apply to J. W. BERSON,

MELLOWING OF CHARACTER.

It takes time to ripen character. You can not force it any more than you can force the ripening of an apple. There must be a season of growth, and then a season of mellowing—first the soft Spring and Summer sun and dews and rain, then the dry Autumn heat and the nights of frost.

It is life, and life only, that ripens character; and it takes all of life to do it, too—the bitter and the sweet, the hard and the easy. Let us not be afraid, then, to live, however intensely! The moral coward—the man who is afraid of life, afraid of its depths and its heights, its valleys of humiliation and its peaks of vision, its significant experiences of whatever kind—is incapable of developing character. All these are the ripening experiences of the soul. We must expect them, as the apple expects the noonday blaze and the midnight frost. It is childish to shrink from the intensities of life. Why do we live, if not to meet life's requirements and bear its fruits?

It is always a sad thing to see a soul yielding and breaking under the stress of life; a soul that complains perpetually because it is afflicted; a soul that groans night and day beneath its burden; a soul that holds up despairing hands to God, and cries out that it is forespent and crushed to earth, and can strive no more. Souls are not made of such stuff as this. Souls are made to endure. Life's stress and strain are not to break them, but to strengthen them. There is not one of us who can not endure the discipline of life, no matter how hard, if he understands what it is for, and seeks the divine aid in bearing it. It is simply because we so often misinterpret the meaning of trial that we are so weak to bear it. Looked upon as mere aimless torment, of course there is no grace in suffering. No wonder we sink beneath the burden if we fail to see the Hand that placed it, and feel only, as we think, the grievous, purposeless weight crushing us to earth. Everything depends upon the why—the why of pain, the why of struggle, the why of weeping. If we could see, day by day, the mellowing process going on in our souls, how differently we should feel about these intense experiences of life! But so many of us seem to have no conception of the real meaning of life. These vital experiences, that are meant to cut our souls so clear and fine, like the delicate tools of the sculptor, are to us but sharp misfortune. We would fain escape them; they hurt us, and we hate them. Ah! what a sad misinterpretation of the will and purpose of our Heavenly Father! We say he is hurting us, and that is all the meaning we get out of the marvelous process of soul-refining.

Bravery, moral bravery, courage under the stress of life—how sorely we all need it! Our childishness clings to us too long, with its shrinking from all that is hard and unpleasant, its petulance, its short-sightedness, its complaining. When we become men and women, are we not to put away childish things? Let us try to understand, let us try to bear, let us try to co-operate! Note the sweetness and richness and beauty of those characters that have always resigned themselves cheerfully and trustingly to God's will, and have gone on mellowing and perfecting in holiness unto the end. Such can afford some adequate explanation of what life means, or may mean, to a true child of God. They are revelations of ourselves to ourselves, for the image unto whose likeness they have grown is a possible ideal to everyone of us.—James Buckham, in Christian Register.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

MRS. PRUDENCE HULSEY (nee Rutherford), who passed triumphantly from earth to heaven at Carbon Hill, Ala., Feb. 15, 1901, was born at Blountsville, Ala., June 16, 1824; and after funeral services, attended by her many friends, her remains were laid to rest at Boone's Chapel, Chickasaw county, Miss., where she professed faith in Christ and joined the church a number of years ago. She lived a consistent and highly appreciated member there till death. Sister Hulsey loved God, and loved the Methodist Church with all her ways. She was twice married; first to Thomas Camack in 1840, and to William Hulsey in 1850. To the first union were given four children—three daughters and one son. Only one of these—Mrs. M. E. Snoddy, of Carbon Hill, Ala.—survives. To the second union were born three sons and three daughters, five of whom, with the father, are left to mourn their loss. Sister Hulsey was a fond mother, an affectionate wife, and a friend to all. She was loved by all who knew her, and will be greatly missed about Boone's Chapel, where she lived so many years. May her many friends and loved ones emulate her Christian life, and meet her in heaven! W. A. BOWLIN, P. C.

MRS. ELLEN WILSON was born near Fayetteville, Ga., July 2, 1842, and died near Homer, La., June 21, 1901. She was married to A. E. Wilson in 1867. Three children blessed this union, one of whom is a member of the Louisiana Conference. Converted in early womanhood, she united with the M. E. Church, South. Her faith was simple and child-like, gentle and undemonstrative. She lived a life beautiful in its simplicity and radiant with Christlike self-sacrifice and devoted humility. There was no artificiality in her character. Her Bible was her daily companion. The first memories of her son, who is now a minister, gather about his mother as she habitually read to him from the matchless old Book. She remarked to her two children in the early portion of her illness, "If I should not recover, be good children, and meet me in heaven." Meeting death, the age-long enemy, she quietly sank into the sweet repose of supernal bliss. In the night of death the silvery voice of a conquering Lord said unto her, "Come up higher into these flashing mansions of glory," and, listening, she fell asleep, and opened her eyes upon the jeweled light of heaven's everlasting morning. ONE WHO KNEW HER.

ELLA DORA FINDLEY was born Feb. 15, 1859, and died at Lockhart, Miss., the first week in July, 1901. Her maiden name was Dunn, and I think she was raised, or partly raised, in Alabama. She was converted and received into the church under the ministry of Rev. J. A. Ellis, Meridian, Miss., when about twelve years of age. From those best qualified to know, it is claimed she lived a model Christian life. About ten or twelve years before her death she professed the experience of entire sanctification, and lived ever after such a life that no one could charge her with inconsistency. Not only did her active life testify to the reality of her profession, but her patience, rapture and joy while suffering excruciating pain for two weeks preceding her death confirmed that testimony beyond all question. The people of Lockhart showed their high appreciation of her by their uniform kindness during her sickness, and by the number that attended her funeral services. May God bless the bereaved husband and motherless children! D. G. W. ELLIS.

LEA LELA, daughter of G. H. and Julia A. Flowers, was born in Franklin county, Miss., June 15, 1886, and departed this life June 27, 1901. Lea was just budding into womanhood, with happy prospects before her. She was dedicated to God in baptism Sept. 15, 1886, and united herself with the M. E. Church, South, in August, 1897. She was a member of our Sunday-school, and was always at her place of recitation. She will be greatly missed by her class and all of the school. She was the pride of the home. She was a kind and gentle sister, a loving and obedient daughter. Her father and a host of loved ones have gone before, and mother and one brother and sister, and three half-brothers and one half-sister, are left to mourn. She told her mother a few hours before she died not to weep, for all was well if she was called to go. Loved ones, your loss is her eternal gain, and Lea will wait and watch your coming, and welcome you on the other shore. W. S. SMITH.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Would it not be better to leave to-morrow with God? That is what is troubling men; to-morrow's temptations, to-morrow's difficulties, to-morrow's burdens, to-morrow's duties. Martin Luther, in his autobiography, says: "I have one preacher that I love better than any other upon earth; it is my little tame robin, which preaches to me daily. I put his crumbs upon my window sill, especially at night. He hops on to the sill when he wants his supply, and takes as much as he desires to satisfy his need. From thence he always hops on to a little tree close by, and lifts up his voice to God, and sings his carol of praise and gratitude, tucks his little head under his wing, and goes fast to sleep, and leaves to-morrow to look after itself. He is the best preacher that I have on earth."—Selected.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Do not dare to live without some clear intention toward which your living shall be bent. Mean to be something with all your might.—Phillips Brooks.

God gives us power to bear all the sorrows of his making, but he does not give the power to bear the sorrows of our own making, which the anticipation of sorrow most assuredly is.—Ian MacLaren.

GROCERY MONEY SAVED

Hundreds of housewives are glad they sent for King's Price List. They're saving money every week. You might just as well be saving, too.

Send for Price List now.

I especially solicit out-of-town trade.

1,000,000 WOMEN RELIEVED

Reports received show that Wine of Cardui has brought permanent relief to 1,000,000 suffering women in the last few years. Because of Wine of Cardui, thousands of sufferers, seemingly on the way to premature graves, are now healthy women taking no active interest in the duties of life. Mrs. Mitchell was declining in health when Wine of Cardui "performed a miraculous cure" in her case. She suffered terribly with the agonies of falling of the womb, leucorrhœa and profuse menstruation. The weekly appearance of the menses for two months sapped her vitality until she was little better than a physical wreck. Her nervous system gave way under the terrible pain and aggravation. Then came the trial of Wine of Cardui and the cure. Mrs. Mitchell's experience ought to commend Wine of Cardui to suffering women in words of burning eloquence. The Wine is within the reach of all. Woman who try it are relieved. You can get as much benefit as Mrs. Mitchell received. Ask your druggist for Wine of Cardui. Send to the laboratory for the medicine if he tenders you a substitute.

WINE OF CARDUI

South Gaston, N. C., May 29, 1899.

Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught have performed a miraculous cure in my case. I have been a great sufferer from falling of the womb and leucorrhœa, and my menses came every week for two months and became very painful. I was in a bad condition. My husband induced me to try Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught, and now I have no pain. The leucorrhœa has disappeared and now I am in perfect health. Mrs. WILLIE MITCHELL.

MARTIN COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES

Pulaski, Tennessee.

BUILDINGS are new, spacious and elegantly furnished, electric lights, bath-rooms, water on every floor. CAMPUS is large, well shaded, and well drained. FACULTY composed of EXPERIENCED teachers presiding over every department. THOROUGH COURSES in all departments of college work, very superior advantages offered in MUSIC, ART and ELOCUTION. NO COLLEGE will give you EQUAL ADVANTAGES at a LOWER COST. SUMMER BOARDERS will be admitted during vacation months from June 1st to September 1st. No more healthful and delightful place can be found for spending the Summer. Of all Tennessee schools, this is most convenient to Alabama and Mississippi.

For catalogue or any information wanted, address B. E. ATKINS, A. M., or REV. T. L. BRYAN. Box 5, Pulaski, Tenn.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest curricula for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses. A corps of 25 teachers, every one of whom is a specialist in his department.

One of the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent with the renowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg, one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as its Director, and with no teacher in it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country, has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every Department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent four-story brick building recently named by the Trustees "Roberts Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and all filling eight large Lecture-Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible, as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

For catalogue and full information, apply to J. W. ROBERTS, D. D., President.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me. Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

AND

OXFORD, MISS.

High in Grade, Thorough in Scholastic Requirement, and Pre-eminently Religious.

The buildings are excellent, thoroughly equipped and furnished. Modern conveniences, electric lights and waterworks. Large and well-trained Faculty. Advanced curriculum. RATES REASONABLE.

We claim that few schools, if any, in the South offer better advantages for a High Grade Academic and Collegiate Education. For Art, Elocution and Music we also claim equal advantages. Let those who want their daughters accomplished in Music send them to our Conservatory. The latest and best methods are used. New pianos for practice. Ensemble playing is given special prominence, and has awakened much interest in the Conservatory. The Virgil Practice Clavier used. Special instruction in technique given by accomplished teacher, free of charge. LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC ORCHESTRA.

KING'S DECLARATION BILL.

The sovereigns of England have for centuries past taken an oath not only to sustain the doctrines of Protestantism, but to give no countenance to the peculiar principles of Romanism. Queen Victoria's reign was so long and peaceful that the oath, if not forgotten, at least was not a matter of controversy. But, so soon as King Edward succeeded to the throne, and his coronation became a matter of talk, the oath was brought to the attention of the public, and forthwith the Roman Catholics began to agitate for its modification. They did not desire, in this day of liberality, to be singled out as special objects of the King's displeasure; such as the oath would make them, technically, if not in reality. As soon as it could be decently done, a bill was introduced in Parliament to modify this oath. The features particularly objectionable to the Romanists were eliminated. Apparently the bill met with little obstruction at first, but in due time opposition arose, and now it is reported that the government will withdraw it. We presume that the strength of Protestantism has asserted itself. The press dispatches of the fifth instant say: "It is generally believed that no further attempt will be made to pass it, either this season or next. Lord Salisbury, the premier, referring to the statement of Catholic peers, said the government now realized that the Catholics did not wish the offensive words of the original declaration to be withdrawn unless the government at the same time withdrew the declaration regarding the security of the Protestant succession. The government never had the slightest intention of withdrawing that. The Catholics regretted that they must be prepared to see the declaration stand in its present form." This action leads to the conclusion that Protestantism is much stronger in England than many people were wont to think.

THE SCHLEY INVESTIGATION.

The matter of greatest interest to the people at present is the Schley investigation, which, at the request of the Admiral, has been ordered by the Navy Department. Ever since the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Santiago, three years ago, under the direct command of Admiral Schley, there have been uttered by men, apparently unfriendly to him, insinuations and charges not at all complimentary. For a long time past the matter has been quiet, and, doubtless, would have soon been forgotten, but one Mr. Maclay, who has written a history of the United States Navy, has not only occasioned another outbreak, but has added fresh fuel. To all the other charges against Admiral Schley, he has brought the charge of cowardice. Heretofore the Admiral has kept quiet, and borne insult without complaint. To be characterized as a coward, especially in a history of the navy, and one adopted as a text-book in the Naval Academy, was more than a brave and true man could stand, and Admiral Schley has called for an investigation. The Court of Inquiry, with Admiral Dewey as chairman, has been selected, and the inquiry will begin early in September. It is hoped that the whole truth will be brought out and the matter settled forever. Public sentiment is largely in favor of Aduriral Schley.

ENOUGH AND TO SPARE.

Much interest throughout the country, and no little excitement in commercial circles, have prevailed on account of the long-continued dry and hot weather. The drouth has been particularly severe in all the vast corn region of the Northwest. At one time it looked as if the crop would be blasted. It was, doubtless, greatly injured in many sections, especially where the crop was considerably advanced. But apprehension has subsided. Copious and general rains have fallen, and hopes have revived. A full crop will not be made, but the danger of entire failure no longer exists. There will be plenty of bread. The wheat crop was abundant, and all safe, though not all harvested before the dry weather set in. As a people, we have reason to be grateful to God, not only for a great and free country, but for its variety of soil and climate and its wonderful products. We ought to be thankful that we have enough and to spare.

The fathers were very wise in their dealings with the new converts, and with the young people of the church generally. All were encouraged and urged to speak in love-feast and in class meeting, and this tended to develop them in grace and to keep them on the right track. It was a great stay to boys and girls, and to young men and women, to know that they would be called upon once a week to give an account of their progress in the divine life. The thought of this went with them day by day. We have no meetings now better adapted to the development of piety in the young people than the old-time class meeting and quarterly love-feast. They were seasons of grace and of great power and blessing. The young people—particularly the young men—were urged and pressed to lead in public prayer and to conduct prayer meetings. I held my first public prayer meeting when I was about thirteen years old. It was a hard trial to me, but I got a great blessing out of it. There were six boys about my own age present, and two old men and their wives. Four of those boys entered the itinerant ministry, and three of them died in the regular work. This prayer meeting ran for several years, these boys taking each his turn in leading the meeting. This was early and fine training for the Christian ministry. Two years later this member of that company was made superintendent of the Sunday-school at Smyrna, now the church in Verona, Miss. At the same time I was appointed assistant class leader of my own church, and class leader at McDonald's Chapel. So I may safely say my public ministry began when I was thirteen years of age. It was a lay ministry for nearly seven years, when I was licensed to preach on the fifteenth day of August, 1858, and was admitted on trial into the traveling connection by the Memphis Conference in November of the same year.

The best way to keep young people from backsliding, from falling from grace, and to keep them growing in grace, is to keep them busily engaged in the work of the Lord. There can be no religious vigor and health without religious exercise. This is a truth as self-evident spiritually as it is physically.

I attended my first Conference at Trenton, Tenn., in November, 1858. Bishop Paine presided. Many great men were there; men of mighty valor, so it seemed to me then, and it seems so now. G. W. D. Harris, T. L. Boswell, E. C. Slater, Guilford Jones, Findley Bynum, Wm. McMahon, Dr. J. T. Baskerville, and others—giants, all of them. My own presiding elder, Rev. M. J. Blackwell, as great as any of them, was detained at home by the sickness and death of his wife. I was all eyes and ears and more than half heart at that Conference. I looked and listened and laughed and cried and shouted through that Conference. Amos Kendall was there, and he is not many miles away from me now.

One day a dozen, or more, of the preachers got to talking about the respective merits of several commentaries. I was hunting for the best, and stood near to hear what these old men had to say. Finally some one asked "Uncle Billy McMahon," as he was affectionately addressed, which one of the commentaries he liked best. His answer stuck into me. "Well, when I want to know what Mr. MS. and Mr. MSS. and Rabi Chimchi have to say, I always go to Adam Clarke; but when I want to know what the Word of God means, I go to Benson." I bought Benson, and later Clarke's great commentary. My lot was cast in Mississippi, where I have spent all the years of my ministry, and I never knew any of these great men intimately, except Dr. Thos. L. Boswell and Rev. M. J. Blackwell.

That trip to that Conference, one hundred and fifty miles from home and on horseback, was a rare experience to a boy under twenty who had never been more than thirty miles from home, and that far only once. All my earthly belongings were in my saddle-bags under me. I left home to go where sent, and to stay for one year, or longer. I laughed, cried, sang, and prayed by turns all the way to Trenton. I was never so excited in all my life—not when dressing the lines for a charge upon the enemy during the war—as when Bishop Paine stood up to read the appointments. My heart was in my throat, and I was swallowing lumps of nothing as large as my fist. I had pencil and paper to write the name of my appointment, but I could not have written my own name. I was read out to Okolona circuit, near my home and mother, and I hurried out of the house and behind the church to give vent to my joy in a flood of tears. I have become accustomed to being read out to some charge, and do not grow nervous over it now. They are all good appointments; none of them are bad. They are good, better, and best. I dread some kinds of work—the kind that entails heavy responsibility. My third year I had a few churches across the line in Tennessee. Save that and the years I was in the army, my ministry has been in the territory of the North Mississippi Conference. I love this State and Conference with an enduring love. I have been on Mississippi soil nearly all the time since December, 1842. I have been a member of the Methodist Church since July, 1848. I love all Christians in general, and the Methodist Church and people in particular. I have been a ravenous reader of theology from early boyhood, and I believe that our Wesleyan Arminianism is the clearest, soundest, strongest, most consistent, coherent and most scriptural, formulated system of doctrine known among men. I can preach it dogmatically, and never apologetically. I am fixed in this faith. I am not now open to conviction on any of these great doctrines. If any man loves my Lord, and strives to extend his kingdom among men, I am ready to give him my hand and bid him God-speed. I never expect to see every man of my way of thinking, or a member of my church, or member of any other church organization on the earth. It is better for us as we are that it is as it is with our churches.

A WORTHY CAUSE.

The McTyeire Memorial Church, which was destroyed by the great fire in Jacksonville, Fla., was probably the finest house of worship in the State. It had already become a great center of power for all good causes, and the congregation was growing with steady steps from year to year. This house must be rebuilt. There is no alternative. Our Methodism can not afford to go out of business, nor to contract its operations, in the chief city of that prosperous State. The appeal of the Bishops, which we published some weeks ago, puts the case none too strongly. We trust that it will be heeded in every part of the Connection. Large contributions will be thankfully received, but small ones are likewise in order. Whoever can give five dollars, or even one dollar, ought to do so. Ten thousand Southern Methodists ought to respond before another week. Send a money order or a draft to Dr. P. H. Whisner, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, at Louisville, Ky. By this method proper credit will be secured.

Pastors who have not complied with the Bishops' appeal will greatly strengthen the hearts of this sorely stricken people by taking this special offering soon and forwarding same.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

THE ARCADIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Arcadia District Conference was called to order Tuesday morning, July 30, by Presiding Elder A. J. Notestine. H. R. Singleton was elected secretary. The roll-call showed every preacher present except two, and a larger representation of laymen than for years. Everybody was in fine spirits, and the whole Conference was a success and an inspiration. The preaching was done by Revs. T. J. Martin, J. B. Williams, W. W. Nicholson, J. O. Bennett, Jno. T. Sawyer, W. H. Jordan, and H. R. Singleton. The only visiting preachers were Drs. Sawyer and Bennett, whose sermons were greatly enjoyed.

Reports from over the district are encouraging. There is a good increase in membership and a general increase in collections, notwithstanding the drouth.

Bro. W. C Everett, of the Dallas Publishing House, was present, and after a splendid speech sold a large number of books.

Mercer G. Picton, of New Orleans, was licensed to preach, and W. H. Jordan, D. F. Turner, and M. G. Picton were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial.

Harmony Chapel, on the Lisbon circuit, was chosen for the next place of meeting.

Resolutions were adopted:

1. To dispose of the old district parsonage and secure a new one.

2. Urging the preachers of the district to furnish news from their charges to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE not less than once every quarter.

3. Requesting the Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to provide for the order of deaconess in the Southern Methodist Church.

4. Memorializing the Joint Board of Finance of the Louisiana Conference to increase the assessment for Conference Claimants' Fund 50 per cent., and pledging the preachers of Arcadia district to raise every dollar of assessment for that claim in every charge.

The Conference closed on Thursday evening with a missionary sermon by the district missionary campaigner, followed by a collection for missions from Arcadia Church amounting to $150. A majority of her best-paying members were not present. Then ten of the brethren in the district pledged $5 each, in addition to what they had pledged at home, to be used, if necessary, in bringing the district up in full.

Bro. Notestine is in high favor with preachers and people.

The best should have been better. What of the poorest?

I have now published an itemized statement of subscriptions reported to me, and of all moneys paid to the treasurer, from the various pastoral charges (by districts) in the North Mississippi Conference. Each week, as the statement appeared for one district, I directed by post card the attention of the presiding elder and of each preacher in charge to the statement. It is hoped the information given as to the status of the fund will prove to be a powerful appeal for renewed effort to increase the fund. Surely all the subscriptions will be paid. In nearly all our charges there are people able to give who have not done so. Many of them will be willing if the right approach to them can be found. Who so competent to do this as the pastor?

I had intended to publish statements by districts for the Mississippi Conference, but found it impossible, because the money paid to the treasurer at the sessions of that Conference was paid in bulk, and no record by charges was kept.

MISSIONARY COLLECTIONS IN ARCADIA DISTRICT.

The deficit in the collections for foreign and domestic missions in this district last year amounted to $350.60. There was a surplus raised by Homer, Lisbon, Ruston, and Farmerville—all four amounting to $78 15. The only other charges paying in full were Minden and Arcadia.

At the recent District Conference it was found that four charges have already collected in cash and gilt-edge subscriptions a total surplus of $384, as follows: Arcadia, $119 surplus; Gibsland, $50 surplus; Homer, $15 surplus; Ruston, $200 surplus. And every one of them promise more before Annual Conference.

Minden and Lisbon are already in full, and promise a surplus before Conference.

Downsville, Valley, Simsboro and Haynesville are within a few dollars of being in full, and there's no doubt about them.

Bernice is not assessed this year, but has collected $12, and will get as much more.

Calhour, Lanesville, Bienville and Farmerville are pulling hard to come out ahead of the assessment, and there's little doubt about them doing it.

Vernon already has in hand as much as was paid last year, and has not gone the round of the churches. She has a band of young people at work, too, who are yet to be heard from.

Ringgold is a new work, but has the assessment half up, and a big rally to be held yet at the main church.

Gansville holds a big camp meeting in September, and we hope to hear good missionary news from that.

After the missionary sermon at the District Conference, Thursday night, ten of the brethren—seven preachers, one Presbyterian layman, and two Methodist laymen—pledged $5 each, to be used in case the assessment on the district should not be brought up in full. It will hardly be needed, as the assessment is $1,677, and we are as absolutely certain as we can be of any event in the future, that we will come up to Conference with $1,877. We want to atone for some of that deficit we've had for so long. We want our district not only to be over the assessment, but to be as far over as possible. We regard the assessment not as the maximum, but as the minimum amount to be raised. We want to do our very utmost for the spread of our Lord's kingdom, knowing that not until our best is done is God pleased.

Of the preachers of the Arcadia district let me beg: Let us go on and put our collections above the two-thousand-dollar mark—as far above as possible—doing our best for Him who has done His best for us.

H. R. SINGLETON,
District Missionary Campaigner.

Miscellaneous Notes.

The Lexington (Miss.) Advertiser says: "Every member of the Lexington bar was born and reared in Holmes county." That speaks well for the talent and training of Holmes county lawyers.

The Central Methodist notes the fact that $200,000 recently contributed to the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary "is the largest gift in Kentucky by any Protestant for religious purposes." We wonder if any Roman Catholic man in Kentucky has ever done any better.

In Opelika, Ala., a town of a few thousand inhabitants, seventy per cent. of the white population belong to the various Sunday-schools. The Sunday-school of our church, in proportion to population, has, perhaps, the largest membership of any school in Methodism or America. The total enrolment on June 30 was 913. Can any town in the land show a better record?

We have received a copy of the Minutes of the twenty-second annual session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, held at Inka, Miss., June 21-25, 1901. The results of their work, as tabulated, show that they have been very active during the past year. They reported for missions an aggregate of $4 502 91. These consecrated women are doing a noble work.

We have received a pamphlet of thirty two pages entitled, "Monroe City Public Schools—Rules, Regulations and Course of Study Adopted by the School Board, August, 1901, Monroe, La." This is something out of the usual order of things, but is entirely in order. It indicates the great interest of the School Board, and, we presume also, of the people, in their public schools. We thank the School Board for thus remembering the ADVOCATE.

We take the following item from one of our Mississippi exchanges. It may possibly lead to the information desired: "Mr. J. F. Young, of Coffeeville, Miss., desires to communicate with some survivor of the Fourth Mississippi Infantry Regiment, who may remember B. F. Hodges, who enlisted at Bankston, Miss. The widow does not remember the company. She is in need of the pension given by the State, and is unable to make the required proof."

Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated. . . . Those, therefore, that dare lose a day are dangerously prodigal; those that dare misspend it, desperate.—Joseph Hall.

What Our Editors Say.

THE SANCTITY OF THE HOME LIFE.

The most sacred spot on earth is home. In it are found the most tender relations and the most indissoluble ties of love and affection. It is the place where the father and the mother and the children are supposed to live in concord and unity. All that pertains to the weal of this place belongs to them, and not to the outside world. Their counsels, their plans, their hopes and their fears are sacred to this retreat. No one has any right to a knowledge of these experiences save those who make up the circle of this domestic sanctuary. The joys, the sorrows, the pleasures and pain, with whatever of petty disagreements and momentary irritations, ought not to be breathed into the ear of the most intimate friend. All of these matters belong under this roof and within these chambers. To speak of them before men is a sort of profanity. Keep them within, and love and grace will transmute them into character and make of them a blessing to the household. But spread them abroad or commit them to the keeping of third parties, and mischief is the result. There are necessarily some things that transpire between the father and the mother and between the parents and the children that no other human ear ought ever to hear mentioned, even in the faintest whisper. Talk them over with each other and take them to God in the confidence of the heart, but give to them no manner of articulation beyond those precincts. Keep out officious intruders and beware of domestic intermeddlers. Make the home the place of confidence and mutual affections. Let the husband keep no secret from his wife, and let the wife tell her innermost thoughts to her husband, but no idle ear has any right to such matters. If the children need to know matters of a delicate nature, let such things be imparted to them by the parents who are responsible for their morals and happiness, instead of going abroad to find them out. Let an air of perpetual sanctity obtain in the home circle, and peace will be its portion and love its inspiration. Make it a haven on earth, and fill it with the flowers of the celestial Eden. Then those who dwell there will find it the sweetest and most attractive place this side the altars of the sky.—Texas Christian Advocate.

STEWARDS.

A faithful steward will see that at least a living assessment is made for his preacher and then will do all in his power to collect it. Neither will he wait till the end of the year to do it. There are many charges that always pay out in the end, but make the preacher wait for his money and force him to seek credit, when he might as well receive his money by the month. They tell him it will be all right in the end, and comfort him with encouraging words. This is like putting a fellow's thumb in a vice and squeezing it, and telling him you will quit after awhile, and then squeeze it some more. We have known of charges where the stewards have not told the members on their list what their assessment was, when the year was more than half gone. Not many members will rush up to pay unless they are asked. They take it for granted when nothing is said about the preacher's salary that nothing is needed. It is an honor to a man to be a steward in the Methodist Church, but we have known some who did not honor the office much! When a man accepts the responsible position of a steward, he ought to inform himself as to his duties and then go to work to perform them, or else be man enough to resign, and give place to another who will do the work.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

THE PASTOR.

The pastor is the "chief man" among us. To him we must all look, and upon him must all the enterprises mainly depend for success, so far as human effort is needed for success in our Lord's business. The pastor's office is not only one of serious responsibility, it is also one of great and precious privilege. He may have but a small handful as to numbers under his charge, but with these and through these he can make his influence felt throughout the world. His field of usefulness is as wide as the world. With our immortal founder, John Wesley, every pastor in our connection can say, "The world is my parish." Not so much by mere leadership of his people as by enthusing them on the great work of missions will he enter into the joy of his Lord. Happy the pastor who has deep convictions on the great matter of preaching Christ to every creature. Happy the flock who has such an under-shepherd to lead them. Our Lord has promised abundant endowment of power for the responsibility, and grace sufficient for the glorious privilege of every pastor's reaching the ends of the earth through the gifts and prayers and self-denials of his people. His promised presence is with us if we will claim it, and with his presence all power in heaven and in earth is pledged.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

LACK OF RELIGION.

Lack of religion is a serious thing in the daily experience of any human being, young or old, rich or poor, in office or out; but lack of religion in a church member, and more especially in a preacher, is something to be deplored as a dreadful fact. Religion is too generally imagined by people to be a thing not desirable if it could be dispensed with, and when church members and preachers are found to be lacking in piety, it produces a revulsion of feeling against the whole thing and does great injury to the sacred cause. Let us be careful how we live.—Florida Christian Advocate.

THE SACRIFICE OF A BRAVE LIFE.

Eugene R. Lyons, eldest son of the late Dr. J. J. Lyons and Mrs. F. A. Lyons, of New Orleans, La., was born March 16, 1863, on his grandfather's plantation in the parish of St. Landry, La., and on Jan. 1, 1901, was killed by the insurgents in Northern Luzon, Philippine Islands, while in the faithful and courageous discharge of his duties as a soldier. The circumstances under which he lost his life were given as follows by the officers of his regiment:

"On Dec. 30, 1900, a detachment of nine picked men, who had been sent out into the mountains to hunt for insurgents, were on their way back to camp with six prisoners, when suddenly they came upon a force of one hundred insurgents in ambush. The Americans fought until every round of ammunition was exhausted, and were then captured and put to death."

One member of that brave little band was Eugene R. Lyons, the devoted son, the beloved brother, the calm and self-possessed soldier whom God had honored with a magnificent physique, to which was added fine mental attainments. He, who was always ready to make sacrifices for the good of others, has been offered up as a sacrifice on his country's altar. It is hard to realize that his valuable life, so precious to family and friends, has so suddenly come to an end.

Eugene was carefully trained to know God from his earliest childhood, being dedicated to the Lord's service from his birth, and made the subject of many earnest prayers. At the age of 12 up to which time his mother had been his teacher, he was sent to the Marshall School, in New Orleans, and made such rapid progress that he entered the high school in three months. At the close of his Junior year he was sent to Centenary College, Jackson, La., where he pursued his studies while boarding in the family of Prof. Wiley, of precious memory. In September, 1880, he matriculated at Vanderbilt University, where he spent three years as a student under the special guidance of Bishop McTyeire, who had been a life-long friend of the family, at the end of which time his professors advised him to study law at once; but desiring to assume all the financial responsibilities for his education in future, he accepted a position first with the Illinois Central Railway, and later with the Chicago and Northwestern. His efficiency and faithfulness enabled him to hold these positions until he had earned a sufficient amount to pay for his law course. In 1891 he was admitted to the bar in Chicago, where he practiced his profession until the declaration of war with Spain, at which time he closed his law office and enlisted as a volunteer. His regiment not being among those ordered to the front, he spent nearly a year at Camp Alger, and the remaining months at Camp Mead, Penn. When the troops were disbanded he returned to Chicago, and resumed his law practice; but last July, having become deeply interested in the Chinese troubles, he resolved to reenlist for three years in his country's service, and sailed from San Francisco in August on the transport "Sherman," full of hope for the future.

The captain of his company writes that he was assigned to him as a "selected man" from the beginning, and says, "He would have received a commission but for his untimely death." He speaks in highest terms of his bravery, saying, "He was out with every skirmishing party in that part of the country, and was a general favorite with all the men in the command."

Eugene was received into the church when he was a little boy, under the pastorate of the writer. It is said that he was never absent from Sunday-school or church until he left his father's home for college, and that through all the devious paths of youth and young manhood, with temptations and besetments on every hand, not one of his associates or friends ever heard him give expression to a skeptical sentiment in regard to the Christian religion. And now that his life on earth is ended, with no message sent back to the sorrowing family, his mother can only turn to the Word of God and claim by faith the promised answer to prayer that her precious boy is saved through the blood of Christ.

His body was recovered and identified, brought into camp, and buried with military honors near the convent in Batac, Capt. Bowen reading the burial service. Some time in the near future his body will be disinterred and sent home by the government, and laid in the beautiful Metairie Cemetery. A mother, three brothers and four sisters are mourning the loss of this much-loved son and brother. God comfort their bereaved hearts!

A more faultless model of social and Christian character in childhood and youth than that of Eugene R. Lyons never came under the observation of the writer; but little, however, was known of him personally after he entered college, and for the facts above written of his life, subsequent to that period, he has been dependent on others, but these are so perfectly consistent with his character in its formation that we should have anticipated the latter as a legitimate result of the former.

THE SUBTLE AGGRESSION OF RUM.

BY REV. R. L. PHILLIPS.

MR. EDITOR: Why does not the Commonwealth of fair Mississippi summarily put a stop to the infamous whisky traffic? Why the conservatism of our ministry on the subject? Why the inertness of many of our politicians in the prohibition cause? God help us, Mr. Editor; it costs something to fight the whisky devil! What politician is going to crush himself without thanks from the people? What minister will sacrifice himself, and for pay receive cold-hearted criticism from his membership? 'Gilderoy' rightly says, 'Some members of our churches are more concerned about making dollars than they are about saving boys." It would seem that we are bound in the coils of the rum serpent. Brave men, aggressive against other enemies, recoil into passive acquiescence before this monster. I refute the charge of pessimism when I say that the shadows are darkening our fair land from the increasing heaviness of this evil cloud hanging over us. Let statistics speak.

Official reports, according to The Voice, Sept. 25, 1884, say, "In the United States the consumption of beer has increased, since 1840, 1,675 per cent, of wine 400 per cent., and of ardent spirits over 200 per cent." This while the population increased only 217 per cent. Josiah Strong says of these reports: "The people of the United States need four gallons of intoxicating drinks per caput in 1840, and twelve gallons per caput in 1883. During the five years preceding 1884, while the population increased about 15 per cent., the consumption of distilled spirits increased 44.5 per cent, and that of malt liquors 60.2 per cent. The production of the latter has risen from 1,628,934 barrels in 1863 to 18,998,619 barrels in 1884. The North American Review estimates the invested liquor capital at $1,000,000,000, which is very moderate;" the annual liquor bill of the nation being "estimated at $900,000,000." Up-to-date statistics would, doubtless, tremendously augment these figures. This capital is thoroughly organized, and subtlety, assiduously and hellishly operated on every square mile of our nation. "The United States Brewers Association was organized in 1862. The object of the organization may be inferred from the introduction to their Constitution, where we read, 'That the owners of breweries, separately, are unable to exercise a proper influence in the interest of the craft in the Legislature and public administration.' . . . At the Chicago Congress the brewers resolved, 'That we consider it absolutely necessary that our organization should exist in every State and county.'"

Its methods—First, bribery. "The Chicago delegate at the Milwaukee Congress, June 6, 1877, said, 'The brewers of Illinois have expended $10,000 to beat the temperance party at the elections.'"

Second, boycotting. The seventh Congress of the Brewers Association passed the following resolution, "Resolved, That we find it necessary, in a business point of view, to patronize only such men as will work hand in hand with us."

A blacksmith who was employed by a brewer, served on a jury which convicted a saloon keeper of selling liquor contrary to law, and, in consequence, lost his situation. (J. Strong, "Our Country," pages 75 St.)

The climax of subtlety is reached by the whisky devil in the prohibition field. There its devotees work by a law. A city of fifteen or twenty thousand inhabitants will distribute whisky over 2,500 or 3,000 square miles of territory by the "wagon trade" received from the hands of merchants and others. Little towns, express offices and railroad depots are made distributing points all over the land. I was converted in a railroad office, and after I had joined the church, one day a slick-tongued whisky agent beleabored me for two hours in my office trying to induce me to turn it into a blind-tiger by accepting a commission of 10 or 20 per cent. on all liquors ordered from his house. I have been agent at several depots, and have always found a large element in the town and country round about the office who were particularly interested in the railroad agent being a "whisky man."

On one occasion a prominent man who wanted whisky, and knowing my prohibition proclivities, had his jug addressed to "No. 5," it being so way-billed, and in the shades of night sent a negro after it with a note signed "No. 5" in the well-known handwriting. A Baptist preacher, on being admitted inside an express office, found quite a number of jugs tagged to his flock.

The whisky business permeates the entire fabric of our political, social, and commercial economy. No public man can inveigh against it without a clash. There is too much of our whisky fighting, like the Quaker with a thief in his house, "Friend, thee had better get out of the way, for I intend to fire this gun right where thee standest." If we beard the beast in his den—shoot straight at him—there is a roar from the lion and wail from some of the "esthetic brethren and sisters' who are shocked at this 'disturbance (?) of their peaceful community." A storm of abuse rains on the preacher, "but oh, oh, don't say a word" against the rum devil as he sows lust and damnation among their sons and daughters. 'For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; astonishment hath taken hold of me." (Jer. viii, 21.) "Woe unto thee, Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?" (Jer. xiii, 27)

Mr. Editor, we have seen the reluctance of the great political parties in taking issue with this giant evil. The President of these United States, the National Congress, and the leaders of the political parties will not take vital issue with whisky until forced to do so by public sentiment. Oh, ye ministers of the gospel! who are the sentiment makers? "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." (Isa. iii, 1.)

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

PRELIMINARY.

[Until further notice an article each week will be published in the ADVOCATE from "A Circuit Rider" on the mode of baptism. It will be considered historically, scripturally, and Methodistically, and he alone is responsible for the utterances.]

"A Circuit Rider" is a traveling preacher of the M. E. Church, South, and has no apology to offer the ADVOCATE readers for the articles submitted, save the love of truth and the indoctrination of Methodists generally. He believes ordinarily if you want to get the average Christian's "Irish up," just "tackle" his mode of baptism. He is sensitive at that point, and will let you curse in his presence and insult his Lord, but when you question his mode, look out.

There are a few weak-kneed Methodists who object to the discussion of controverted subjects, but if their objections were followed, some of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity would be silenced, error would not be exposed, and the race would perish for lack of knowledge. The discussion of the mode of baptism becomes necessary, not so much by virtue of any scriptural command, but because of the prominence immersionists have invested it with and the ignorance of many.

Dr. Watson was right when he said that the subject of baptism was of more importance than mode; yet, as he says, "It can not, however, be passed over, because the advocates of immersion are often very troublesome to their fellow-Christians, unsettle weak minds," etc. The kind of water used is also more important than mode. "Clean water" is necessary absolutely; yet "Circuit Rider" has seen candidates dipped in water almost muddy enough to chew.

While our Baptist brethren preach baptism too much, the Methodists preach it too little; and because of our reticence and neglect, many of our people have been imposed upon. Immersionists have not only exalted the mode of baptism above all the commandments, but it is their idol. While David said, "Morning, noon and night will I pray," they, morning, noon and night, preach immersion, and unchurch Christendom for neglecting the "liquid grave." It is true we have been wiser in giving more prominence to the gospel and the salvation of men while others were clamoring for immersion, but our silence has been hurtful and our so-called liberality damaging. There are scores of Methodists who are either in doubt as to the proper mode, or they think sprinkling and pouring have been "substituted" as modes "just as good as immersion." But if the reader will keep his eye on the articles to follow, he will see that immersion is the mode that has been "substituted," and substituted several centuries after the birth of Christ, and practiced three times 'in puris naturalibus" at that.

It is but just to our ministry to say the reason they preach mode so little is because they do not believe the mode of baptism is essential to salvation. If baptism itself is not essential, the mode is not. "Repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ" are the only conditions the Scriptures name to the forgiveness of past sins. If water is necessary to the forgiveness of my sins to-day, it is necessary also to-morrow, and there are thousands who need rebaptizing. This is the reason Tertullian, in the middle of the second century, advocated the postponement of infant baptism. It had been practiced from apostolic times, but he advised a delay until late, in order that one baptism might wash away all sins. It were good logic if the dogma of baptismal regeneration were true. But Messrs. Tertullian and Alexander Campbell and Co. were wrong in placing "the gospel in the water."

CHIPS.

Some one has objected to immersion being the door into the church because it makes the candidate enter with his eyes shut. Sprinkling lets you in with both eyes open.

Another has objected to immersion because it makes the candidate back into the kingdom of God. Affusion lets you in in a dignified and courteous manner.

AN UNTRODDEN WAY.

As we face the responsibilities that open up before us, there are certain grounds of confidence on which we should build if we would make our lives a success. At the head of the list we place the element of faith—faith in God, supreme in his wisdom and irresistible in his power. Standing on this rocky foundation, we can dismiss our anxieties about the events as they lie before us, for we have by our side an Almighty Helper who will not suffer his purposes to fail, and can not be discouraged. There may be burdens to be carried and perplexing questions to be solved, but we are in the hands of him whose wisdom ruleth over all and whose might upholds the universe. This is something to bear in mind as we feel our path leading us along the way we "have not passed heretofore." "I have set the Lord always before me, because he is at my right hand, and I shall never be moved." How sublime is that spirit of trust!

But in addition to this exercise of faith in God there is another ground of confidence that we should cultivate as our minds face the future; it is the element of hope. We must look into this new year with bright anticipations. It should be a beacon light to all of us. Troubles will come, and shadows, thick enough and fast enough, without conjuring them into existence by our dismal forebodings. But nothing can stand in the way of the joy Christ kindled in the hearts of his disciples. This is the spirit that pervades the entire Scriptures, growing brighter and brighter onward toward the close. It is refreshing to read its anticipations of the good things toward which we are surely advancing. This is distinctively the characteristic of the Bible, woven into its histories, blown through the trumpet of prophecy, sounded in its anthems and psalms, steadily followed on until we are confirmed in our faith by the wonderful disclosures of John's vision in the Book of Revelation. It is a cheerful view of the future which the Bible presents, and we are not in harmony with its teachings if we look out into this new year with the spirit of foreboding, anticipating only disaster. Our belief in God, in his wise and overruling providence, warrants the conviction that in the broad realm of the universe all events are marching onward toward victory. It may seem difficult to realize this in the view of the disturbances that are characterizing the times, the wars and rumors of wars that are in actual progress; but surely history, as well as the Word of God, truly interpreted, assures us that the current of events is steadily setting toward a brighter and better consummation. May God hasten the day when evil shall no longer prevail, when strife shall come to an end, and there shall be an abundance of peace over all lands.—Dr. Richard Steele, in The Christian Intelligencer.

Divorce Again.

The iniquity of our divorce laws is America's crying scandal. The marriage laws differ in so many States that a man has been known to get a divorce in Pennsylvania from his wife in New York, and another in California from the one in Pennsylvania. Neither New York nor Pennsylvania acknowledged the validity of the divorces outside their boundaries, though they were valid in Pennsylvania and California. Consequently, if the women would stay in their respective States, the much-married man could travel to each and legitimately live with each of them in turn, and be a polygamist without the possibility of the law interfering. Do not such instances cry aloud for the unification of the marriage laws of the several States, as contended for by the National Divorce Reform League? Or do they not demand a Constitutional amendment, giving power to Congress to legislate in such grave matters of the public weal? Congressman R. W. Taylor is agitating for this action, and we hope may arouse the nation to its necessity and importance.—Western Advocate.

A Christian, for the sweet fruit he bears to God and men, is compared to the vine. Now, as the most generous vine, if it be not pruned, runs into many superfluous stems, and grows at last weak and fruitless, so doth the best man, if he be not cut short of his desires and pruned with afflictions. If it be painful to bleed, it is worse to wither. Let me be pruned that I may grow, rather than be cut up to burn.—Joseph Hall.

The electrician can not charge your body with electricity while a single thread connects you with the ground, and breaks the completeness of your insulation. The Lord Jesus can not fully save you while there is one point of controversy between you and him. Let him have that one last thing, the last barrier and film to a life of blessedness, and glory will come filling your soul.—F. B. Meyer.

Five hundred school teachers, one-fifth of whom must be women, are to be sent to President Taft, of the Philippine Commission. The men who were in arms are now engaged in trading, and the people want civil government and schools. Seashore Camp Meeting

DR BOSWELL: I send you a scrap from Seashore Camp Ground. This was my first visit to the coast; so you may judge I took it in, from salt water up. To say it was delightful puts it mildly.

The spiritual tide was rising when I arrived on Saturday, in time for eleven o'clock service, and continued to rise to the close, Wednesday night. The attendance was not as large as I expected to see, but it is not the crowd that always gives the best results. With the number of preachers and other praying people on the ground, the meeting should have been a great deal better, but the spirit of prayer was distressingly lacking, till we reached a crisis Wednesday night, when we saw and felt our weakness. My! what a setting-to we had to launch the old ship, and get victory over doubt and the devil. It reminded me of Peter on the water, sinking; how humbly and earnestly he prayed. He came out all right.

The people, especially the preachers in reach, do not know what they are missing by not attending the Seashore Camp Meeting. Go, not for a jolly time, but in the power of the Spirit. If my body and purse holds out, I will go again.

Railway employees in Great Britain and Ireland number 500,000; the British army in South Africa half that number. The deaths in action up to the first of May were only 1,345, the wounded about 6,000. But 612 railway employees were killed in one year, and 15 000 injured. The London Chronicle shows from these figures that one profession of peace is far more perilous to limb than the practice of war.

It is when we feel all broken up and wasted, and that we can only bring the bits to God, that he says, "Come," and he will take us and mend us and make us whole again.—Mrs. Whitney.

HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT.

The District Conference of Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference, met in its twenty-sixth session at the Methodist Church in Byhalia, Miss., July 11, 1901 Rev. N. G. Augustus, presiding elder, occupied the chair the first day. He had prepared a good programme, and had the business of the Conference well in hand. This was his first District Conference; yet there was nothing of the novice in his manner of conducting the business.

At about ten o'clock the second day Bishop H. C. Morrison came in and took the chair, and proved to be a most effective director. He was brotherly, yet firm; gentle and approachable, yet dignified; tender, yet strong. His coming was a blessing to the writer, and, I think, to everyone who attended this District Conference.

The field is white unto the harvest, and laborers are few, but we were permitted to recommend three laborers for a place in our part of the vineyard, viz.: E. M. Jones, Thos. M. Brownlee, and R. W. Evans. These brethren will be up for work in our Conference at its next session.

We sent four of our best, truest and wisest laymen to the Annual Conference, viz.: W. A. Young, F. P. Boatner, R. S. Bell, and D. M. Floyd; George Jernigan and Dr R. L. Bonton, alternates.

The Conference was well attended by the preachers and the delegates.

Reports from all departments of church work were encouraging (the League work excepted). The reports show improvement in prayer meetings, Sunday-schools, family altars, circulation of our literature, and on attendance at church, but a decrease in number of Epworth Leagues.

We were favored with many pleasant and truly helpful visitors, among whom were W. W. Woollard, J. H Mitchell, W. T. Griffin, S B. Myers, W. G. Harbin, B. S. Rayner, J. A. Bowen, and elect ladies: Mrs. Leach, Mrs. Balk, Miss Saillo Hinton, and Miss Emma Gary, one of our missionaries from China. These all, in various ways, added to the success of our meeting, and were we to comment on the neatness and our good opinion of all these noble and faithful men and women of God, time and language would fail us.

Altogether, we had one of the most pleasant and successful District Conferences I have ever attended, for which we are indebted to Bro. Augustus' energy in preparing a nice programme, and sending a special invitation with the programme to every member of the Conference and a wide circle of friends, and also to our beloved friend and host, J. W. Anderson, and to the royal hospitality of the generous-hearted people of the delightful little town of Byhalia, whose hospitality we have never seen excelled.

ROLLING FORK, MISS.

DEAR MR EDITOR: I want to say through the columns of the ADVOCATE that we have been getting on very nicely on the Rolling Fork charge this year. I have never had a more pleasant charge, and the people are all so nice, kind, sociable, and friendly. You will not find a more intelligent and refined people anywhere.

Our Sunday-school, with Col. W. D. Brown as superintendent, is doing fine work. Our Epworth League is quite a success, with Miss Lucy Myers, president, and Miss Corinne Parham, Miss Bessie Taylor, the vice-presidents, and Miss Sunshine Clements, lady manager of the Juniors. We have one of the best choirs in the State, and peace and brotherly love reign in our midst. We are not all as religious as I would like to see, but we are making some progress in the divine life. Most of our public men are religious and law-abiding men. We are often reminded of the friendship and kindness of these good people by a good old-fashioned pounding by saint and sinner, Jew and Gentile.

We have just had our third Quarterly Conference, and we are already beginning to feel sad, owing to the fact that after this year we are to lose our beloved presiding elder, Dr. E. H. Monnger. We feel that we have never had a better presiding elder; always kind and pleasant, looking after every interest of the church—indeed, a Christian gentleman.

With kindest regards to you, Mr. Editor, and all the saints, I am,

Your brother,

J. G CAMMACK.

July 29, 1901.

WESSON STATION.

Our protracted meeting has ended, and the total number of accessions is twenty-three. Bro. C. F. Emery, of Jackson, Miss, did all the preaching except the four last days of our meeting. His preaching was good to the edification of the saints and the salvation of sinners. He is growing in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and is making rapid advancement in knowledge of divine things generally. If the fashion of conferring "D. D" on brethren continues much longer, it is likely he will be thus afflicted.

Our charge is still progressing in accessions to the church and the baptism of infants. We have had 134 accessions to our church, and baptized 90 infants, and there are more to follow. The best of all, many of our people are striving to live near our blessed Lord. May God help pastor and people to live every day ready to meet our Lord and to be judged! We do have such delightful feasts from our Heavenly Father ever and anon. Pray for us.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

MEADVILLE, MISS.

A pleasant note from Rev. J. E. Gray, Meadville, Miss., says: 'We are moving along nicely on the Meadville charge now. We are soon to erect a nice new parsonage, and at Conference we expect to report everything paid in full. The ADVOCATE is being remembered, and soon we expect to send you a list of subscribers. May the Lord abundantly bless you in the great work you have in hand!"

That Lame Back

You can hardly straighten up the back feels so sore. There's a chance that it is kidney trouble and that Something which is risking toms to neglect. The best medicine for disease of the kidneys is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The use of this medicine has resulted in some remarkable cures. It increases the activity of the blood making glands, purifies the blood and relieves the kidneys from clogging impurities.

"I feel it my duty to let you know that I have recently advised a young gentleman who was suffering badly with kidney and bladder disease to try your 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Frank Startz, M. D., of Platonia, Fayette Co., Texas. "He bought four bottles from our druggist here, and after he had used the first bottle he began to improve. Sometimes he was unable to walk ten steps; now he can ride my horse without any pain in his back and he looks as well and sound as a young boy. His age is only 28. He has suffered for nearly three years, and several other doctors called the case incurable, but I had confidence in Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I have been offered one hundred dollars several times already for my kind advice, but I would not accept it because I want everybody to know what Dr. Pierce's famous medicine can do.

"This testimony is absolutely true, and the reason I haven't mentioned the young gentleman's name is because he don't want to have his name published."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." The sole motive for substitution is to enable the dealer to make the little more profit paid on the sale of less meritorious preparations.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets stimulate the action of the sluggish liver. They should always be used with "Discovery" when there is need of a laxative.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1901.

The manhood of an individual, nor his mental capacity, is to be discounted because he adopts the faith and religious practices of his parents. In early years his faith is as natural as his breathing, and it is to the credit of both himself and his parents that he holds on in mature life. Then his life proves, if it proves anything, that he has confidence in the religion of his teachers. How careful and consistent Christian parents ought to be!

We make a great ado when we see a man plowing in his field on Sunday, and declare that he ought to be indicted and punished, but we have no word of condemnation for the one who disturbs the quiet, and violates the sanctity of the day by crying his wares for sale at our very doors. What is the difference? Both are following secular business for a living. One is no more a desecration of the Sabbath than the other. Why can not we be consistent?

If our great Epworth League is designed to train our young people in all that Methodism stands for, and we elect men for that business, then those so elected have no right to introduce strange things contrary both to the law and usage of the church. They are not loyal themselves. And we enter our earnest protest against the habit some are falling into of calling our young Leaguers to stand in prayer. No such custom is known among us, and should not be countenanced.

Some who oppose the higher critics may be malicious and others ignorant, but we are persuaded that many, fairly competent, and without malice, oppose them because they believe their work to be destructive. Personally, though not disposed to discuss the subject, we venture to say that if Dr. Lyman Abbott is a fair representative of the one, and Dr. W. W. Martin of the other, we prefer to follow Dr. Martin. The higher critics have not turned all the world's scholars in their direction.

Whenever a public teacher in our hearing begins to name a list of books suitable for study on a given line of work, we listen eagerly, hoping to hear the name of some Southern author. We are invariably disappointed. None are ever named, and we are reluctantly forced to the conclusion that there are no Southern authors, or that, in the estimation of the teachers, their books are unworthy of room in our libraries. In either case a serious reflection is cast on the intelligence of the South. Is it a fact, brethren, that no Southern man has ever written a book worthy the attention of a public speaker?

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

No question before the American people is of more serious import than the Sunday question. It is not a matter of the day of the week to be kept as the Sabbath—that is settled; but the proper observance of the day. A large and growing proportion of our citizens, foreign born, and foreign extraction, desire practically no Sunday at all, and they observe the day as little as possible. They go as far as they dare go without outright violation of the law. Another class, feeling that what they call the Puritan regulations concerning the Sabbath are too strict, would compromise with those who have little regard for the Sabbath, and give us a day that is neither wholly sacred nor wholly secular. Between the two, our Bible Sabbath would be destroyed.

Evangelical Christians, especially in the United States, have held tenaciously to the idea that the sacred Sabbath is the bulwark of our religion and civilization. To break it down, we have said, will weaken our hold on all good, and cause the land to be overwhelmed with unrighteousness. It requires only a glance to satisfy anyone that, in communities where Sunday is disregarded, there is little reverence for God, and that, however much the ordinary proprieties of life are observed, it is quite impossible to maintain a high standard of evangelical religion.

What effect the turning of Sunday into a day of revelry, visiting public parks and engaging in sports, etc., has had upon the morals of our young men and women, everybody knows who lives in large towns and cities. What would be the result if Christians generally should succumb to the godless and half-hearted who demand the abrogation of all Sunday laws, or even to those who would compromise on half-way ground, none can tell.

The Christians of our land are having a hard time trying to save the Sabbath. Witness the struggle with those who manage great national and international expositions. Nothing save congressional grants of large sums of money on condition that gates are closed on the Sabbath hinders the public desecration of the day. Should public sentiment weaken on the subject, there would be no Sunday on exposition grounds.

But our danger does not lie altogether in the public desecration of the day. The danger lies in the weakening of the individual conscience in regard to the sanctity of the Sabbath. Men violate it in what they suppose to be little and unimportant things. For example, in many things we fail to make preparation for the Sabbath, and do on that day what we used to do on Saturday. Hence, in our towns and cities, delivery wagons run as regularly on Sunday as on any other day. True, for all this, we plead necessity, and in compliance with this plea the laws have been so modified as to allow such things. And our common enemy, the saloon keeper, argues, "If traffic in groceries, vegetables, ice-cream, and cigars, is allowed, why may I not supply my regular customers with drink?" He can not see the difference between the one and the other, and proceeds to supply them. We can not expect him to do otherwise as long as general traffic in necessaries and luxuries is permitted by the law, and encouraged by Christians.

It is in these things, and the giving way to the desire for pleasure under the plea of necessity for rest and recreation, that is breaking down our Sabbath, and threatening an overflow of ungodliness. All these modern demands of society not only tend to the weakening of conscience, but they keep an army of men and women under the galling yoke of labor the whole seven days of the week. They know no Sabbath—have no conscience on the subject. It takes no prophet to foretell the final result.

The remedy is in the hands of the Christian men and women of the land. Let us do our duty. We may not reform the public, but we can purge our own souls, and set a good example. There is not a Christian family in the land that can not make ample preparation on Saturday, and be as comfortable on Sunday as if the delivery wagon made its regular call. The time has come when every man must stand up for the Sabbath or give way to the hordes of mammon worshipers who know no sacred day, and will soon know no God.

BEHIND THE TIMES.

Zion's Herald, of Boston, affirms that the entire South is a hundred and fifty years behind in its theological positions, except the M. E. Church South, though it is declared to be "distinctly seen there."

We are led to inquire, What are the theological positions of our brethren up North? Their "Articles of Religion," as set forth in the Book of Discipline, are identical with their Articles of Religion of the M. E. Church, South, and have been from the beginning. Their commentaries occupy an Arminian standpoint. In that respect they are not a whit in advance of Mr. Wesley; and Southern Methodists are not a whit behind our Northern brethren.

Our text-books will compare favorably with the text-books of the North. Summers' Systematic Theology is as near up to date as Dr. Miner Raymond's great treatise, and fully as good a work.

It is possible that up North, in the atmosphere breathed by Dr. Parkhurst, the theology of a few Methodist preachers and scholars may have become tinctured or adulterated by the so-called "advance thought," and that the Doctor himself has advanced a few steps. If this is something to be proud of, we hope he will believe us when we say that we have a few of the same sort among us. The higher critics who intend to give the world a new Bible are not all Northern-bred and born.

But Dr. Parkhurst advances a step further, and tells his readers that the reason why Southern Methodism is not as far behind the times as some other churches is because it "received its increment from Wesleyanism, which contained essence of the progressive and tolerant theology of this age." We beg the Doctor's pardon when we say his "sister denomination" did no such thing. Southern Methodism is Wesleyanism itself; not in any modified form, but in its purity. Our theology in essence and form is Wesleyan: has never been anything else.

Dr. Parkhurst may not have intended to say so, but his words imply that Southern Methodism is an offshoot with an infusion of Wesleyanism. The history of our church, which is largely a history of the M. E. Church, will sustain a denial of any such idea.

ARE WE CIVILIZED?

More than once during the last four years have we ventured to say that, as a nation, we lack several points of being fully civilized. The savage thirst for strong drink, and the set purpose of men to supply it for the sake of money, without regard to its effects on life or morals, are grounds sufficient for such an opinion. And the opinion is strengthened by the fact that the government, for the sake of revenue, will fasten the traffic on a people even against their will. If all this does not indicate the remains of barbarism, surely the fact that brutal bull fights are allowed and witnessed by thousands of people, including men, children and women, will leave no room for doubt.

Only as far back as five years the people would have said a bull-fight in the United States is impossible. But either because the spirit of barbarism has never been totally eradicated, or because the people have degenerated, such sport is not only possible, but has actually been indulged. The good city of Omaha, Neb., is the first of our towns to be disgraced by allowing the sport. The city authorities licensed the evil, with the understanding that the brutes were not to be tortured: and officers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals were on hand ostensibly for the purpose of seeing that the law was not violated. They may have been sincere, but to an outsider it had the semblance of mockery. No contract was entered into with the fighting animals. They were left free to follow their instincts. Aggressiveness in close quarters is one of their characteristics, and when one gored a fighter, it seemed to give the public a taste for blood, and the attraction became more powerful. The people desired to see more blood.

We would not be at all surprised to hear of bull-fights at Buffalo on Sunday. We have about reached that point in the exercise of our personal liberty, and in allowing the lawless-spirited to do as they please, when we are surprised at nothing that takes the form of sport or self-indulgence. The Pittsburg Christian Advocate says, "No wonder it is so hard to Christianize the race." Does anybody wonder?

THE RENEWAL OF LICENSES.

A report from a District Conference, held in Texas, says: "Several of the local preachers were absent, sent no report, made no request, and their licenses were not renewed." The granting or the renewal of a license depends on the vote, but the presumption is, that the voters have good disciplinary reasons for voting one way or the other. In the case of the local preachers referred to above, it appears that the failure to renew their licenses was not because they were absent from the District Conference, but because they sent no report and made no request. One unacquainted with Methodist law and usage would naturally infer that local preachers, in order to secure renewal of license, must make a report to the District Conference, and also a request. There is no law for either. The Discipline does not require a report to the District Conference, but to the Quarterly Conference to which all local preachers, licentiate and ordained, are amenable. Paragraph 168, page 75, says, "They shall report in writing the extent and result of their labors to the fourth Quarterly Conference."

In regard to the renewal of license, no request is necessary. The law says, "The District Conference shall have authority to license proper persons to preach, and to renew their licenses annually, when, in its judgment, their gifts, grace and usefulness will warrant it." (See Discipline, Paragraph 71, page 37, and Paragraph 161, page 71.) There is nothing said about a report, or a request. If the brother has been faithful and useful, it should be taken for granted that he desires his license renewed, and his representative, the preacher-in-charge, or some one else, may move the renewal. Even that is not strictly necessary. The president of the Conference may do as the president of an Annual Conference does in the case of men on trial, who have complied with the Discipline, put the question, and throw the responsibility on the Conference. This may not be altogether parliamentary, but it is Methodist usage. We do not think the action of the Texas District Conference was fair to the local preachers.

HONOR IN THE ARMY.

The New York Times denies that what it calls "those wretched little pecuniary scandals at Manila" casts the least reflection on the regular army, "the honor-code of which is really framed at West Point." It attributes them to the sudden enlargement of the army, which "let into it a certain number of persons who had no business in it, and who did not belong to it, who had not been trained to conform to its standards, and who brought disgrace upon its uniform." That is very nice talk in favor of the regular army, but it sounds to us very much like there is one code at West Point, and another in the country at large—the West Point code being superior. We are glad to know that men in the regular army have such superior training, and that in active service they conform to army standards. But how about the confessed debauchery in the regular army, and the inability of officers to control the men on pay-day? The army canteen has been abolished for no other reason than because it was believed to foster intemperance. Now that it has been abolished, and strict orders issued to the soldiers forbidding them to visit outside saloons, it is published far and wide that the soldiers are disobedient, and drink and carouse more than when the canteen was in existence. It seems to us that a soldier who stands on honor, and would not go back on his West Point training, will no more disobey orders, and get drunk and create disturbances, than he would loot the United States Treasury. And all papers that urge the impossibility of keeping a sober army for lack of the canteen cast reflection on the honor of the army—on West Point training as well—every time they do it. The officers who so declare advertise their impotency and their unfitness. It is dishonorable to disobey orders. And nobody will be found to say that it is altogether the honorable thing to get drunk and create disturbances. All the honor in the army is not confined to West Point and the regulars.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

THE TRI-STATE CONFERENCE.

The League Conference, composed of members from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, met, according to appointment, at Seashore Camp Ground, July 31, and was still in session up to August 7. The attendance was small. Up to the close of the sixth day only eleven preachers were present, and seven of them from Louisiana. Not a young layman from either State attended—at least, not while the editor was on the ground. Not exceeding forty persons at any time attended the regular lectures.

The lecturers were: Dr. H. W. Featherstun, Rev. H. B. Carre, and Brother Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee. These brethren made careful and ample preparation for their work. Their lectures were well worth hearing: worthy of a far better hearing than they had.

The Missionary Institute was under the management of Rev. C. D. Atkinson. His work did not partake of the nature of a lecture. It was rather designed to call attention to missionary work, and call out the thoughts of others than the manager.

In the absence of the president, Rev. J. C. Park, who was detained at home on account of the illness of his wife, Rev. Thos. Carter, professor in Tulane University, was master of ceremonies. He did his part well, and without partiality.

The Sunday services were interesting and profitable. There was Sunday-school in the morning and a Junior Epworth League Rally in the afternoon. Dr. Featherstun preached an able sermon at eleven o'clock. In the evening Brother Joe Ramsey preached. Brother Ramsey is a much better preacher than he is a lecturer. The services of the day were well attended and the sermons "good to the use of edifying."

Since our last issue we have added to our list of school advertisements that of the Woman's College at Oxford, Miss., and Millsaps College at Jackson. The Woman's College under the presidency of Dr. Malone flourishes. It is an old school under a new name, and is doing fine work. Millsaps College is the property of the church, and has at its head one of our very best men. He is assisted by an able faculty. Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana have all needed facilities for the education of their sons and daughters.

DENHAM SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.

The Board of Trustees of the Denham Springs Camp Meeting have unanimously agreed to conform with the resolution of the Baton Rouge District Conference concerning the conduct of camp meetings and revivals on the district. Refreshment stands will be closed, and the gates will be open on Sunday.

The meeting will begin Wednesday, Aug. 21, and continue through the twenty-seventh. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may desire to attend.

Correspondence should be had with Rev. E. C. Bott, or D. B. Duke, by those who desire to arrange for accommodations. All ministers are invited and will be entertained.

FITZGERALD SALE PARKER, P. E.

NOTICE.

To the Preachers of the Meridian District—

DEAR BRETHREN: Please send me short reports of your Missionary Rally Meetings, as fast as they are held, for our edition of the ADVOCATE. Do not write long articles, but state facts as briefly as possible.

J. M. WEEMS.

Meridian, Miss.

PERSONAL.

We congratulate Brother and Sister J. M. Alford, Leesville, La., on the addition of a handsome and hearty son to the family. May he live long and be a blessing to father and mother, and to the world.

We are sorry to learn of the personal affliction of our brother, Rev. J. W. Campbell, of Tranquil, Miss. He writes that his "health has almost broken down." May he soon rally, and meet with success in his work!

Rev. Geo. D. Parker has just returned from an extended visit to Cincinnati, Niagara Falls, and the great Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. He also visited Chautauqua, N. Y. He was much benefited, and is ready for the Fall campaign.

Rev. H. C. Morehead and wife, of Houston, Miss., called on us en route home from the great Epworth League Conference at San Francisco. We were absent at the time and failed to see them. We are happy to know that they had made the long journey in safety.

Dr. C. W. Carter, presiding elder of the Crowley district, informs us that "Rev. T. H. McClendon, of Gueydan, after a long spell of sickness, has been forced to retire from the work for the remainder of the year. His place has been supplied by the appointment of Rev. A. A. Bernard to serve until Conference."

We thank the managers of the Crystal Springs (Miss.) Camp Meeting Association, and also Rev. R. J. Jones, our pastor at Crystal Springs, for a cordial invitation to attend the camp meeting, which begins on Aug. 22. We shall shape our arrangements accordingly, and, Providence permitting, be on hand to enjoy the meeting.

REV. ROBERT WATKINS BAILEY.

BY REV. H. W. FEATHERSTUN, D. D.

I knew him well and loved him much. I knew him when a boy in his home by the western sea, and was entertained in his father's house, and met his mother and sisters. They were from Missouri, but had lived for years at Wilmington, hard by the little port of San Pedro, one of the two ports of entry to the city of Los Angeles, some ten miles inland. "Wat," as we called him, was then a boy about seventeen years of age. I afterwards preached to him, when he taught public school at Los Bolsas, and was associated with him some years later when he was admitted on trial into the Los Angeles Conference. When in 1892 he came to Mississippi he was appointed to Woodville, where I was at the time in charge of Edward McGehee College. Thus he became my intimate associate, as well as my successor and predecessor in the Woodville pastorate. Since then, as fellow-workers in the Mississippi Conference, our relations have been close and cordial. Thus associated, I came to know him well, and, knowing him, loved him.

No man among us thought more profoundly, and mixed with the old things of preaching more that was new and, in presentation, original. No man ever more fully obeyed Paul's injunction: "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good;" nor did even Lucretia Mott herself cling more firmly to her own dictum: "Truth for authority, and not authority for truth," than did this brave, conscientious young thinker in the Methodist ministry. His learning was broad as his thought was deep. He read much, read rapidly, read widely, read wisely, and remembered well. Yet he was so averse to everything that might seem ostentatious that only those who knew him best thought of him as a man of wide learning. True, none but a learned man could produce such sermons as he gave us; but learned sermons do not always indicate wide learning, such as was his.

His intense logical acumen made of him a natural polemic of high order. His native kindness of heart and suavity of manner added force to his arguments. I think that the strongest polemic effort that I have heard in twenty years on the floor of an Annual Conference came from his lips. His powers of analysis and illustration and appeal displayed on this occasion could hardly be excelled.

Though thoughtful as a philosopher and learned as a sage, he was as transparently simple-hearted as a child. He seemed to be utterly void of egotism, and altogether unconscious of his large ability. Sometimes he failed to do his best in the pulpit; he did not seem to think it necessary; he was not striving after a reputation, and no one before him seemed to need special effort from him. I once very privately chided him for this. He received my chiding as if he were a school-boy, and I his teacher. His next sermon overleaped all previous efforts in that pulpit, and when one of his stewards came forward, eagerly thanking him for it, he told of my chiding, and suggested that the brother thank me, and not him. In his family he was like a big boy—playfully free, yet utterly without any effort to be playful. With his friends, his closest friends, he was frank and easy and kind and perfectly natural.

His capacity for work was marvelous. Slender, wiry, nervous, he moved quickly, and never seemed to tire. Not even John Wesley could do more in a day than he. It required a large pastorate to fully occupy his time. Possibly he did too much. Certainly he did not rust. "It is better to wear out than to rust out." Now that he rests, his "works do follow" him. The world is better because he was such a tireless toiler.

His religious experiences were sacred secrets with God. It did not seem to occur to him that any one could be at all interested in them, and he, therefore, never thrust them upon anybody. This unusual reserve was so perfectly natural that no one seemed to expect anything else from him. Thus, in his life and in his preaching he so thoroughly "hid behind the cross" that his personality was forgotten, but the Christ he preached was remembered.

While pastor of First Church, Jackson, Miss., the yellow fever broke out there and raged fiercely. As a matter of course, he stayed at his post, and ministered to the stricken. Though non-immune and of frail physique, he went freely into the fever smitten house, carrying help and comfort to sick and dying. He knew no fear in the path of duty. He and his family passed through it all untouched by the pestilence.

He despised cant as if it were sin, and was almost eccentrically unconventional. He would not wear clerical clothes, and he shunned "clerical airs" and "preacher tones," and avoided everything that might in any way be thought of as sanctimonious by the most critical. To me his unconventional naturalness was most refreshing, and, as I came to know and love him more and more, became a chief charm in his delightful personality. Such, as I saw him, was my friend and brother, the brave, buoyant, learned and gifted, good and truly great young man who was taken from us ere he had reached his prime. Had he lived to reach that prime, he would have been known as a great man.

As he was my predecessor, as well as successor, at Woodville, so he was my immediate predecessor at Moss Point, my present pastorate. The aroma of his splendid life lingers here. Although he came at the beginning of his invalidism, and was able to do but little work here, yet the people learned to love him, and some of them became bound very close to him. My life is richer because I knew him. Others share with me this feeling. "He, being dead, yet speaketh," not merely in the strong sermons he preached, but also in the memory of a manly life cast upon a kingly plane.

Though his physique was frail, and was held toward the last in the clasp of an insidious malady, yet it was difficult to think of my friend as an invalid. Active, hopeful, self-forgetful, he rarely mentioned his ailment, and never spoke of it as other than a slight temporary hindrance to work of which he would soon be rid. Thus death seemed to take him almost unaware, although he was an invalid for a full year: but it found him ready. Bravely he met his "Pilot face to face,"

"And there was no moaning at the bar

Notice.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The programmes for holding missionary mass meetings in all our churches have been sent out this week; also comparative statistics in the same package. If any of you should fail to receive them, please inform me in a week or two, and we will endeavor to send you a few extra copies. We hope to have a report from every charge at Conference, as to what extent the literature has been used, and what the apparent results. Yours fraternally,

J. H. SHUMAKER, Sec.

Only a Mask.

Many are not being benefited by the Summer vacation as they should be. Now, not-with-standing much outdoor life, they are little if any stronger than they were. The tan on their faces is darker and makes them look healthier, but it is only a mask. They are still nervous, easily tired, upset by trifles, and they do not eat nor sleep well. What they need is what tones the nerves, perfects digestion, creates appetite, and makes sleep refreshing, and that is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Pupils and teachers generally will find the chief purpose of the vacation best subserved by this great medicine which, as we know, "builds up the whole system."

Camp Meeting.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, MISS.

The thirtieth annual camp meeting will convene Aug. 22 at the Hemingtou Camp Ground, one mile from Crystal Springs, and continue eight days.

Rev. Lewis Powell, of Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. J. A. Schoolfield, of Danville, Va., eminent ministers, have been secured to conduct the services.

The recent improvements on the grounds and buildings, and the fine hotel and restaurant, warrant us in the statement that all who come will find comfortable accommodation at very moderate charges.

The usual reduction of fare on the I. C. R R. will be given during the meeting—one fare for round trip between Canton and McComb and all intermediate stations.

Ministers of the gospel are earnestly invited, and will be provided for free of expense.

To defray the expenses of the meeting, and to avoid the necessity of a public collection, season tickets will be sold for 50 cents, good during the meeting; day tickets, 25 cents.

We extend a cordial welcome to all to enjoy with us the Feast of the Tabernacles at this famous camp ground. D. G. WILSON, Sec.

KEEPING A SECRET.

It was when Molly was getting over the measles that Mama told her about Tom's birthday party. It was to be a bicycle party, and the boys were all to bring their bicycles; and Tom's father was going to give him one for a birthday present.

"Oh, goody!" cried Mollie, jumping up and down. "Won't Tom be just too happified for anything."

"Now, Mollie," said Mama, "you must be very careful not to tell Tom anything about it. You mustn't even look as if you knew about it."

"Can't I tell anybody? Not even Arabella Maria?" asked Molly. "'Cause I shall surely burst if I don't."

"Yes," said Mama, laughing, "you can tell Arabella Maria, but no one else."

This was hard. That very afternoon Tom came rushing in from school and told Molly about Billy's new improved safety.

"I'd give something if I just knew I'd get a wheel for my birthday," said he. "But, when father was telling about the scarcity of money last night, I knew that meant no safety for this year."

"Bye low, bye low," sang Molly to Arabella Maria, who, because she was made of rags, and limber, Molly loved, as she said she was so nice and "huggy." Molly kept her eyes shut tight for fear Tom would see a nickel-plated bicycle in them.

"Why don't you talk and be a comfort?" demanded Tom. "I suppose, if it was your birthday coming, you wouldn't mind. You'd rather have an old mushy doll like that?" indicating the beloved Arabella Maria with a scornful finger.

This was too much for Molly to bear. Her eyes flew open with a flash. "It isn't so at all!" she said. "I wouldn't want another doll at all, and I do want a bicycle. Every girl in the block has one but me. And Arabella Maria is not mushy, and she knows a great deal that you would be glad to know."

And then Molly, feeling that she was getting on dangerous ground, flew upstairs, holding Arabella Maria close up against her mouth.

Uncle Tom and Mama were sitting on the porch quite near the open window and heard all this conversation. Uncle Tom was much amused and Mama very proud.

"I can make her tell me," said Uncle Tom.

"Try," said Mama, as she went indoors to toast the muffins for tea.

Molly presently found herself seated on Uncle Tom's knee; and after she had told him all about the measles, and how it was a great surprise to everybody that Arabella Maria didn't take them. "But she's the best thing!" said Molly. "I told her not to, 'cause I couldn't nurse her; and she didn't."

"What's this about Tom's birthday?" said Uncle Tom. "I want to know about it."

But Molly immediately shut her mouth up tight and looked up at the sky. "It's a secret," she said finally.

"But not from me, is it? You know he's my namesake; and how do you know I won't get him the same thing?"

Molly looked troubled. "There is a danger," she said; "but, if I should tell you, you might let it out—not on purpose—but 'cause it's so hard not to. I don't want to ever have the 'sponsibility of another secret, never."

"Well, well, and so you can't trust me," said Uncle Tom.

"I wouldn't mind trusting you at all if I hadn't promised I wouldn't tell," said Molly. "And me and Arabella Maria must keep our word, you see. Now, if it was my birthday, I could tell you just as well as not, 'cause I wouldn't know—"

But Uncle Tom was laughing so hard that Molly stopped.

"Good for you, Molly," he said; "you're a trump!"

Molly didn't know at all what he meant, but she was much relieved that he was not offended.

When Tom's birthday, with the party, the safety and all, really came, it was hard to tell which was the happier, Tom or Molly.

Every time that Tom felt things boiling within him to such an extent that he couldn't possibly stand it another minute, he would rush out on the lawn and look at his new wheel and say:

"Hurrah! She's a daisy!" and turn somersaults until he felt better. At the same time Molly would rush after Arabella Maria, and, with a rapturous squeeze, would say, "Aren't we glad we didn't tell, though, 'cause he's so happy over the s'prise!"

By and by they all went out for a spin around the block; and there, among the shining wheels, was a dear little one, whom no one claimed. Tom picked up a card on the handle-bar and read:

"For Molly and Arabella Maria, two young women who know how to keep a secret from even Uncle Tom."

"Oh, oh!" said Molly, dancing up and down. "Arabella Maria, we're the happiest girls in this world, I know!"—Churchman.

DOROTHY'S FLOWER MISSION.

"I suppose I shall have to play right in this yard all the Summer vacation," she complained, dejectedly, "while all the other girls have gone to the beach."

Her mother came to the door, and looked down at her little daughter, wistfully.

"I am sorry that we can not go this year; but we must not add to Papa's burdens. Let us see what fine times we can save at home. Let's form a club!"

Dorothy looked up expectantly.

"But who would belong?"

"Just Mrs. William Deane and Dorothy Deane, with Papa Deane for honorary member. We must have him, because we need some one to use the spade."

Dorothy's eyes grew quite wide.

"This is my plan," said her mother. "Let's form a flower mission, and raise all our blossoms right in this yard. We will have a wide border running around the three sides. In the corners we will have tall bunches of phlox; just there by the wall we will have hollyhocks; along the side a long row of sweet peas, and, on this side, nasturtiums. Then we'll have one bed in the center of mixed blossoms—a sort of wild garden, with red salvia for color."

"Oh, and pansies, too?"

"Yes, we will have a bed running around the pear-tree. There will be considerable work to do; but when the blossoms come we will carry them out to the sick children in the hospital."

Dorothy's face was lighted up with enthusiasm, and she set to work at once to measure off the places for the flower-beds with pieces of twine, and to drive down stakes. When her father came home that afternoon, she spaded the ground and softened the soil, working in the right amount of dressing for the flowers.

It was the tiny yard of a city house, not more than thirty feet square, but the sun came in brightly, and across one end was the gray wall of another building over which a clinging vine ran in delicate pattern.

All the spare time after school was spent in planting, weeding and raking the yard, and long before vacation came the flowers had made a brave start and the yard was quite transformed.

Mrs. Deane sat with her sewing upon the porch, and directed matters. Some of the neighbors near by, who had never thought of making their back-door yards attractive, began to plant shrubs and vines.

When August came Dorothy got up very early one morning each week, and while her mother was busy with housework, cut the flowers into graceful little bunches, tied them carefully, and placed them in a basket with a cover. Then by nine o'clock her mother was ready to take the car down-town to the children's hospital.

Dorothy never forgot those visits—the long rows of white beds, the delicate children, and the grateful eyes following her as she passed along. Sometimes she stopped to take to them, and tell them about her tiny garden.

The flower mission was a success, and the Summer never seemed so short. Having something to do and the outdoor work gave Dorothy so much strength and health that she was brown and rosy when school began. She had learned, too, a great lesson—that thought for others brings the best happiness.—Selected.

CONQUERED BY LOVE.

A soldier in the Army of the Potomac was the terror of his company. He was disobedient, cruel, quarrelsome and vicious. As a result he was often terribly punished, but there was no reformation. In due time, by the fortunes of war, a captain from another regiment was placed in command of that company. The very first day the orderly sergeant informed the captain of the terrible character of this incorrigible soldier. That afternoon the man perpetrated some misdemeanor, was arrested by a sergeant and brought before the captain. He looked at him for a moment and, speaking to the sergeant, said:

"Let him go to his quarters."

"Shall I keep him under guard?" inquired the sergeant.

"O, no," said the captain, quietly.

That evening the captain called his sergeant and said:

"Go down to Mr. Blank's quarters and tell him to come up to my tent: I wish to see him."

"Shall I bring him up under guard?" inquired the sergeant.

"O, no," said the captain, "just tell him to come. I guess he'll come if you tell him."

In due time the soldier stood inside the captain's tent, cap in hand. He was of fine physique, brave and daring.

"Take a seat, sir," said the captain.

The soldier obeyed, but all the time looked defiance. The captain inquired of his home, his relations, etc., and then said:

"I have heard all about you and thought I would like to see you privately and talk with you. You have been punished often—most times, no doubt, justly, but perhaps sometimes unjustly. But I see in you the making of a first-class soldier—just the kind I would like to have a whole company of, and now, if you will obey orders and behave as a soldier should, and as I know you can, I promise you on my honor as a soldier that I will be your friend and stand by you. I do not want you to destroy yourself."

With that the soldier's chin began to quiver and the tears trickled down his cheeks, and he said:

"Captain, you are the first man to speak a kind word to me in two years, and for your sake I'll do it."

"Give me your hand on that, my brave fellow," said the captain. "I'll trust you."

And from that day on there was not a better or more exemplary soldier in the Army of the Potomac. Love conquered him.—Christian Work.

ENJOY AS YOU GO.

Some people mean to have a good time when their hard work is done—say, at fifty. Others plan to enjoy themselves when their children are grown up. Others mean to take their pleasure when they get to be rich or when their business is built upon a sure foundation or the farm is paid for or the grind of some particular sorrow is overpast.

Such persons might as well give up ever having a good time. The season of delight, which is so long waited and hoped for, too rarely comes. Disease, poverty, death claims each his victims. The lives of those whom we love, or our own, go out, and what is left?

Then take your pleasure to day, while there is yet time. Things may not be in the best shape for that visit you have been so long planning to your only sister. It might be better if you could wait till you had a more stylish suit of clothes or till the boy was at home from college to look after the place; but she is ready now. You are both growing old—you had better go.

John drives round with the horse. 'Jump in, mother," he says "It is a lovely day. You need the fresh air." Don't say, "I can't go—I was intending to make some cakes," or, "My dress isn't changed" Put on your warm coat, tie a veil around your hat and take your ride. If you don't take such things when you can get them, they are apt to be missing when you want them again.

Don't say: "I shall be glad when that child is grown up! What quantities of trouble he makes!" No—enjoy his cunning ways—revel in his affectionate hugs and kisses—they will not be so plentiful by and by. Enjoy his childhood. It will look sweet to you when it is gone forever.

Enjoy the littles of every day. The great favors of fortune come to but few, and those who have them tell us that the quiet, homely joys, that are within the reach of us all, are infinitely the best. Then let us not cast them away, but treasure every sunbeam and get all the light and warmth from it that the blessing holds.—Family Friend.

THE GIFT OF A THORN.

"And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh."

"There was given to me" Can the "thorn" be a gift from God? I am in the habit of seeing God's gifts in the abundance of the things which my life possesses; and I call those things the dangers of life which diminish the sum of its abundance. Here is a complete reversal of my thought—the abundance is the danger, and that which diminishes it is a gift. Paul was exalted above measure; he had been standing on the mountains of prosperity, and summering in the sunshine of a cloudless day. The cloudlessness of the day was his greatest danger, and there is sent a mist over the sun. His life has been redolent with a breath of flowers, and there is sent a thorn among the flowers. The thorn is God's best gift to the soul; there is something protective in it. It has neither beauty nor fragrance, but it yields the sweet uses of adversity; it reminds the human soul that it is, after all, only human.

Dear Lord, I have never thanked thee for the thorn in the flesh. I have thanked thee a thousand times for the roses, but not once for the thorn. I have been looking forward to the world where I shall get compensation for my cross, but I have never thought of my cross as a present glory. Thou Divine Love, whose human path has been perfected through suffering, teach me the glory of the cross, the value of the thorn in the flesh. Show me that I have climbed by the path of pain. Show me that my tears have made my rainbow. Reveal to me how my strength came as the product of that hour when I wrestled until the breaking of the day. Then shall I know that my thorn was blessed by thee, my cross a gift from thee, and I shall raise a monument to the hour of my sorrow; and the words which I shall write shall be these, "It was good for me to be afflicted."—Selected.

God loves bright faces and happy hearts. He made lives able to enjoy; he provided beauties, pleasures, affections to be enjoyed. A father would be disappointed when he had brought home some pleasant gift to his child, if the child should turn away from it. Even so must God be disappointed when we refuse to be glad in all that he has provided. Perhaps God feels about a man who will not rejoice something as we do about a canary bird that will not sing—much of the expected brightness is wanting. But gladness is not lightness; it is not triviality, for the superficial and foolish things can never really make us glad. They are not good enough. Neither does gladness refuse to consider troubles, nor does it neglect burdens. It knows pain the world-pain, all about it, and its own pain within. It shirks not, shuns not, but always shines. True gladness is not like a canoe that dances trippingly over shallow places, but it is like some strong and stately vessel that moves continuously and confidently over the deep.—Church Union.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

WILLIAM O. COCHRAN was born in Alabama, Dec. 31, 1825, and died at his home in Marshall county, Miss., Jan. 3, 1901. SUSAN J. COCHRAN (nee Seal) was born in Tennessee, March 5, 1829. She was married to William O. Cochran, Nov. 30, 1847, and died March 19, 1901. Those good people shared each other's sorrows and joys for more than fifty-three years. Their home was one of love, being made so by the abiding presence of God. Their children were born to them to help to soothe the sorrows of life and make home happy. I don't know how many years these parents were the servants of God, but many. Bro. Cochran was a man of strong mind and sterling worth to the church and his community until just before he died. His mental powers failed somewhat, but not without his knowledge. Sister Cochran was pure gold, worthy the man to whom she plighted her faith in holy wedlock; "a keeper at home," spreading sunshine all around. It would be hard to find a couple whose lives were more perfectly rounded for the end than these. Many a Methodist preacher will recall with pleasure happy moments spent at the home of these now stilled ones. Oh, for more homes like theirs! They leave three sons and five daughters to emulate their virtues, and many friends to wish for more like William O. and Susan J. Cochran. D. W. BABB.

MRS. JEREMIAH HOLDER died July 18, 1901. She was born in the State of Mississippi, May 28, 1827. Her maiden name was Martha A. Risler. She was married in 1845. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, and gave her heart and life to God. She was loved by all who knew her, old and young as well. She was ready and willing to die; she talked so often of dying. She was unconscious for fifty-three hours before she died. Before she became unconscious almost the last words she said were, "Dear Jesus, take me to that blessed home." She leaves many friends and relatives to mourn their loss, but I feel assured that she is in that blessed home where all is peace and love, and with many friends and relatives who were waiting and watching for her. She is so happy with them now. Our loss is her gain, for I feel assured that she is in that blessed home where all is peace and love. But, oh, how we miss her! There is a vacant chair that never can be filled. But she is waiting for us in that beautiful home on high, where pleasures never die and we will meet her again in the sweet by-and-by. We loved her—yes, we loved her—but the angels loved her more, and now she is waiting for us on that beautiful, shining shore to welcome us home forevermore. CYNA HOLDER.

CLAIRE COLLINS, wife of Bro. Samuel W. Lipscomb, of East Feliciana parish, died May 6, 1901. In 1865 she was united in marriage to her bereaved husband. Sister Lipscomb gave her life to God in childhood, her heart at the marriage altar in her nineteenth year, and for thirty-six years she has been queen of one of the happiest homes I have ever known. She leaves a devoted husband, three manly sons and five lovely daughters to mourn her departure. From this beautiful cluster of stars the Father of lights has translated her into the paradise of God. Another voice is added to heaven's choir, another crown is cast at his feet, and other fingers sweep the golden harp. Her zeal for Christ and undaunted faith in him was boundless. Her devotion to the church was pure and unselfish. She was abundant in works, and many are they who will rise up to call her blessed. She sat at the feet of her Master. The box of ointment with which she anointed his body diffused an aroma that was as a sweet incense to all who knew her. Peace to her ashes. She is not dead, but liveth. C. C. MILLER.

Sister MARY L. MILLS (nee Haynes), daughter of S. S. and Rachel Haynes, died at Courtland, Miss., July 18, 1901. She bore her long affliction without a murmur, even thanking God for afflictions. Her end was peace. She was born July 27, 1867, in Panola county, Miss. She professed faith in Christ in her young girlhood and joined the church (M. E., South). She was married to Burett Mills in 1893. She was very near heaven for several days before she left us. The songsters of heaven she thought were audibly near. Thus she leaves a weeping husband, an aged father and mother, two sisters, and many other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss and follow on. May they all meet in heaven!

So sensitive is a man's soul that a breath of love calls it into conscious life. A ray of divine light expands it, goodness attracts and shapes it—surrounds, softens—and adversity strengthens it; injustice petrifies, bondage contracts, and sin suffocates it.—Southern Churchman.

Never despair! In the most dismal night look for morning. In the most tempestuous sea send out your thoughts on wings of hope toward the harbor. In the heat of the fiercest battle stand up bravely and expect victory and peace.—Bishop Vincent.

GROCERY MONEY SAVED

Hundreds of housewives are glad they sent for King's Price List. They're saving money every week. You might just as well be saving, too.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest curricula for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses. A corps of 25 teachers, every one of whom is a specialist in his department.

One of the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent, with their crowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg, one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as Director and with no teacher in it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every Department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent four-story brick building recently named by the Trustees "Rebecca Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and affording eight large Lecture Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible, as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

For catalogue and full information, apply to

Situation beautiful. Climate delightful and invigorating. Health record unparalleled. Home comforts, parental supervision. Young girls received. All live with the faculty in the college. Buildings worth $150,000. Equipment excellent, well appointed laboratories, good gymnasium, etc. Faculty, large, and composed of able and experienced professors. Courses extensive and thorough, in line with those given in the leading universities. A large Endowment, enabling students superlative advantages at moderate cost. The Trustees grant a number of scholarships to deserving young ladies. Art and Elocution departments ably conducted. Music Faculty unsurpassed in America; musical equipment excellent. A PRIZE PIANO (gift of a generous friend of education), to be awarded for the best work. This is a two-thousand-dollar Hallet & Davis Piano—perhaps the grandest musical prize ever offered in any college in the world. During the past term all space was filled. Young ladies would do well to make early application for admission in September. Write President Simmons for a catalogue, which will be sent free, postpaid.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me. Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

AND

OXFORD, MISS.

High in Grade, Thorough in Scholastic Requirement, and Pre-eminently Religious.

The buildings are excellent, thoroughly equipped and furnished. Modern conveniences, electric lights and waterworks. Large and well-trained Faculty. Advanced curriculum. RATES REASONABLE.

We claim that few schools, if any, in the South offer better advantages for a High Grade Academic and Collegiate Education. For Art, Elocution and Music we also claim equal advantages. Let those who want their daughters accomplished in Music send them to our Conservatory. The latest and best methods are used. New pianos for practice. Ensemble playing is given special prominence, and has awakened much interest in the Conservatory. The Virgil Practice Clavier used. Special instruction in technique given by accomplished teacher, free of charge. LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC ORCHESTRA.

Next Session Opens September 11th, 1901.

Oxford, the seat of THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE, is a school location second to none in the South in point of healthfulness and culture.

Glances at the World.

A NOTABLE ROBBERY.

A robbery, notable for its execution and the large amount of gold obtained, occurred last week in San Francisco. A shrewd and skilled thief tunnelled under the Selby Smelting Works, and bored through the iron door a hole large enough to admit the body of a man, and secured gold bars and dust to the amount of about a quarter of a million of dollars. The gold was carried to the water, and there the thief left two bars worth $50,000. Of course, all trace was lost at the water's edge. But a cap worn by the burglar was left in the tunnel. A certain man, known to have worn such a cap, was seen the next day or two with a new head covering. This was enough for the detectives. He was arrested. Tools were found in his house with dirt on them exactly answering to the dirt in the tunnel. The cords were tightened around him, and he confessed, and finally conducted the detectives to a point in the water where he had sunk the treasure. In his confession the man avers that he planned the robbery months ago, and did all the work alone. About $130,000 of the gold was recovered, and the remainder will be returned to the smelter in a short time. Again the statement made many years ago by the Scientific American is verified, "No vault is burglar proof if you will rent burglars an adjoining room." In this case no room was rented, but the burglar had access through a tunnel dug with his own hands, and all the time he needed. Thoughtlessness in leaving his well-known cap was his undoing. "Be sure your sin will find you out."

LYNCHING IN MISSISSIPPI.

Another lynching has occurred in Mississippi. It occurred in Carroll county. Be this said to the shame of the State. An old man and his wife were ruthlessly murdered in the night. Literally, they were butchered. Suspicion pointed to certain persons, with whom one of the sons had a difficulty but a few days before. They were arrested and thrown in jail—a man and two women. Naturally, the people were excited, and the mob spirit soon manifested itself. Strong efforts were made by leading citizens to prevent bloodshed, and to let the law take its course. To this end a committee was selected to go to the jail and make a thorough investigation. This somewhat pacified the excited people. The committee was honestly at work, and made occasional reports. It was thought for a while that all danger of violence was past, but the anger burst out afresh, and in spite of the protests of citizens, lawyers, and the judge of the circuit court, the officers were overpowered and the prisoners were executed. We record the fact with sorrow. We can do no more. What is to be done to stop such disgraceful work it is impossible to say. Perhaps a radical change in the laws of the land, which will secure speedy trial and prompt execution of its penalties, would help some. It would help more were there fewer loopholes of escape for criminals, and fewer opportunities for securing extension of time, etc. It would also help if the pardoning power were somewhat curtailed. But we grow heart-sick thinking of these things. May the good Lord come to our relief.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

What threatens to be the greatest strike on record is now on in the steel-producing regions of the North. The fight between the steel trust and the workers seems to be, not so much over wages or hours of labor, as over the determination of the workers to force the trust to recognize the laborers' union. This the trust has made up its mind not to do. Already many thousands of men have quit work, and many mills stand idle. Saturday last was the day appointed by President Shaffer to call out the men of the Amalgamated Associations, unless the trust yielded. This the trust failed to do, but President Shaffer, it is reported, was disappointed that his order was not generally obeyed. The associations in the West, in Chicago, Joliet, and Bay View, declined to join in the strike. Whether they will hold out remains to be seen. Not only this, but about 14,000 men who had been on strike returned to work. These facts encourage the trust, and they are beginning to claim the victory. But it is too early to make any sort of demonstration. The laborers are numbered by the hundreds of thousands, and have the sympathy of multitudes. If they have sufficient means to maintain themselves and hold out, they will inflict untold injury upon the trust, and incidentally upon the whole country. It is to be hoped that a settlement will soon be reached.

BY REV. W. S. LAGRONE.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, "A Pastor," under the above heading, introduces a question of serious import to the church of to-day. He is not the only one troubled and seriously inquiring about it. All over the church, in the pulpit and the pew, there are God-fearing, faithful men and women, that have the interest of the church at heart, troubled over these things. The question of dancing and card-playing is getting to be a serious thing, as sure as you live. We are not a pessimist. We believe God still lives, and that the church will ultimately triumph over evil; that there are thousands of men and women with martyr spirits in the church. But our optimistic eye does not blind us to the seductive influences of evil.

What we shall say here and now is in the kindest spirit, and not in the least to hurt or expose a living soul, but an earnest desire to help and, if possible, to correct an evil that is eating the spiritual life out of us. This thing is growing among us to an alarming extent, and it is time we were looking into it, and either correct it or agree to let it alone. And let the Bishops revise, reconsider, or repudiate their address on worldly amusements. If dancing is really an evil (and it certainly is, if we are to judge a tree by its fruits), and we are going to be honest with God, ourselves, and the world, let us get together, one and all, and rid the church of this foul blot. Anything else but a united effort on the part of Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, and official members, will be worthless. Let there be no conservative Brother A's, from the Bishops down, and the thing is settled. We are, all of us, somewhat to blame for the present state of things. As a rule, this evil is worse in the towns than in the country. We have often been asked why it was allowed in the towns and not in the country. "A Pastor" could, perhaps, answer this. It has gotten so now if a pastor undertakes to correct this evil, he immediately gets into trouble. A great ado is made about his want of tact and power to hold the young people, and a move to get rid of him is set on foot. The presiding elder is button-holed to one side, and a good brother says: "Our pastor is a good man, and we all love him. He has been a little too exacting of our young people, and they are going from us. If possible, give us a change, but say nothing about it, for I would not hurt his feelings for anything. But we must have a change." Or a private letter is addressed to the Bishop, pleading for a man that can draw, and a conservative one that will be popular with all classes, and immediately on his arrival he is informed of the trouble with his predecessor, and he is advised to be cautious. Of course, he does not want to get into trouble; so he says nothing about it.

Some years ago, in an elegant little station, a brave, good pastor was sent. It was his first station, and it was his last. His brethren thought he failed as a station preacher, but the judgment will reveal the stars he won in that place. In that congregation there was a wealthy, influential family, leaders in the church and community; but in that home there was dancing and card-playing. The pastor felt his responsibility, and saw the influence of this family on the church and community, and he set about in a prudent way to correct it and set them right. He succeeded, but at the close of the year he was changed, unexpectedly to him and the congregation. To this day he nor they know why. In this case the Bishop or presiding elder, or both, should have died by him. No one man should ever be allowed to influence the appointment of a preacher, unless he is the only one at that place.

Another mistake far-reaching in its evil effects on this subject was that of putting on trial a certain connectional officer some years ago, and specifying as one of his crimes his deliverances against dancing. We did not approve of everything that brother said, but whatever else he said, he was right in his opposition to dancing and tobacco as an evil. How often the action of that committee has been thrown into the face of the man that was trying to do his duty; how many ministers it has discouraged and young people it has encouraged to neglect and indifference eternity alone can tell.

There is another influence far-reaching in its effects on this subject, and that is the example of the families of some of the preachers. Thank God these are few among us, but they hurt us most fearfully. Said a prominent pastor to us some days ago: "I saw from the parsonage door a Bishop's grandson, a presiding elder's son, and a pastor's daughter, all on the way to the opera house to a ball, and they were all members of the church."

Did not the Commercial-Appeal some days ago give a glowing account of a ball given by the Vanderbilt boys in Nashville, Tenn., in which a presiding elder's son played a most conspicuous part? And this up at the hub, in our greatest school, where we are pleading and begging for money for Christian education. The Lord have mercy on us. The objection to a certain preacher going to a certain good place, where he was anxious to go, was that his daughter was a regular attendant at balls, and they did not want such an influence as that at the parsonage. Every ordained preacher among us takes a solem vow, "To frame and fashion the lives of his family according to the doctrines of Christ, and to make them wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ."

Another difficulty is with the Sunday school superintendent and stewards. If these men allow such things in their families, what support can the pastor expect in correcting the young people? I am not sure if these, after all, are not the most important factors in correcting this evil. We hope no one will suppose we are a dyspeptic, or a sore-head, or a chronic kicker. We are in perfect health, and have always had a better place than we deserved. We believe the M. E. Church, South, is the best and biggest thing in the world, and that Methodist preachers are the best in the world, and that Methodist people are as good, or better, than any in the world. The truth is, this is just what makes us say what we do. We want to see it without spot or wrinkle.

Said a pastor to us the other day: 'If I were to undertake to correct my young people for dancing and card-playing, the last one of them would go to the Episcopal Church, where they have a standing invitation, saying, 'Come and join us; we will let you dance and play cards and do anything to have a good time.' '

We do not believe it. If the proper steps are taken, the young people will respond as readily to right as any mortals living. If the Episcopal, or any other church, proposes to be the dumping-ground for such things, and we are powerless to prevent it, then it is time for us to close up and quit. Our fathers won the world from under these influences once; now, if we can not keep it from going back, there is something radically wrong somewhere.

"Turn them out?" No, never. Turn out first the Methodist people that allow these things in their homes, and indulge in them themselves. Give our young people better examples and influences, and they will do better. If good people would give them entertainment under better influences in their homes, they would not do these things. Until our good people throw open their hearts and homes to them, and give them something better, they will dance and play cards. If they are not allowed to congregate under good influences, they will congregate under evil, for get together they will and ought.

Said a lady to us some time ago in a community where the young people dance and play cards: "There is not a real Christian home in this community where the young people can go and spend a pleasant evening. The older people do not want to be bothered with them." Carpets and furniture cost too much to wear out at this. It is too much trouble to clean up after them. These same good people are swapping the souls of their children and neighbors' children for elegant upholstery and Brussels carpets for show.

If "A Pastor" will get his best people to throw open their homes and take an interest in his young people, he will have little trouble on this subject.

If these, we have mentioned, are not the chief difficulties in "A Pastor's" way, let some brother rise up and tell us where it is.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS.

BY DR. A. S. YARBROUGH.

To bring children to Christ, that God, through Christ, may bless and save them, is the duty of all, and more especially the duty of parents. Christ pleads for them, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Parents can not neglect to obey Christ without sin. The first pair had opportunity to gain knowledge. Had they been obedient, they could have had God as their teacher. By disobedience they lost their teacher, preferring another teacher. They learned as he taught, and sin throve. Still, God in mercy promised them a Deliverer, and by his prophets plied with man to look to, trust, and follow him. Christ came as promised, "and spake as never man spoke," saying, "Whosoever will let him come;" pleading especially for children, "They that seek me early shall find me." Why are not children and Christ in the same company? Whilst he was on earth they brought them to him, and he "took them up in his arms and blessed them." Whose fault is it that children are not brought to Christ? Whose business is it to carry children to Christ, that he may bless them? The lesson of sin learned in the Garden of Eden by the first pair in following their wills has been transmitted by all who have wills of their own, and their children to the third and fourth generation inherit the sins of their fathers. To get rid of our wills, and have God's will in us, guiding and leading us, is the only way to heaven. Christ says, 'Follow me." Neither is there salvation in any other name.

Parents are responsible for their children's training. They know that they are ignorant; they know that they will have learning of some kind; they hold the vantage ground of position; they can elect the teacher and the teaching they prefer for their children to have. I say prefer, advisedly. Christ, on the one hand, begging for the children; the devil, on the other hand, "as a roaring lion, walking about seeking whom he may devour." The devil hunting for the children, and parents indifferent, or failing to hide their children with Christ in God, are guilty of what? Let echo answer; I don't want to.

"A pebble in the streamlet cast
Has changed the course of many a river;
A dewdrop on the baby plant
Has dwarfed the giant oak forever."

Children are easily influenced; they are ever so observant; they are interested in whatsoever things their parents are interested in. Adages, which are the crystallized experiences of past ages, come on down to us. Here is one, "Like father, like son." If the father neglects duty, the son goes the full length that the father traveled, and mayhap farther.

"Example being a living law whose sway

If parents want manly sons and queenly daughters, they must have models for them to observe and pattern after. The broncho, or mustang, is the neglected descendant of the high-bred horses that escaped from Cortez when he invaded Mexico. Teaching and training are necessary in order to keep the pedigree and performance among animals. Without teaching and training everything deteriorates to the lowest. Excellence applies in no case till effort has been made. God has demonstrated the excellence of effort. He worked and made the universe; he gave this world to man; this is man's world. God offers to work in man, that the world may be brought to Christ; that the kingdom of heaven may be established on earth. "Outside of Christ, God is a consuming fire." The children are the heritage of the parents; parents can and do multiply their influence through their children. Children trained for Christ will follow Christ; his kingdom advances as the parents bring their children to him. Parents, whose side are you on? Joshua said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Service means work. When certain asked Him how they might work the works of God, he replied, "This is the work of God: that ye believe on him whom the Lord hath sent." That children may be acquainted with God, so that they can believe on him, and so work his works, they must be brought to him. May we all feel it incumbent on us to bring children to Christ, and so hasten the day of his coming. When he comes, will you and your folks constitute a united company? If not, why not? Can we escape banishment from his presence if we have neglected to minister to the least of these?

Minds are the avenues by which we approach God; by faith we lay hold of him, by obedience we serve him, by abiding in him we bear fruit. Without fruit we are failures, and are broken off because we bear no fruit, and are burned. The mind grows as it is fed and trained. "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined." To feed the mind and train the hand till mind and hand are settled into habits of righteousness is to largely secure exemption from temptation. "He that provideth not for his family has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Bodies may perish, but minds endure. Shall we minister to the one and neglect the other? The sowing is followed by the reaping. Parents, if you would have good children, if you would be hopeful here and happy in the hereafter, secure to yourselves that hope and happiness by teaching and bringing your children up in the way that they should go, "for when they are old, they will not depart from it."

Our works do follow us. They who hope for happiness in heaven, and do nothing to secure to themselves the welcome of, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," etc., may find a warmer welcome in another place, instead of the expected cordial greeting in heaven. If parents, and all who may be parents, would study the first chapter of First Samuel and the first chapter of Luke, and learn the lesson therein taught, they could secure to their children a God-Father who is able to bless them with fostering care, even to the filling of them with the Holy Ghost from their mothers' wombs.

Miscellaneous Notes.

Rev. F. L. Cobb, one of our active Epworth Leaguers, is introduced to the M. E. Church, through the Northwestern Christian Advocate, as the "Young People's Secretary, Missionery Society, M. E. Church, South." The author of that has a genius for inventing and bestowing titles. There is no such office as "Young People's Secretary" in our church.

Mississippi colleges in general, and Millsaps in particular, rejoice at the signal honor won by Mr. W. L. Duren at the Southern Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest at Monteagle last week. Mr. Duren, of Millsaps, won the medal in the contest in Meridian last Spring, and has just followed this up by winning the medal over all the Southern colleges.—New Albany Gazette.

Empress Frederick, daughter of the late Queen Victoria, and mother of Emperor William of Germany, died at Cronberg on the evening of Aug. 5. She has been a sufferer a long time from cancer, and of late the disease, it is said, was complicated with dropsy, which hastened her death. Since the death of her husband, several years since, she has lived in comparative retirement. Like all Queen Victoria's daughters, she was lovely in character, and a devoted Christian.

A dispatch from Aberdeen, Miss., dated Aug. 10, says: "A petition for a local-option election, bearing 1,300 qualified voters out of a registered total of 2,000, was presented to the Monroe County Board of Supervisors to-day, and by agreement of counsel a special election was ordered for Aug. 29, without investigating the status of each individual signer. This closes the first chapter of a campaign that has been warmly waged for a month, and will become even more intense the next eighteen days." This liquor business has been troubling the good people of Monroe for a long time. We trust they will succeed in throwing off the galling yoke.

What Our Editors Say.

A GROWING EVIL.

We mean the disregard of the Lord's day. In the old times the South had respect for this day. In every city, village, and hamlet, and on all the farms and plantations labor ceased, and a universal quietness prevailed. How much this good custom had to do with molding our civilization, no one can tell. That it was tremendously influential, no one who has given the matter any thought can possibly doubt. We are grieved and pained beyond measure to see our people accepting the lax notions so prevalent in other parts of the country. A few years ago an effort was made to introduce Sunday baseball into Nashville, but it failed because public opinion would not tolerate it. Since then we fear there has been a decline. We are not a bigot nor even a Puritan. We accept to the full our Lord's statement that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Yet we are sure that this desecration of the holy day, leaving out of view all religious considerations, is sure to react to the harm and damage of our people. If history proves anything, it proves that the setting apart of the seventh part of the time to rest and worship is essential to the best welfare of States and nations. All classes need this break in the regular order of their lives, and can not well get along without it. The laboring folk, in particular, ought to be the friends and supporters of the Sabbath. They, more than anybody else, are interested in keeping the day holy. If it ever comes to be regarded as a common day, then we shall see seven days of labor for six days' pay.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

RISING ABOVE LITTLENESS

A wise man makes little of that which deserves little, and much of that which calls with the voice of strength. This he does in his relations to the friends and enemies of truth and justice in the abstract, and also as they affect his own feelings and life. A wise forethought in these matters begets serenity and self-control. "He who is not proof against slights and rebuffs," says a helpful writer in current pages, "is not of the stuff of which worthy workmen and heroes are made. The true man works from principle. He acts from a sense of duty. He is not indifferent to personal approval or favor, but if it is withheld, he goes on and does what the situation calls for, independently and fearlessly. He does not whine and complain, or talk of the want of appreciation, but makes himself so useful and so necessary that even his critics are forced to acknowledge the worth of his character and service. It becomes Christians to rise above all littleness, and to humbly and self-sacrificingly do whatever comes to hand in the church and the community in a noble and Christian way."—Epworth Era.

SOME NEW THINGS.

A very remarkable and unusual thing occurred in a Quarterly Conference held not far from this office, a short time ago. The presiding elder had called the eighth question, and the stewards had footed up all the cash in hand and were about ready to report, when the preacher in charge said he wished to make a statement. He then stated a few days before a lady member of his church had called on him and said she wished to pay her back quarterage, that she was in arrears for two or three years. She also stated that she wished to pay her quarterage for this year. He told her he did not know how much she was behind, and that the stewards could tell her what her assessment was for this year. She said she would just pay him, and opening her purse, she drew therefrom and handed to the pastor one hundred dollars! When the preacher made this statement, the presiding elder was almost paralyzed, and then the Quarterly Conference was silent with astonishment. Nevertheless this is a true story. Surely this is something new under the sun.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

The drouth has, beyond all doubt, proved one thing: that there exists among the farmers of this country a devout belief in the efficacy of prayer. They believe that if they pray for rain, the rain will come. A number of years ago, a similar calamity befell the farming districts of Tennessee, and the religious people of a particular locality in the eastern section of the State determined to hold a special service on a particular day, to pray for relief. On the day appointed, one devout old member attended, carrying under his arm a huge umbrella. The sky was clear, not a cloud was visible, and as nobody in those days and in that country ever carried an umbrella for shade, the old man's rain shield instantly became a subject of humorous remark, to which in great surprise he responded, "Why, have we not met to pray for rain?" It is gratifying to state that faith so stalwart was rewarded, for while the rest of the congregation was soaked to the skin on the homeward journey, the old man remained dry.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

SALVATION.

Salvation is not a notion, a theory, an opinion, but a life consciously lived, in the service of God. It is not a thought about Christ, but a belief in Christ, which becomes a potent factor for good, growing more and more real to the man himself, and more and more a power of God in the soul, perfecting the character in godlikeness. A saved man needs not to give a note to compel the payment of an honest debt. Nor is the fear of wrath necessary to produce in him upright conduct. He hates sin more than he dreads its consequences. If one does right from fear of punishment, he is no better in the sight of God than the heathen. If one is free from falsehood, robbery, theft and murder, only to evade the law or public censure, he is no better than the libertine. A saved man incorporates in his life right action, not from fear of the consequences of sin, but because he hates sin itself.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

YELLOW JOURNALISM.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

Yellow journalism is a by-product in the evolution of the ideal newspaper. It finds its support in an abnormal condition of the rational and moral life of a certain class of the newspaper public; a craving for intellectual pabulum of an exciting, sensational type. The cheap yellow sheet supplies this demand. And with flaming head-lines, flashing stories and bombastic subject-matter the publishers stimulate and intensify the public craving for the marvelous and unreal.

The extensive publication and wide circulation of these yellow sheet is demonstrative of the existence of a degenerate public taste in certain portions of the social organism. This phenomenon, which exists in the heart of society, and from a scientific point of view, partakes of the nature of an epidemic of subjective sentimentalism.

The subject matter of this class of journals is of such a nature as to make a strong, stimulating appeal to the fancy, the lower instincts, and the entire emotional side of the mind. It does not touch at all the higher rational and emotional life. As a daily and weekly excitant, it keeps the emotional life of the individual in a state of neurotic tension. It produces a constant succession of sham emotions which are strengthened by every perusal of the yellow sheet. Under the cumulative force of habit the nervous system automatically responds to the suggestive power of the highly-wrought exaggerations. The suggestive influence of this inflammatory reading matter upon the imagination and feelings is such as to create an atmosphere of unreality of thought and action. The mind soon demands this mental food in a more exaggerated form. The excessive excitability of the imagination demands articles and stories out of all normal relation to the real facts of life, in order to gratify an intemperate craving for an emotional pleasure which is only momentary. It is nothing more than a form of sensuous intoxication, whose physical basis is a neurotic excitability of the nervous system. Such a type of moral pathology finds a parallel in the emotional excitement of the gaming-table, religious fanaticism, and other forms of emotional mania.

The yellow journal does not produce such intensity as these more marked influences, but though its suggestive influence is mild, yet its effects are identical upon the imagination and nervous system. It is a disintegrating force in the moral and intellectual life of society. What the saloon is to the physical man, the yellow journal is to the rational life of its readers. One furnishes artificial excitement to the body, while the other furnishes a similar unnatural stimulation to the mental life, though in a less degree. Mental and moral aberrations are the natural fruits of such unnatural excitement. The physical, social and political conditions of American life have produced a nervous susceptibility to exciting influences.

Among the many excitants which supply this unnatural demand of our busy life, the yellow-journal class of literature plays no inconsiderable part. Take a newspaper reader of nervous susceptibility, immoral tendencies, enervated will, surrounded with unfavorable environments, and bring to bear upon him daily, suggestive influence of crimes, horrors, and the other features of sensational journalism, and the chances are that all that is bad in his nature and environments will ripen in his character into vice and crime. The scientific alienist is able to trace, to a certain extent, the developing and ripening fruits of the great bulk of cheap literature upon the life of the masses. The harvest is realized in suicides, murders, thefts, scandals, and divorces.

But there is an optimistic side to the picture. The present reign of materialistic influences has somewhat debased the public taste for a higher-class journalism in certain circles. The last quarter of a century was, doubtless, a formative period in American journalism. In the evolution of the ideal high-toned, clean, wholesome and progressive newspaper of modern life, the yellow sheet is only an abnormal development—as a by-product. Irresponsible yellow journalism has, doubtless, reached the climax of its influence.

The experiment of Mr. Sheldon and others vividly brought to light the duty of journalists to render obedience to the moral and rational ideals of social and civic life. This enthronement of moral purpose in journalism means the rapid decline of the influence of the yellow sheet. The twentieth century newspaper will, doubtless, interpret the realism of life in the light of the ideals of the true, the beautiful, and the good. This lofty conception of the mission of the modern newspaper is rendered necessary by the silent, yet tremendous influence which it wields over the public mind in moulding and shaping its social, political, and religious life.

Multitudes never read anything besides newspapers. The home of to-day without a newspaper is an anomaly. The growing influence of the press makes the mission of the denominational newspaper of supreme importance. The church which fails to send into the homes of its constituency a pure, fresh, and enlightening type of literature does not rise to the heights of its opportunities. Napoleon was right when he said the final source of power is intelligence. The teaching preacher is the preacher of to-morrow. The religious press is a voiceless teacher, whose influence must be increased in this new century.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

THE ORIGIN OF IMMERSION.

One of the most gigantic errors ever imposed upon the church was immersion. It was the prototype, and heralded the advent of the darkest ages Christendom ever saw. Not satisfied to "blur and blot the simple, beautiful rite instituted by Christ, until the symbol of life is distorted into the supposed likeness of death," it is decorated to-day in the catch-catchy garb of error, flaunting its wily fingers in the face of Truth, demanding her decapitation. On its introduction into the world there was not so much as a fig leaf to hide its shame. It stalked in upon the church as naked as Adam and Eve in Eden. To-day its gaudy apparel, wily bewitchments and false regime not only lead many good people astray, but many of its votaries are consigning to the bottomless pit of eternal despair all who do not go down into the "liquid grave."

It is a notorious fact that the first instances of immersion on record (second and third centuries) were immersions three times in a state of entire nudity, and the shocking and indecent practice (of immersing naked) was kept up, more or less, for seven hundred years, or until the middle of the tenth century. Superstitious practices of the most revolting kind were practiced along with the mode, showing that it was all-born of superstition.

During the first two centuries of the church, and immediately following apostolic times, the question of mode never entered the controversy of baptism. It was invariably by effusion. But the "motive"—i. e., the question of "sincerity or insincerity"—was involved, as in the case of Novatian.

In Cyprian's time (middle of the third century) "the quantity of water, the touching of all parts by the water, began to attract attention," because of the mystical power supposed to be in the water by virtue of God's Spirit having moved upon the face of the waters, etc. "Water baptism having originated in the universal symbolism of water, with innocence, purity as the way to innocence, immersion originated in superstitious views of the efficacy of the baptismal waters."

Even before immersion was practiced, and because of the superstitions views with regard to the efficacy of water then taking shape, candidates received the element in copiousness and large effusions.

Later, in order that they might "imbibe" the mystical grace, they were led into the water waist (or neck) deep, and baptized by water being poured on the head.

The next step was the taking off of the clothes, in order that the water might touch every part of the skin, and the head and shoulders were dipped three times. Even while the trine immersion was almost universally practiced, sprinkling was allowed in cases of sickness, and its validity unquestioned.

Immersion with a single dip, as it is now practiced by Baptists and others, was not practiced until four hundred and fifty years after the birth of Christ. Some of the writers of that time who speak of the single immersion speak of it as an "innovation," and as "another heresy;" the same as "trine immersion"—naked.

That the primitive Christians (second and third centuries), when they baptized by immersion, baptized stark naked, can be proved by quotations from the fathers as well as by some of the most learned men of modern times. Baptist historians themselves admit it. "The most tender, delicate and modest females, young and old, could obtain no exception," and before a later day suggested putting "a cloth around the middle" for the sake of decency (as related by Mr. Benedict). They were compelled to receive the ordinance with no more baggage than Adam and Eve had in paradise. But "Mr. B., please take it, sir, as you find it; as Prof. Stewart says, 'in a state of entire nakedness.'"

St. Chrysostom, in relating "the barbarous proceedings of his enemies against him" on one Sabbath before Easter, says: "They came around into the church, and by violence expelled the clergy, killing many in the baptistry, with which the women who were at that time divested in order to be baptized were put into such a terror that they fled away naked, and could not stay in the slight to put on such clothes as the modesty of their sex required." (Clement, page 148.)

Can any man believe that the great Head of the church would institute an ordinance by a mode so revolting to common modesty and decency as immersion? Did the apostles immerse naked three times? By what authority are the clothes now put on, and by what authority a single dip?

FROM A PRISON CELL.

In a cell, a dark cell, shut away from man, lonely, friendless, forgotten, known only by a number—the number on the books of a prison—yet some mother's boy, a happy boy, doubtless free in heaven's sunshine, free as the birds whose song he loved to hear. Do you remember that home on the banks of the Atchafaleya—the mother, the prayers she taught, the bed, the good-night kisses, the flowers, the garden, the swing, the village, and the associates? Some. Ah, yes; you might have risen, too. You might have been honored—a noble, helpful member of society. But the dark walls of a prison cell now close in round you. Can not you remember every step in the pathway where your feet have gone out of the way of honor and right-doing? Ah, yes. East, west, north, south—everywhere you have been; but the opportunities are gone. You are only a number, lying in the dark shadows of a prison cell.

I must express my thanks to the Rev. E. N. Evans for words of good cheer at a time when all my friends seem to be deserting me.

I am glad to relate my experience, in earnest hope that some one as unfortunate as myself may be benefited thereby. That this is written by a convict will, I feel, prove none the less interesting. I was brought up in a happy home and by Christian parents. My father is, and has been for nearly fifty years, a minister of the gospel. Well do I remember the first time I left home, when, as I passed out through the gate, my dear old mother said, "Be sure to attend church and Sunday-school, read your Bible, and associate with Christian people." To my parents' credit, I always maintained strong religious convictions, attended church and Sabbath-school, but never gave my heart to Christ, and I now consider it the will of God, in the misfortune I met with, to bring me to a full realization of my spiritual condition. It is true that God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform; but, oh, how great his mercy!

The first night I spent in prison will never be forgotten. When the cell doors clanged, closing in upon me, I felt my very heart sink within me; then, with a contrite heart, I looked to Jesus, and spent the night in prayer. How my poor old mother's words came to me! My friends, brothers and sisters, there is one vision that never fades—that of home, and mother and father. How I praise the Lord for saving me that night in a prison cell!

I trust that no young man who reads this will ever have to suffer the degradation and punishment that my sins are compelling me to suffer. This event, in the hands of God, has led me to see myself, and flee from the wrath to come.

I ask the prayers of the readers of the dear old ADVOCATE, that I may live for God the balance of my life, even though in prison cells.

May God bless and uplift the fallen!

Yours with everlasting love,

BETHEL CAMP MEETING.

The diary of William Winans mentions that in 1813 he arrived at Bethel Camp Ground while "Little Tommie Owens" was preaching. McTyeire, in his History of Methodism, refers to this same Bethel as a "center of spiritual power, where revivals and camp meetings and Conferences made history, and from which laborers went into the vineyard."

The church owns at Bethel eighty acres of land, upon which are located a parsonage, a brick church house, a substantial tabernacle, and a score of tents. The camp ground is covered at this season of the year with a carpet of green, shaded withal by massive oak, beech, and other trees. The location is a little south of one of the roads between Woodville and Centerville, and the church and camp ground are at present a part of the Percy Creek circuit, the Natchez district presiding elder and the pastor being in charge of the services. The business of the camp ground is managed by an association composed of the tent-holders, neighboring pastors and other supporters. Capt. Robert McGehee, of Woodville, is president.

The recent encampment was very pleasant and beneficial. The preachers present and helping were: Dr. W. H. LaPrade, of Louisiana; Revs. R. Selby, T. W. Adams, T. W. Brown, C. C. Griffin, C. D. Cecil, Phil Petty, and H. G. Hawkins, of Mississippi. Mr. Huff Jelks, of Whiteker, Miss., had charge of the lighting, which was done with acetylene gas; and Prof. U. S. Meichen, of Utica, Miss., led the music. Only two or three applied for church membership, but faith was engendered, and it is believed that Bethel Camp Ground is going to "take on new life" and become again a "center of spiritual power."

We suggest that next year there be a regular Sunday-school held at 9 A. M. each Sabbath of the meeting, the superintendent and teachers being appointed beforehand from the representatives who are to be present from the Woodville, Bethel, and Centerville, or other Sunday-schools. Details can be arranged so that this will not be at all impracticable.

We further suggest that, as there are two annual camp meetings—Sem Jones and Bethel—within the bounds of the Natchez district, there be held for two days immediately following the one a District Epworth League Institute, and for two days following the other a District Sunday-school Institute. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE W. F. M. S.

A devout praise of thanksgiving should go up from the Louisiana W. F. M. S. Once again we have a missionary from our ranks in the foreign field. Miss Helen Johnston sailed from New York, July 20, for Brazil, and ere this, with "favoring wind and sail," has entered on her work for Christ. Miss Johnston esteemed it a privilege to appear before the W. B. F. M. and give an earnest account of her call to the work, and her deep gratitude to the women of the Louisiana Conference for giving her the means toward her preparation for witnessing for Christ in foreign lands.

The amount in hand for the various appropriations of our W. B. F. M. is less this year than the last, and the Conference secretaries were confronted with the alternative of either assuming the expenses of their own outgoing missionaries, or keeping them at home.

Our president, Mrs. LaPrade, who was also our delegate to the Board meeting in June, pledged for us the support, outfit and traveling expenses of our own missionary. Mrs. Hargrove and Miss Gibson both asserted "they have had no finer material at the training-school than Miss Johnston," and Mrs. LaPrade dared not assume the responsibility of keeping her at home, relying rather on the loyal devotion and ability of our home workers to the necessary amount of $750.

The Executive Board of our Conference has decided to make no assessments for this cause, leaving it to every individual member to contribute as the heart prompts. The appeal comes to us all, closely and tenderly. We hope each auxiliary will consider it at the next meeting, and see that a response comes from every member. Life membership fees and contributions of the Week of Prayer may be counted in this pledge.

The command, "Go!" was meant for every soul who names the name of Christ. "Go," or its approximate equivalent, "Send," is binding on all. If we can not go, the spirit of going should permeate our at-home duties, and prompt us gladly to help the going of those who do go. Let us stand bravely by our own representative, and do our part toward her support. She goes in our stead. We must do the sending if we hope for an interest in the reward. We trust that the God whom we serve will put it into the heart of everyone to give liberally to this cause of means, prayers, and abiding interest.

WEST ALEXANDRIA, LA.

I have just returned from West Alexandria, the charge of Bro. W. T. Woodward. We had a good revival for Alexandria; so the brethren said. Eighteen joined our church, and a Baptist brother informed me that others would join their church that were converted during our meeting.

Alexandria is becoming a railroad center, and will most likely become quite a city. It is located on Red river, in a rich soil. Bro. Woodward is an active pastor. He looks diligently after every interest of his charge. All pleasure, and everything besides, are subordinated by him to the good of Methodism. He is a true Methodist, and it does us good to remember that he is from Mississippi.

While at Alexandria we met with Bro. C. C. Miller, the pastor of East Alexandria. We found him quite solicitous about his charge. He held a meeting at the same time of Bro. Woodward's meeting, assisted by our consecrated and accomplished Bro. C. W. Crisler, from Brookhaven, Miss. We did not have the pleasure of hearing Bro. Crisler preach, our services being held at the same hour, but we heard, through some of the brethren, that his sermons were instructive and good. This is just what we expected of him. Although he and I did not know anything of the other's purpose to go to Alexandria, and reached it by different routes, yet we had the pleasure of returning home together.

Now, in conclusion, I wish to say that I met some true Methodists in Alexandria—the Bells, etc. We shall always remember Sister Smith and her family with much pleasure. It was she who gave me a nice, comfortable home while in Alexandria. May God specially bless her and her family! May he bless all the Methodists and everybody in Alexandria! May he bless Bro. Woodward commensurate with his responsibilities!

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

LIVE OAK CHARGE.

DEAR BRETHREN: We closed one of the grandest meetings last night that I ever witnessed. Bro. Sam Riggs did the preaching. The Lord was with us in great power; twenty-two accessions, ninety-six professions, and many reclaimed. The people have been brought to see themselves, their relation to God, their duty to the church, their pastor and their fellow-man, different from what they ever did before. This meeting was at Live Oak Church. We had a grand meeting at Palmetto, conducted by Rev. E. E. Riggs, and one at Red Oak by Rev. J. L. McManns. We have had thirty accessions this year on the charge, and expect many more. Oh, may God help us to go on with the good work! We realize that as Bro. Riggs leaves us, that Satan is going to try to undo all this work; but we hope and trust that the people may be so firm and uncompromising that his efforts to lead them astray will be a grand failure.

It is unnecessary for me to say much about Bro. E. E. and S. L. Riggs. You know them. They are men of God; they are known by their works. Lord, give us more Riggs', is my prayer.

LECOMPTE AND WEST ALEXANDRIA.

We have just closed a very successful meeting at West Alexandria. I was ably assisted at that point by Rev. I. L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss. He did us some very fine work. His preaching is decidedly scriptural. His sermons are clear and logically arranged, and all of his arguments substantiated by more or less of God's Word. He is a Holy-Ghost man. We had a number of conversions; eighteen to join the church; baptized seven adults. In my meeting at Lamorie, Bro. H. W. Benton, of Columbia, La., did the preaching. He is a splendid protracted-meeting man. He captured my people, saint and sinner. At this meeting we had five accessions on profession of faith, and baptized three adults. We have had forty-one additions since Conference. Our collections will be in full. A new departure in this neck of the woods.

Yours in Christ,

W. T. WOODWARD P. C.

KENTWOOD, LA.

We have just closed a most wonderful revival at this place. Not only have the church people been greatly blessed, but many have been converted. There have been between seventy-five and eighty who have committed themselves to join the different churches; perhaps one-half the Methodist. We had to leave two or three days too soon. This is a mistake we often make. Bro. Hoffpauir had prepared the way for us. Bro. Hoffpauir is not only a fine preacher, but a splendid pastor. The people of Kentwood hold him in very high esteem. W. M. McINTOSH.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

HARPERVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I have just closed my second protracted meeting for this circuit, which was held at Good Hope, and continued six days. Large congregations both day and night, good order, good behavior, and serious attention from beginning to end. We had a gracious revival of religion, a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit; said to be the best revival meeting held there in many years. Bro. M. L. White, of the Carthage circuit, assisted us, and did all the preaching after Monday night (which was the time he arrived). I don't think I ever heard him preach with more power and greater demonstration of the Spirit; much to the edifying, strengthening, and uplifting of Christians (and especially so to this writer); also to the awakening of sinners. There were ten accessions to the church—all by baptism—and I believe most, if not all, soundly converted. They were all young men and young women just entering into young manhood and womanhood, and I don't know when I have seen a more promising class of young people come into our church. Our Baptist friends turned out in very large numbers, and assisted us in the meeting, and expressed themselves as being greatly benefited, and I am sure their presence and help was greatly appreciated. To God be all the glory for the gracious manifestation of his presence and the success of the meeting. IRVIN MILLER, P. C.

Walnut Grove, Miss., July 27, 1901.

EAST END, MERIDIAN.

MR. EDITOR: We are now engaged in overhauling our church-building. The men are attending to the painting, the women are having the papering done, and the children of the Sunday-school are raising money to re-carpet the church. Harmony prevails, and, with energy and God's blessings, by the first of September we will have spent about three hundred dollars. Three weeks ago, when we began our subscription, we thought we could raise only $125 for the painting, but our people got started, and then they concluded they could paper and carpet. How easily God's work can be accomplished when a church gets together and says, "We can and will." In the meanwhile we are paying off an old debt on the parsonage. This has been the most pleasant of the three years spent among these good people. Fraternally,

D. P. BRADFORD.

BLACK HAWK.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: On July 21, assisted by Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, we began a revival at Aoona, Black Hawk charge, and continued the services nine days. Great interest was manifest from the first service. This interest became more and more intense until it burst into an old-fashioned revival on Wednesday, which was unabated to the last service. Mourners were invited to the altar, and they came, earnestly seeking the Savior. Many were happily converted, and rejoiced with 'Joy unspeakable and full of glory." Christians prayed, praised, and rejoiced together. The work was widespread and intense. Many of our people declare it the greatest revival held in this charge for many years. Besides a large number of conversions in the church, we received five new members. Several new members were added to the W. F. M. Society, a young man's weekly prayer meeting was organized, and we think the Sunday-school, already one of the best, received a new impetus. The church has been quickened, and the cause of Christ advanced. To God be all the glory.

Fraternally yours,

W. D. MCCULLOUGH, P. C.

CRAWFORD, MISS.

DEAR DOCTOR: We have just closed a gracious revival in our church at Trinity, which is said to have been the best in many years. There were nine additions to our church, and a genuine uplift to the entire community. The very able and efficient preaching was done by Rev. E. S. Lewis.

Yours fraternally,

P. E. DUNCAN.

MARIETTA CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have just closed a fine meeting, with fifteen or twenty conversions and thirteen additions to the church, with more to follow. The Lord is doing great things for us, for which we are thankful. We ask an interest in your prayers.

Your brother in the work,

J. D. SIMPSON.

WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

A GOOD REVIVAL.

DEAR EDITOR: We closed a two weeks' meeting at Hackberry, Texas, on the fourteenth ultimo. We secured the able help of Rev. George G. Sanders, of the North Mississippi Conference. Our congregations were large and very attentive. Bro. Sanders did us good work. We had a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit from the beginning. His preaching was sound, practical, and powerful, and resulted in the conversion of souls. The Baptist brethren co-operated and rendered valuable service. They were rewarded in five additions to their branch of the church, and seven joined and were baptized into the Methodist Church. Bro. Sanders has returned to Mississippi to take charge of his pastoral work. May God abundantly bless his efforts at all the charges on his work!

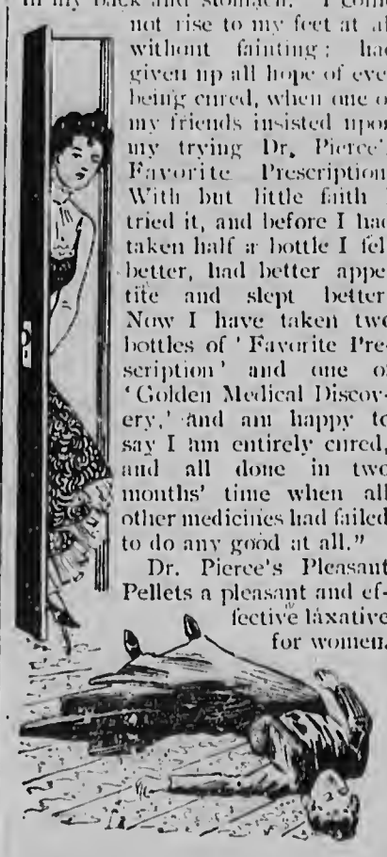
I could not rise to my feet without fainting.



"I had suffered for three years or more at monthly periods," writes Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N. C. "It seemed as though I would die with pains in my back and stomach. I could not rise to my feet at all without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better, had better appetite and slept better. Now I have taken two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am happy to say I am entirely cured, and all done in two months' time when all other medicines had failed to do any good at all."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

From this date, persons who desire extra copies of the ADVOCATE will please accompany their order with the money at the rate of FOUR CENTS a copy, otherwise their request will go unheeded. Subscribers who fail to get their papers are excepted.

The organization of an order called "The New Century Knights," by Dr. W. B. Palmore, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, promises to grow to gigantic proportions. Its object is to secure a pledge from boys to be something, and to do something for the betterment of the world, and never to use profane words, liquor or tobacco in any form. If the boys already pledged will keep their promise, Dr. Palmore will have accomplished untold good.

A gentleman recently endeavored to secure the consent of a Christian brother to join his lodge. But the brother replied: "No; if I do, I can not attend to my church duties, and I will allow nothing to interfere with my church." The pastor of that man can depend on him. Such members are all too rare. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

One of the great daily papers of the country passed the highest possible compliment on a body of young Christians when it said: "There is no danger that they will disturb the public peace. The saloons will not be a penny the richer for their coming. It will not be necessary to detail a single policeman to help preserve order. They have no other purpose than to make themselves better, and to do what they can towards making the world better." Had ten thousand people been called together in that city to witness the races, or a prize-fight, no such complimentary words could have been used.

The Standard, in its editorial report of the meeting of the Baptist Young People's Union of America—an organization similar in character and aims to the Epworth League—recently held in Chicago, says: "Every reference to progress, to loyalty to Baptist principles, to local peculiarities, was applauded to the echo." The spirit that prompted such applause may be manifested by all bodies of Christians, no matter how fraternal they may be towards other bodies. It is no evidence of bigotry. We would be glad to see it fostered and exhibited by our own young people. They need to be taught the difference between denominational loyalty and denominational exclusiveness.

OUR HOME-BUILDERS.

We are constantly pleading for a nobler and better type of manhood. Physical and moral development are the two things which we have in view, and are working to achieve. To these ends we establish schools and colleges, and preach in our pulpits every Sunday. We boast largely of our success. Each succeeding year we fancy that we are turning out a higher and better equipped class of young men. This may be true, but it is equally true that while we are doing this, we are giving encouragement to ideas which, if pushed to their legitimate conclusion, will result, if not in degeneration, at least in a constantly diminishing number of ideal men—we may add, of ideal women also.

What do we mean? Simply this: That while the conservative and wise men among us are pleading and working for the elevation of the race, there are others, extreme and eccentric in their views, who are agitating in favor of what they call the "independence of woman." They would have woman cut loose from home and home surroundings—which is equivalent to the destruction of the home-making instinct and duty of woman—and go out into the world on her own responsibility and earn her own living. Thousands of our women, acting on this principle, are literally away from home, in distant cities, pursuing avocations which, a generation ago, it was thought were altogether outside the sphere of woman. Forty years ago no self-respecting father or elder brother would have suffered such. Now they encourage it, and to-day many lazy men are lying around home, or lounging on the streets, eating bread produced by the "sweat of the brow" of wife or daughter.

We know conditions are not now what they were forty years back, but we do not hesitate to say that they are not such as to require the vast army of women engaged in work to become bread-winners. Were it so, no protest would be heard. Bread-winning is not always the object. Money is what is wanted. Business positions are not sought and obtained exclusively by the daughters of the poor. Young women whose fathers are in comfortable, not to say independent, circumstances are wholly given to work for the sake of money. This itself would not be so bad if the money-making desire did not increase, and so fasten itself on the individual as to cause her to abandon every purpose except that of making money. One case of many will illustrate this fact. A good man with a good home—well-to-do in the world—paid his respects to a nice lady. His addresses were heard, and he was accepted. But the lady was making fifty dollars a month, and the money was all her own. To marry would compel her to give up her position, and lose the money. She hesitated, and finally concluded that fifty dollars a month was a surer thing than to trust her future even to a good man. Are there not others? And many good men encourage this money-getting disposition in their women, utterly forgetful of the fact that the streets of our cities are thronged with men out of employment because business positions are filled by women, many of whom ought to be in their homes.

In the above illustration we have more than hinted at the result of encouraging our women to go into business, viz.: the destruction of the home. This means that a constantly increasing number of women, wedded to business and enthusiastic over the prospect of making money, will decline to enter matrimony, and finally scout the idea of motherhood. This, taken in connection with the fact that the birth-rate is being reduced year by year, having dropped in the last fifty years from six to the family to as low an average as two. This low average, of course, is due to the fact that in many rich families there are no children at all. It is said that on a certain block in New York containing fifteen families, there are only fifteen children. This state of things could, doubtless, be shown to be true in cities besides New York.

If these things are true just at the beginning of "woman's emancipation," as it is sometimes called, what will be the result fifty or a hundred years from to-day? Verily the prospect before us is not very encouraging for a better type of manhood. Long for it as we may, educate our women as we please, we can not realize our desires unless our best and truest women consent to become home-builders. To do this, they must pay more attention to the things that constitute a home, and less to business and mammon.

BAPTIZED MONEY.

A few years ago a gentleman professed religion and joined the Baptist Church. Of course, he was baptized by immersion. Just as he was ready to step down into the water, a friend whispered, "You had better take your pocket-book out of your pocket; your money will get wet." "No, no," said he; "I want my pocket-book baptized, too." That man had the true idea and spirit of consecration. This incident illustrates what we mean by baptized money.

Not everyone who makes a profession of religion is so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the gospel, or submits so readily and so fully to its demands. Too many have an idea that consecration is personal and spiritual, and that religion requires only experience in grace, and a life outwardly conformed to the will of God. They seem to think that if they give their hearts to God, and their time to his service, that the full measure of obligation has been met. This done, they use their worldly possessions as taste or inclination may dictate. They labor under the mistaken notion that what they have in hand is theirs absolutely to hold or dispose of as they please. This false conception explains—at least, in part—why so many zealous and apparently consecrated Christians contribute so sparingly to some of the calls of God, and utterly ignore others of equal importance. Their pocket-books are not baptized.

Nothing is more clearly set forth in the Scriptures than the fact that, whatever else a Christian is, he is God's steward. What he has belongs to God, to be disposed of as God directs. He will be held to a strict account. No unfaithfulness will be overlooked. Nor can any man in the final reckoning deceive God as to the manner in which he used his Lord's goods.

No man need live in ignorance as to his stewardship. Let him recognize God, work and accumulate with a view to God's glory, and distribute as God wills. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." There is no difficulty in obeying this command of our Lord if, first of all, there is a thorough consecration of worldly energies and means to divine service, for then we are not only prepared, but willing to "do good, to be rich in good works, ready to distribute, and willing to communicate." Such is the divinely ordained method of "laying up treasure in heaven." In this every man is faithful whose money is baptized.

Two men are mentioned in the Scriptures who, in the use of wealth, exemplified the extremes of the proper use and abuse of their stewardship. "A certain rich man" is described as having so abundantly prospered that he "had not where to bestow his goods." He pulled down his old barns and built larger ones. He gathered in his store until all was safely housed. Then, in his pride and selfishness, he sat himself down and said unto his soul, "Thou hast goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." In the quiet hour, when at the height of his glory, a voice was heard: "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee; then whose shall these things be? So is everyone that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." Job was different. The richest man in all the East, he was perfect before God, and loved his fellow-man. His wealth was God's, and he distributed it with a lavish hand, not recklessly, but where it was needed. And when all was swept away, including his children, he calmly said: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." He saw no reason or ground for complaint. His money was baptized.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

One of the finest preachers we ever heard, one of the most effective on revival occasions, was learned, profound, eloquent; an orator almost without fault; but he was as simple as a child. The educated were charmed, the most ignorant understood everything he said, and were blessed. We have seen him sway vast audiences of cultivated hearers as a wind would sway a forest. He was versed in other languages than his native tongue, and held the chair of Greek in a great university, but he had a good stock of common sense, was well balanced, and never tried to make a show. He used his learning to the best advantage. This man was sought after, and was always heard with pleasure and profit by admiring multitudes.

If the eyes of any young preacher who is proud of his attainments, and takes advantage of the pulpit to display his learning, happens to fall on these lines, let him resolve to profit by this great man's example, and be assured that people wait on his ministry, not to learn how much he knows of philosophy and science, and the languages, modern or ancient, but to be instructed in the Word of God.

All who ever heard the late Dr. J. J. Wheat, either in his regular pastorate or on great camp-meeting occasions, will bear witness to the truthfulness of what we say in regard to the simplicity, effectiveness and popularity of his preaching. He was a model.

THE FINE ITALIAN HAND.

The School Board of Chicago has determined to furnish the children of the primary grade with free text-books. In this respect Chicago is but following in the wake of other cities. Whether this is to the interest of all concerned, we undertake not to say. We have not given the matter full consideration. Some Roman Catholics, however, seem to have very decided convictions on the subject, and have applied to the courts to restrain the Chicago School Board from carrying out its purpose. This step is taken probably because if children are furnished books free of cost, it will tempt Roman Catholic parents to send their children to the free schools instead of the parochial schools, else it will force the church to furnish the parochial schools with free books, which would be an additional burden.

Not being acquainted with the law, we can not say whether the Roman Catholics have any ground for asking a restraining order, or not; but looking at the matter from a common-sense standpoint, we are unable to see any ground save to carry out the purpose of the Board will either injure the parochial schools, or make it harder for the church to compete with the public schools. And certainly no intelligent and honest judge will take such reasons into consideration.

The public-school system of the country is strongly intrenched in the minds of the people, and they are not going to suffer anything or anybody to break it down or impair its usefulness. Our Roman Catholic friends had as well accept the situation, and make the best of it. They must be satisfied also to sustain their own church schools like Protestants do. The people are not going to vote them money to establish their schools.

If the public-school system is wrong, it has reached such a point that neither the Roman Catholic, nor any Protestant Church, can abolish it, or materially modify it. The best any of us can do is to keep the higher education of our sons and daughters under our own control. And this we must do, this we will do, unless the State so far outstrips us as to make higher education as cheap and as easily obtained as the primary and lower grades of learning. This the State will never do. Until that day "the fine Italian hand" of the Jesuit fathers had better be kept concealed.

TEMPERANCE SENTIMENT AMONG THE LEAGUERS.

Our Methodist young people seem fully imbued with the spirit of temperance, and have put themselves on record as in accord and sympathy with all reasonable and practicable methods of ridding our country from the awful curse of strong drink. At San Francisco the International Convention adopted the following resolution:

That we are as unalterably as ever opposed to the open saloon, the liquor traffic, and allied vices, and we mean to keep up our war upon this wicked business until our whole continent is freed from the dreadful curse. That we greatly rejoiced at the abolition of the canteen in our army, and deplore the fact that a persistent effort is being made to have it restored. Especially is this distressing to us when we note that Russia is protesting against the canteen, and that even France has prohibited it in her army camps. We earnestly hope that wiser counsels will prevail in free, Christian America; and to this end we will ever pray and fight.

When we consider that the Leaguers number about 2,000,000 strong, and are constantly growing in numbers, and that to them we must add the host of young Baptists who are as determinedly opposed to the vile business as our own young people, we see some hope for the future. If we do not utterly rout the enemy, we will check his ravages on the young life of our nation. And let all the people say, Amen!

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

The North Mississippi Conference, through the officers of the Conference Board, is being stirred on the subject of missions. The secretary, Rev. J. H. Shumaker, has prepared a valuable table showing the status of every charge in the Conference. He has also issued an appeal in the name of the Board to all the pastors. The Board calls for a missionary mass meeting in every Methodist Church in the Conference, and has prepared a suitable programme. These papers are being sent out broadcast. If any brother has failed to receive his share, let him write to Bro. Shumaker, at Kosciusko, Miss., and he will be supplied promptly and cheerfully. We confidently expect great results to follow.

THE ORDER OF WORSHIP.

The order of worship in our churches is plainly printed in our Discipline. It is there by authority. It is put there to secure uniformity, and thereby prevent confusion. Any well-informed Methodist knows the order—when to sit, when to stand, and when to kneel. But, if the preacher substitutes an order of his own, the best-informed members of his congregation will depend on him to tell them what to do. But why should a preacher, who has promised to keep our rules—not to mend them—violate his vow and introduce strange practices among us? It is not consistent, nor a sign of loyalty. Why will some of our preachers ask the congregation to stand and pray, and stand himself to lead? We have not so learned Methodism, and we deplore the fact that many of our young Methodists are being led astray.

A NEW DEPARTMENT.

In response to a call from several persons whose advice is worthy of consideration, we will open a department for Sunday-school workers. It will be under the supervision of Mr. N. A. Mott, of Natchez, Miss. He is an experienced Sunday-school man, and a lover of the cause. The work in that department will be opened next week. Persons interested, and who desire to contribute, will direct their favors to him. Do not send them to the editor.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. B. Clifford's family are summering at Seashore Camp Ground. He spends most of the week out there, and his Sundays in the city filling his pulpit.

Rev. Thos. Carter, professor in Tulane University, is now president of the Tri-State Epworth League. He is greatly interested in the work, and will give to it his best thought and energy. A better selection could not have been made.

A note from Dr. J. W. Malone, president of the Woman's College, Oxford, Miss., informs us that his sickness, to which we alluded a short time ago, was serious, but that he is now recovering, and hopes in a few days to resume his work.

Drs. H. W. Featherstun and H. B. Carre did some excellent work at the Tri-State Epworth League Conference. Their lectures indicated hard work and extensive research. They were much enjoyed by the Leaguers, and, we trust, will prove beneficial.

Rev. Jno. M. Moose, who some time since was appointed chaplain in the United States Army, has been assigned to a cavalry regiment in Havana, Cuba. He started to his post a few days since, and, doubtless, by this time is in the midst of his duties.

The spirit of consecration manifest in Brother Joe Ramsey, the ardent League worker, coupled with the spirit of humility, is good to behold, and has a fine influence over the young people. He is instrumental in lifting many to a higher and better life. May he live long!

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of Parker Memorial, was kindly remembered on his birthday. The membership contributed, and raised an amount of money sufficient to purchase a nice gold watch. They tendered him a reception, and in a formal way presented him the handsome time-piece.

Dr. Hoss and daughter, Miss Mary, left Nashville the last of July for Europe. They will spend August in visiting the different European cities, and reach London by Sept. 4, in time for the opening of the Ecumenical Conference, in which the Doctor will represent the Holston Conference.

A card from Rev. R. G. Porter informs us that Gov. Shands, on his way to the Ecumenical Conference, got as far as Philadelphia, when he was taken sick, and was compelled to abandon the trip, at least for the present. He is now at one of the Summer resorts. As it is near three weeks to the date of the Conference, we trust our brother will get well in time to answer to his name.

Bishop Galloway has held the Brazil Mission Conference, and reports success in the work for the year just closed. The prospects are bright. Five preachers were received on trial (natives, we suppose). The net gain in membership is nearly six hundred, with two hundred and fifty candidates ready to be received into full connection. A few more years, with no drawbacks, the Bishop says, "no more foreign missionaries will be needed in Brazil."

The Forest (Miss.) District Conference.

The Forest District Conference convened at Shiloh Church, Rankin county, Friday, July 19, at 8:30 A. M. The presiding elder, Rev. T. L. Mellen, was in the chair. Rev. B. F. Lewis and Rev. C. N. Guice were elected secretaries. All the pastors were present except three, with every local preacher save two; but quite a goodly number of lay members, with some of the local elders and local deacons, were absent.

The District Conference was preceded by a Preachers' Institute, which was interesting and profitable. Such questions as, "The Times and Teachings of the Gnostics," and "Revamped Antinomianism," were discussed. These subjects may seem dry at first glance, but as the preachers began to investigate, they discovered that we were fighting some of the same battles fought by the Apostle John before he wrote his Gospel, and only had to study the teachings of the "Fathers" to find unanswerable arguments against the unscriptural and fatal heresies of our day. Solomon said, "There is no new thing under the sun."

The statistical blanks sent out by the Publishing House were used; so we did not sit and listen to long, dry reports, but spent the time discussing the vital interests of the district, and in the reports of the several committees had the work of the entire field presented in a concise, tangible form.

Geo. W. Shearer, from the Carthage charge, was licensed to preach, and Rev. W. W. Murray, junior preacher on the same charge, was recommended for deacon's orders.

W. M. Thornton, P. L. Blackwell, J. A. Lindsay and W. W. Murray were elected delegates to the Annual Conference.

Lake, Walnut Grove and Morton charges reported improvements on their parsonage; Laurel, a new parsonage, with only a $400 debt, while Carthage and Neshoba report new churches built and in process of erection.

The most delightful feature of the Conference was the revival spirit which prevailed. Every preacher who preached aimed at conversions and sanctifications, and were not disappointed. There were between forty and fifty conversions, and two or three who professed to have been made perfect in love. Shiloh Church will remember the District Conference of 1901, not by the crowd of preachers and laymen, but by the revival. Good results are already being seen throughout the district from reports from the work.

The missionary campaign was provided for, and we trust for full collections. The next session of the Conference will be held at Vossburg.

Conference Endowment Fund.

MR. EDITOR: Though a close and interested reader of all that appears in the ADVOCATE, nothing has been written which, in my judgment, was more timely than the article in your issue, of July 11, from "Methodist." I ask for space to express my most hearty approval of the suggestion of the brother from Woodville that we need a plan for an increase of the Conference Endowment Fund.

I verily believe that there is no greater reproach to the people called Methodists than the parsimony with which we have given support to the noble men who have made Methodism illustrious in this and the last generation. Eternity alone can compute the debt we owe to them. But for their heroism and self-sacrifice, what would become of our itinerant system? And yet, notwithstanding its hardships, whom do we find most strenuously insisting upon its perpetuity but these same men upon whom the burden of the system most surely rests? The preacher can not plead his own cause. His life and his thought is of and for others, and not of and for self. But should he not be thought of? Should he not be provided for? Should he be permitted to spend these active and toilsome years of his noble life while no provision is being made for the time when his strength of body (and, perhaps, his mind, too) will no longer sustain him in active work? Does this speak well for the laymen of the church? Does it reflect honor upon those who have profited by the labors of these faithful men? What say you, Methodist laymen? What shall we say to the proposition? Do we need a plan for an increase in the endowment fund? That we need the fund, no one will deny. Then let us have a plan. Now, if fifty Methodist laymen would make five annual notes for one hundred dollars each, or if one hundred Methodist laymen would make as many notes for fifty dollars each for the same period of time, these notes to terminate by death or notice of inability to pay, we would, at the expiration of five years, have a fund of twenty-five thousand dollars.

I suggest this as a plan, and would thank some interested brother for a better one. If the brethren will agitate the matter, we can not fail of a plan and a fund. I suggest that there be a meeting of the subscribers to this fund at the approaching Annual Conference for the purpose of discussion of details and for active work. In the meantime, don't fail to discuss the matter. Let us hear from you through the ADVOCATE. If you haven't a plan, send in your subscription. Let us not be over-modest, but provoke one another to good works.

A Correction.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I wish to make a correction of my report of the number of enrollment of students in East Mississippi Female College. I understood that the number of enrollment was the total number of students that had entered school in all departments, counting no student twice. I see, however, from the catalogues of some of our colleges that the total enrollment is found by adding together all the students in each department, counting each student as many times as her name appears in different departments. That is, if she takes the literary course—music, art, and elocution—she counts as four students in the total enrollment.

According to this way of counting our total enrollment reaches 771 instead of 381, as reported in the ADVOCATE some time ago. We have 381 students enrolled, not counting any twice; but the sum total in all departments is 771.

Montrose High School.

Greatly to our regret and over our protest, the Rev. W. W. Holmes, A. B., has resigned the principalship of our District High School, Montrose, Jasper county, Miss., to which he had been elected by us, the trustees, on his own application, to accept the pastorate of the West End, Meridian, charge, made vacant by the death of the Rev. W. M. Stevens, and tendered Bro. Holmes by the presiding elder of that district. We need a principal. A married man, a college graduate, is preferred, who must also be a member of the M. E. Church, South, and who has had some experience as a teacher. There were 125 students last year. The principal takes the school on its merits. Session begins Monday, Sept. 2; closes Friday, May 9.

Mississippi Conference Twentieth Century Fund.

The pastors will bear in mind during the year that by action of the last Annual Conference, "Twentieth Century Fund" is to be made a separate item in filling out the financial page of the Pastor's Report for 1901. If it had been thus also at each of the last two Conferences, there would have been great advantage.

If any of those who subscribed to this fund at Vicksburg have not yet sent the cash, or notes, to Major Millsaps, they should neglect it no longer. The Vicksburg list is in my hands.

Millwood Institute.

The advertisement of this institution appears in another column of this paper. Those desiring a thorough, home-like school for their daughters or wards could not do better than to commit them to the care of this institution, where earnest efforts are made to maintain a high standard of morality as well as intelligence.

Parents not favoring co-education, who have sons at Centenary College, would find Millwood a convenient school for daughters. The grounds of the two institutions are separated by the public road which marks the northern limit of Jackson.

The grade of Millwood Institute is higher than the ordinary female college. Pupils of this school who have grown impatient to leave school have found it possible to obtain diplomas from other accessible colleges two years earlier than at Millwood.

Musical advantages are exceptionally good, this department being conducted on the conservatory plan. Terms at this school are very reasonable.

HOW THE STORM WENT ROUND.

The big school room clock said ten minutes to nine one Monday morning. It was a dark day: a heavy gray fog blotted all the window-panes, and really seemed to have crept indoors and settled down on the spirits of the scholars who were gathering thick and fast.

Two small girls, standing below the row of pegs where hats and wraps were hung, were arguing with growing temper over the possession of one particular knob. Finally one of them snatched the other's jacket and flung it fiercely down on the floor.

"I was here first!" she stormed, "so you can just take your coat away. You shan't have my place!"

"Very well, Miss Katie Brown," answered the second little maid, marching off with her chin in the air. "When you get ready you can hang my coat up to suit yourself. I'm not going to touch it. I don't suppose Miss Wright will want it lying there all day, and you know what she always says about flinging things around."

Meantime, at the other end of the room, Herbert Decker, after rummaging two or three times through his desk and bookbag in a vain search, broke out fretfully:

"Just my luck! I've gone and forgot that old pencil again! I do believe a lead-pencil is the sneakingest thing on this earth; it's forever getting away from a fellow!"

"I guess your luck won't turn," said his brother Charley, "till you shorten your last morning nap a little and quit rushing everything through at the end at about ten times the proper speed."

"I didn't ask your opinion, thank you!" said Herbert. "When I wish to engage a private chaplain, I'll let you know. Say, Al Jones, will you lend me a pencil?"

"Not even of manners, do you?" retorted Herbert, snappishly.

Half-way toward the door two smaller boys were scuffling over an atlas; and across the aisle a little lame lad had just shaken his fist in the face of a neighbor whom he suspected of laughing at his infirmity.

Miss Wright, the young teacher, had been trying hard to shut her eyes to the brewing storm about her. She felt dull and out of sorts herself, and now, as she looked at the overcast faces in her school-room and remembered the long hours that stretched ahead, she heaved a long, deep, discouraged sigh.

Midway in the sigh the door once more opened and shut to let in a little rosy-cheeked girl wearing a plaid shawl over a much-darned frock. This was Minty Morris. None of the other girls wore a shawl and none of them had quite so many patches as she; but I doubt whether anybody had ever thought about that; certainly nobody minded.

Minty was smiling and breathless. "I ran all the way," she said, cheerfully. "Our clock is never exactly right. It's horrid hurrying so, but then it makes a nice relief for you when you find out you're in time, after all."

"Somebody's coat will get mussed," she said, hanging it up in place and straightening two or three hats on their pegs as she passed. Then she began to fumble in her dinner pail and presently drew out a splendid crimson apple. She looked at it admiringly while she polished it off on the end of her shawl until its smooth surface shone again. When she was fully satisfied that she had done her best to heighten its perfections, she started across to the corner where Larry Miles, the crippled boy, was still frowning tremendously over his grievance.

Since Minty came in there had been a lull in the angry talking, and the shuffling of feet on the school-room floor had stopped, so that now when she spoke, quiet as her voice was, everybody heard.

"Larry," she said, smiling and dimpling in irresistible friendliness, "here's a present for you: Grandpa brought us some of these on Saturday, and I saved a nice one just for you. Don't you like this kind?"

As if Larry didn't like all kinds! And as if Grandpa Morris had brought so many apples that "one," more or less, did not count!

I think that every mind in the listening school-room traveled to the little tin pail on Minty's desk and remembered how seldom it was that anything like a luxury was brought to light from under its cover.

Suddenly one of the small boys took his hand away from the disputed atlas.

"You can have it," he said. "I don't care."

"I guess this was too long for comfort; and, anyhow, it's a pity if there isn't some way to get the best of circumstances."

The boy who had roused Larry's wrath leaned over a seat or two to speak to him.

"What are you mad at me about, old man?" he demanded. "I was just laughing at the face Katie Brown was making. If you want to fight me for that, all right. But I think we'd better shake hands and be friends."

Katie Brown stirred uneasily for a time; then she peeped over her shoulder at the neighbor whose coat she had maltreated, and finally she turned around and said shyly:

"My Aunt Mary is going to Europe; did you know it?"

And so it seemed as though the fog and gloom that had threatened, crept off under the door and through the cracks of the windows to join the gray March storm outside.

"Dear little Minty!" said Miss Wright, looking over at the desk where Minty, with her tongue thrust into her cheek and a studious frown on her face, was "doing examples" with all her might. "Dear little girl! She doesn't know how much she has helped us all; and just by being sweet and kind and contented."—St. Nicholas.

A PLUCKY BOY.

It is said that "nerve" and Chicago are synonymous terms. Here is a story which has just reached New Orleans, says the Times-Democrat, which proves the truth of the idea, and which goes to show a Chicagoan develops his nerve early..

Everybody knows Marshall Field, the multi-millionaire—the man who gave a million dollars to a museum. Everybody has heard of his big store. In this store there is a cash boy who is earning more money than his confreres, and the story tells how he earned the raise. The regular salary of a cash boy is $3 a week. The youngster in question thought he was worth more, and hunted up the manager to tell him so.

"I would like to get a raise," said the boy; "I think I ought to have it."

"My boy," said the manager, "you are making just what is given all the cash boys, and I don't see how I can accommodate you."

"I know," retorted the dauntless youth, "but my mother is a widow and she has five children. I can't afford to work for $3."

The boy's assurance amused the manager, who, jokingly, advised him to see Mr. Field. Now, Mr. Field's visits to his store are few and far between. He is rich enough to be above the details of business, and when he entered the store an hour or so after the conversation between the manager and cash boy, his coming was in the nature of an event. The boy heard of his arrival, and at once headed for the millionaire proprietor. Watching his chance, he slipped upon the magnate, and said:

"Are you Mr. Field?"

"I am, my son. What can I do for you?"

"You can raise my salary, please. I can't work any longer for $3 a week."

"I don't attend to these matters. You will have to see the manager."

"I have already seen the manager, sir, and he referred me to you."

The boy's manner impressed the millionaire, and he said: "My boy, you are making $3 a week. That is a pretty good salary for a youngster. It is more than I was making when I was your age."

"Well," said the boy, quick as a flash, "maybe you weren't worth any more."

Mr. Field laughed. Then he saw the manager. "That boy," he declared, "has too much pluck and wit to work for $3."

The next week the juvenile hero of this tale drew $4, and promotion isn't far off.

DICK, THE ENGINEER'S CAT THAT SAVED THE TRAIN.

A father and little son were traveling from Saint Louis to a town in the western part of the State, and among the things they carried was a small yellow kitten in a basket.

They had a sixty-mile ride before they changed cars. The gentleman pulled out a newspaper and began reading. The little boy amused himself by looking out of the window. At last, tired of that, he thought of his pet kitten, and taking him out of the basket, played with him until he went off to sleep. The kitten, being left alone, climbed into the next seat and went to sleep.

The train arrived at the station where the man and little boy were to change cars. And the man, folding up his newspaper, took the little boy and his bundles and the empty basket and rushed into the other train. The boy had been awakened so quickly that he had not thought of his kitten.

The first train passed on. At night, when it drew up to its final station, the conductor went through the train and found the little yellow kitten asleep on one of the seats. He carried it to the fireman, who was fond of cats. The fireman fed the kitten and put him in the baggage car for the night.

When the train went out the next day the kitten, which the fireman called Dick, went with it. Dick rode in the baggage car for a week or so, when his master took him on the engine with him one day. Dick was quite frightened at first, but soon got over it, and always rode on the engine after that.

One thing very much frightened Dick—that was when he heard another train coming. He would crouch on the floor of the cab at his master's feet, and would remain so until the other train passed. His master had tried in vain to break him of this.

A year passed and Dick was on the same engine with his master, who had been promoted to be an engineer. Dick still appeared frightened at hearing another train.

One day, while running in the western part of Missouri, a severe snowstorm came up. They reached one station at 4:30 in the afternoon, and a freight was due about the same time. They waited fifteen minutes for the freight, and then the conductor decided to go on to the next station, ten miles beyond. So he telegraphed to the next station to keep the freight until he reached there; and, receiving no message back that the freight had left that station, he thought it all right, and Dick's train started. They had gone about five miles, when Dick suddenly raised his head, listened for a moment, and then jumped to the floor and crouched at his master's feet. The engineer knew that Dick had heard a train. Then it flashed into his mind that perhaps it was the freight. He reached his head out of the cab window and listened, but he could hear nothing but the wind. He had so great confidence, nevertheless, in Dick that he signaled for the conductor. The conductor came and inquired the matter, and when the engineer told him how Dick had acted, he advised the engineer to back the train to the last station. The engineer lost no time in taking the conductor's advice, and backed the train at full speed.

They had been in the station about five minutes when in came the tardy freight. They were all agreed that it had been a narrow escape from a serious accident. When Dick's train arrived at the next station they asked why they had not telegraphed back that the freight had already started. The station agent said that he had received no message from the conductor at all. The next day the wires were found broken, so that the station agent had not received the dispatch.

Dick received due praise. His master is very proud of him, and he is a general favorite on that railroad.—Our Dumb Animals.

That Daughter of Yours.

She has been everything to you, and has never cost you a single tear. What are you going to do for her? Surely, she deserves the best educational advantages you could possibly give her. Why should you send her to an inferior or ephemeral school? Is it wise to make experiments in a matter of such vital importance? Why not send her to a thoroughly established and well-endowed college? Such an institution is Shorter College, at Rome, Ga. The climate is ideal, the students are from the best families of the South, the curriculum is scholarly and rational, the moral and social atmosphere is all that could possibly be desired. President Simmons is always glad to send announcements to those interested in college education.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities, and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

AT EASE IN ZION.

Many professing Christians have never seen the need of being up and doing. They do not wish to hinder the good work, but they have never heard a voice calling them to noble deeds. They are at ease because they have not opened their eyes to witness the scenes which would arouse them to worthy effort and achievment. A lady who lived in a town where many men were employed in lumber mills once said to a Christian physician: "I do not think the Christian religion is suited to me. I can not understand its mysteries. I should like to be better and do better, if it is my duty. What shall I do?" His answer was: "Never mind the mysteries or the difficult doctrines, but go out among the poor and look for the family coat is most needy. No matter how difficult it may be, go and find the most miserable case in the town, and report to us next Sunday." She went, and came saying: "I have found a family starving in dur midst. The husband and father is a drunkard, and has been sent to the workhouse, and the children have no bread." Her heart was full; her zeal was kindled; her life was changed. She had seen the need and heard the call. Let others do likewise. The need, both temporal and spiritual, is at our doors, and yet we are at ease because we have not searched it out.

Others are at ease in Zion because they are living in worldly luxury and pleasure. They have been lulled to sleep as by an opiate. It is a sad thing that in proportion as the church prospers financially the people become indolent spiritually. When the church is poor and weak and persecuted those who profess to know God are, as a rule, diligent in the business of the Lord, as well as fervent in spirit. But when the church grows strong and rich a strange spell comes over it. On every side there are men and women at ease in Zion. It was so when the prophet wrote, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." They trusted in the mountains of Samaria. They were men "that lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; that chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David; that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph." Poverty, affliction and persecution have their advantages as well as disadvantages.

At the bottom of all spiritual slothfulness is spiritual destitution. Whatever may be the occasion, those who are at ease in Zion have lost the gift of the Holy Ghost. Whoever is baptized with the Holy Ghost is baptized with fire. Religious denominations which discard the person and work of the Holy Spirit are not aggressive. With all their culture and wealth they are at ease in Zion. They do not grow. They can not propagate the faith and the life of Christ, because they have not received the Holy Ghost. On the other hand, weak religious bodies that recognize the personality of the Holy Spirit, and rely on his inward working, are mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. Inferior they may be in education, in wealth, in social influence, but they are irresistible in their aggressive movements. They are not at ease in Zion.

It is a time when we should take heed to our anointing. Wonderful opportunities beckon us on. Tremendous responsibilities press upon us. We have come to the kingdom in an important time and for a grand mission. But we are falling asleep, or have been doing so in the recent past. Awake, O Zion! Put on thy beautiful garments! Arm of the Lord, awake! —Christian Advocate (N. Y.).

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

At Basin, Miss., on June 11, Mrs. MOLLIE HELVERSTON passed from earthly scenes to her eternal reward. At the age of eleven years she joined the M. E. Church, South, and ever after, until the hour of death, lived a consistent and exemplary life. She was only a little past thirty-six years of age; still she had endeared herself to a large circle of friends on account of the beauty and nobility of her character. As a wife, mother, and friend, she was affectionate, gentle, and sympathetic. She bore all the vicissitudes of life with a patience that was only equaled by her piety. Four children preceded her to the land of the blest; an afflicted husband and eight children are left to mourn her departure. Her last illness was of short duration, and serious from the first, and though conscious of her approaching end, she was "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust" in Christ as her Savior, and bade farewell to the world by saying, "I have made peace with the Lord, and all is well with me." May heaven's benedictions rest upon the sorrowing ones, and may they all live so as to meet her in the beautiful beyond! is the prayer of their former pastor.

J. W. C.

JOHN FORST was born in Henderson county, Tenn., Nov. 16, 1832, and moved with his parents to Lafayette county, Miss., when eight years of age. He was converted at the age of eighteen years, and joined the M. E. Church, South. He departed this life at his home near Burgess, Miss., May 29, 1901. Bro. Forst was well and favorably known to the county in which he lived. He was an old-time Methodist; he loved his church and his preachers. The writer has been his pastor for two years. His home was ever open to the preacher. He lived a consecrated life, and lived to see all his children grown and in the church. To know Bro. Forst was to love him. Children would gather around him to hear him talk. He said to the writer one year ago he was worn out, and was living for others. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss. A more gentle and affectionate man I have not known. His end was peace, and he was laid to rest in the cemetery at old Midway Church, Oxford circuit, to await the resurrection morning. Thanks be unto God.

J. A. GOAD.

MRS. MILDRED E. MIXON, wife of Millard F. Mixon, was born in Pike county, Miss., Dec. 17, 1855, and died July 13, 1901. She joined the Methodist Church about thirty years ago, and was a consistent member till death. She leaves a husband, two sons and a daughter to mourn her departure. From childhood she had a kind and friendly disposition, which led those who knew her best to view her as a good girl, and she maintained and nurtured that sweet spirit in her womanhood. The writer has no information as to the particulars of the close of her earthly career, but would join with those who knew and loved her in cherishing the memory of her beautiful life.

J. W. SANDELL.

MRS. FLORENCE C. THOMPSON (nee Hall) was born in Dyer county, Tenn., March 9, 1869, and died July 16, 1901, at Fordoche, La. Sister Thompson was married to W. W. Thompson in Lauderdale county, Tenn., Dec. 28, 1886, with whom she lived till her death. Her membership was at Yazoo City, Miss., M. E. Church, South. She was of Methodist parentage, and leaves two bright children of the ages of ten and fourteen years. We laid her to rest in the Cotton Wood Graveyard. May God bless the sorrowing husband and loved ones!

"Never tell anyone what you are going to do until you have done it," said Cornelius Vanderbilt. The man who would succeed in business must keep his affairs to himself. Vanderbilt declared that he owed his fortune to this rule, together with the following maxims: "Never sell short." "I hide my time." "Never sell what you haven't got." You will notice that great business men don't tell the secrets of their business. Men who do this often give their competitors a chance to ruin them. Great men of affairs, as a rule, are close-mouthed. The man who is always telling his secrets freely, rarely has the full confidence of the community in which he lives. It is the men who think a great deal and talk little, men of action and few words, who are entrusted with great responsibilities. It is said that Washington was once asked by an officer, on the morning of a battle, what his plans were. He asked, in a whisper, "Can you keep a secret?" "Yes," said the interrogating party. "So can I," the general added.—Exchange.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Preach the great truths of the Word. These speak to the depths of the heart, and fit themselves into the whole life. We recently heard a teacher of a large Bible class say that he was amazed at the hunger of soul there is to hear the teachings of the Bible in relation to sin and redemption, grace and eternal life. It is quite possible that in our preaching we discuss general themes too much, and do not meet the real needs of our people. This was one part of the secret of Christ's power in his preaching; his plain and simple words went to the hearts of those who heard him. They felt that he was speaking to them, and that he knew all that was in their hearts. The Pharisees were angry, for they perceived that he was speaking to them; the outcast and shunned felt that he was speaking to them, and came and bathed his feet with their tears. —United Presbyterian.

GROCERY MONEY SAVED

Hundreds of housewives are glad they sent for King's Price List. They're saving money every week. You might just as well be saving, too.

Happy old age

Many women who have enjoyed good health until their life began to fade when they reach the age of forty-four. They grow nervous and irritable and suffer with sick-headaches. Their livers are torpid, their digestion is impaired and their bowels are irregular. They are experiencing the "change of life." And it is not strange that the cessation of the menstrual habit after thirty years operation should disturb the system and tax the strongest constitution. This trying period has no terror for a woman who uses Wine of Cardui. It builds up her strength and prepares her for the ordeal. When the change of life is not safely passed, a woman quickly becomes an invalid. Slumbering disease germs are given increased activity and they appear in aggravated form. If you take Wine of Cardui regularly when approaching the change of life you will be assured better health than you have ever enjoyed before. A happy old age and restful calm will be your reward. Mrs. Campbell was cured after suffering three years with "change of life." Thedford's Black-Draught, the companion medicine of Wine of Cardui, assimilates with it perfectly, curing digestive, liver and kidney affections, and throwing impurities and disease germs out of the system. Both working together make a well and happy woman.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

I have recommended your Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught to several of my lady friends, and I can say they are what you recommend them to be. I have been suffering three years with the "change of life," and I did not get anything that would do me any good until I tried your medicines. I give thanks to Wine of Cardui and you, for it relieved me. Mrs. D. H. CAMPBELL.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest standards for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses.

One of the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent with the renowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg, one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as its Director and with no teacher in it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country, has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every Department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent four-story brick building recently named by the Trustees "Roberts Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and all filled eight large Lecture Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible, as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is expected that the protocol will be signed by the ministers at Peking within three weeks.

The British House of Commons is holding all-night sessions in order to expedite public business.

Postmaster Baldwin has announced that shortly electric cars would be used in distributing the mails.

The Fresh Air Fund, subscribed by persons in all walks of life to give the children of the poor an outing, has reached the sum of $1120.

President Castro of Venezuela has notified the Venezuelan consul general at New York that the second Colombian invasion has been defeated.

The great steel strike is on in earnest. Thousands of workmen went out in obedience to President Shaffer's strike order. The United Mine Workers of America recognized the steel strike.

Gov. Longino, Judge Stevens and Judge Neville held a conference at Jackson, Miss., regarding the calling of a special term of the Circuit Court of Carroll county to investigate the Carrollton lynchings.

It has developed that the attempt to blow up the British army transport "Mechanician" was made by floating a torpedo from a rope attached to the anchor chain. The police have not discovered the criminals.

Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, stated that the patience of the English people in regard to the South African war found no parallel in history, except in "the attitude of the North" in the Civil War in America.

Reports indicate that the situation in South Africa grows more discouraging for the British. The Boer generals are holding their own against the English. Lord Kitchener's "banishment" order was characterized in London as "another proof of dementia."

The struggle for mastery between manufacturers and men in the steel industry is now fairly launched, and on the first show of strength advantage is with the former. The general strike order issued by President Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association has so far been obeyed by only about 14,000 men, according to the best figures obtainable. The first two preliminary calls were answered by about 45,000 men, so that the total number now out is in the neighborhood of 60,000.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me. Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

A CHRISTIAN TRAINING SCHOOL for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this school the school for your daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights, water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "Thorough" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to patrons. Growth—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—79, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, seven; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. The methods and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

AND

OXFORD, MISS.

High in Grade, Thorough in Scholastic Requirement, and Pre-eminently Religious.

The buildings are excellent, thoroughly equipped and furnished. Modern conveniences, electric lights and waterworks. Large and well-trained Faculty. Advanced curriculum. RATES REASONABLE.

We claim that few schools, if any, in the South offer better advantages for a High Grade Academic and Collegiate Education. For Art, Elocution and Music we also claim equal advantages. Let those who want their daughters accomplished in Music send them to our Conservatory. The latest and best methods are used. New pianos for practice. Ensemble playing is given special prominence, and has awakened much interest in the Conservatory. The Virgil Practice Clavier used. Special instruction in technique given by accomplished teacher, free of charge. LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC ORCHESTRA.

Next Session Opens September 11th, 1901.

Oxford, the seat of THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE, is a school location second to none in the South in point of healthfulness and culture.

THE CROPS.

Much anxiety has been felt as to the condition of the crops on the storm-swept coast. Reports were sent out to the effect that in lower Louisiana and Mississippi the damage was extensive in sections, and the loss total in others. Later information shows that the reports were exaggerated, especially as to the rice and orange crops. The New Orleans Picayune has inquired carefully into the matter, and says, editorially, in its issue of Aug. 19: "The country in which the storm blew with the greatest violence is a rice district; hence it was not unnatural that the early reports declared that the crop would prove a total loss. As a matter of fact, it is probable that in only a very small district will the rice crop prove practically a complete loss. It is now evident that the extent of the damage will scarcely represent 25 per cent. of the area on the flooded lands. Outside of the small district where the storm was really severe practically no damage has been done; hence the effect of the storm on the rice crop of the State will be very trifling. With respect to cotton, the storm was without influence, except possibly to create rains where moisture was not needed. And it now appears that even the orange groves suffered less from the storm than might have been expected. The growing fruit was not blown from the trees by the wind to anything like the extent feared, and there is yet hope that a good crop will be made. Truck farms, of course, suffered severely wherever the sea water covered the land."

HAPPY KANSAS FARMERS.

The losses Kansas will sustain this Summer by reason of the drought are offset materially both by the great wheat crop, whose average quality is reported the best ever produced in the State, and by the large quantities of corn on hand. The average value of corn, oats and hay crops in the last ten years has been about $60,000,000. It is probable that it will not exceed half the sum this year, which would make the loss in these crops about $30,000,000, compared with an average year. On the other side of the ledger is the high price of all farm products, which will measurably compensate for the small crops. These figures indicate how greatly the sufferings of Kansas farmers in the corn belt have been exaggerated by the estimates sent out from Chicago, which put the total loss to the State by the dry season at $100,000,000. Kansas has been so notoriously prosperous in crops that a few droughty weeks create a sensation in the land.—Topeka Capital.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

The following items in regard to immigration, from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, will be read with interest: "The Treasury Department has completed the immigration statistics for the year ending June 30, 1901. They show, as expected, the largest immigration since 1893, the year of the panic. This alone would be proof of the prosperity of the country just now, for our immigration goes up in prosperous years, and decreases during periods of hard times. For the last twelve months it amounts to 487,918, against 448,722 for the previous year, and 229,299 in 1898, the smallest immigration for twenty-two years. It has not yet recovered from the effects of the panic, and the arrivals are still fewer than in 1892, when they numbered 623,084, or 1893, when they amounted to 502,917. Then came the panic, and there was a sudden check to immigration."

MISSIONS IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

BY REV. M. M. BLACK.

History contains nothing more marvelous than the story of the conquests of Christianity during the first three centuries of its existence. Starting with a mere handful of obscure and despised Jews who were persecuted by their own countrymen, the blessed contagion spread rapidly from city to city, from country to country, from shore to shore, in spite of the bitterest prejudice and the most violent persecution, until shortly after the beginning of the fourth century, or in the year 313 A. D., it was lifted, as it were, from the dungeon to the throne, and became the established religion of the great Roman Empire, then the proud mistress of the world. What mighty conflicts, what dark scenes, what frightful persecutions intervened between the glorious Day of Pentecost and the day when Constantine the Great, beholding a luminous cross in the sky bearing the inscription, "By this conquer," became a convert to Christianity, and had the cross emblazoned on the imperial banner and stamped on the soldiers' shields.

It is well-nigh certain that by the end of the first century of the Christian era the gospel had been preached in every province of the Roman Empire, and that even beyond its confines many converts had been gained. Luke's account of the work of the apostles and their associates makes it evident that during the apostolic age the church grew marvelously, and that even before the death of the Apostle Paul the gospel had been firmly planted in nearly every leading city of the Roman Empire. Perhaps the most remarkable statement made by St. Paul regarding the wide extension of the gospel is found in his letter to the Colossians, "to whom," he declares, "the gospel is come, as it is in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you." Nor is there any good reason for affirming this to be an exaggeration. Clement of Rome, writing about the year A. D. 96, asserts that "St. Paul reached the furthest bounds of the West," and so it is extremely probable that he made his long-desired journey into Spain.

The well-known Roman writer, Pliny (the younger), while proconsul of the remote province of Bithynia, wrote a letter to the Emperor Trajan, dated 112 A. D., in which he reported that the superstitious contagion of Christianity had spread not only to the cities and villages, but also to the rural districts, mentioning also that the pagan worship had been interrupted, and that the temples were almost deserted. So wonderful had been the progress of Christianity that Tertullian, who lived to the dawn of the third century, could well say: "We are but of yesterday, and we have filled all that belongs to you—the cities, the fortresses, the free towns, the very camps, the palace, the senate, the forum; we leave to you the temples only."

When the church first went forth on her benign and heavenly mission, the whole world was enshrouded in the most distressing moral darkness. Every land was cursed with idolatry and superstition, while the most horrible vices were practiced unrebuked. All classes, except the Jews, took an insane delight in gladiatorial combats, in the bloody and corrupting shows of the amphitheatre. Gibbon asserts that fully one-half the population of the Empire were in slavery; nor is it possible for us to conceive how grievous was the suffering and how manifold were the woes that then followed in the train of servitude.

The new religion, too, was everywhere looked upon with suspicion, and because of its antagonism to ancient rites and customs, it soon began to be regarded both by Jews and Gentiles as dangerous to society and to the State. As Uhlhorn says in his able treatise on "The Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism:" "Never in the whole course of human history have two so unequal powers stood opposed to each other as ancient heathenism and early Christianity—the Roman State and the Christian Church."

What, we ask, was the secret of the phenomenal spread of early Christianity? How came it about that though everywhere under the ban, the gospel in apostolic times made its way so amazingly?

1. Foremost among the causes that contributed to the rapid dissemination of the gospel in the early days was the flaming missionary zeal of the disciples of our Lord. They, one and all, felt it their duty to preach the gospel to every creature, and to do their utmost to extend the Master's kingdom. They were filled and thrilled with a holy ambition to take the world for Christ. The most distinguishing characteristic of the early church was its intense missionary spirit, and as Mr. John R. Mott has well said, "The first generation of Christians did more to accomplish the evangelization of the accessible world than has any succeeding generation." "The leaders of the church," he further remarks, "seem to have had the definite aim to get the gospel preached as widely as possible within their day."

Nor was the work of evangelization confined to the apostles and teachers, but was shared in by all classes, women as well as men having a part therein. It is a remarkable fact that while only three apostles are mentioned in Acts after the Day of Pentecost, not less than five laymen achieved eminence in evangelistic enterprise. Luke tells us that when Saul began to persecute the church at Jerusalem, after the martyrdom of Stephen, "the disciples that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." The historian, Gibbon, assigns as the chief reason for the rapid extension of Christianity the fact that "it became the most sacred duty of a new convert to diffuse among his friends the inestimable blessing he had received.' Would to God that every professed disciple of our Lord to-day felt the same sacred obligation resting upon him, the same holy fire burning within! Taking the church as we find it, scarcely one in twenty of her membership manifests any deep concern for the salvation of others, or is willing to bear testimony in public or in private to the grace of Christ.

In the apostolic age almost as much was accomplished through personal effort in private as through the public proclamation of the gospel. Slaves and artisans, as they toiled, would tell their companions the simple story of the cross, and exhort them to accept Jesus as their Lord. Wives and mothers would tell their children the same sweet story, and thus, in many instances, whole families were brought to Christ. Says Prof. McGiffert, "It was through this quiet hand-to-hand work that he [St. Paul] accomplished most, and not through public preaching, whether in synagogue or elsewhere." Eusebius, in writing of the Christians of the second century, says that "they distributed their goods among the necessitous believers, and quitting their own country, went forth into distant lands to propagate the gospel."

2. The quenchless zeal of the early Christians would have profited little in the extension of Christ's kingdom had it not been for their mighty and constant reliance upon the agency of the Holy Spirit, who prepared the way before them; who, with unerring wisdom, directed their plans, and who, by his divine power, equipped them for service. The fact is, the apostles and their co-workers were filled with an enthusiasm that caused them to turn the world upside down, because they were "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." So prominent is the place given in the Acts of the Apostles to the ministry of the Spirit that it might well be styled the "Acts of the Holy Spirit." Those who took the lead in Christian activity and in missionary enterprise are, without exception, spoken of as being filled or anointed with the Spirit. Stephen, the first martyr, who was one of the seven, is spoken of as a man "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." St. Paul's movements were time and again shaped by the Holy Spirit, who closed doors before him in one direction, but pointed to fields white unto the harvest in another.

If the church of to-day is to be invincible, if she is to succeed in her glorious mission of bringing the world to Christ, her sons and daughters must recognize that "it is not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord," that the victory over the powers of darkness is to be gained. One of the greatest needs of the church of the present is men and women who are "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost."

3. Another striking characteristic of early Christianity was its deep devotional spirit, its emphasis of the necessity and power of prayer. In no succeeding age of the church have prayer and supplication been given a larger place in connection with the work of evangelization. As Mr. John R. Mott tersely says in his book, "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation:" "The mighty display of power at Pentecost was ushered in by prayer. Workers were appointed only after prayer. When they were to be sent forth the church assembled for special prayer. The great foreign mission movement was inaugurated in prayer. If persecutions arose, the Christians met to pray. One of the two reasons for choosing deacons was that the apostles—the leaders of the church—might give themselves to prayer."

No one who reads the epistles of St. Paul carefully can fail to be impressed with the weighty importance he attaches to prayer as a source of spiritual strength, and as a means of advancing Christ's kingdom. He not only prayed daily for all the churches that he established, but also made request of them for prayer in his behalf, that hindrances might be removed and that utterance might be given him. Ought we not to follow the example of the Apostle Paul in this respect, and daily ask God to bless the work of our various missions and missionaries? Alas! how frequently our petitions relate exclusively to ourselves! There is an old Jewish proverb which says, "That is not prayer which contains no mention of the kingdom of God."

4. The heroic fidelity of the early Christians was another potent factor in the rapid propagation of the gospel in their day. While it is by no means true that all of them kept the faith, a large proportion remained steadfast in spite of the most violent persecutions. Since Jesus had suffered such deep shame and agony in their behalf, they shrank not from cruel crosses, from combats with wild beasts in the arena, from the most diabolical tortures. Yes, many "rejoiced to suffer shame for His name." The fiery persecutions that befell the primitive church, instead of retarding her progress, only served to propagate the truth more rapidly and plant it more firmly. The multitudes who witnessed the tragic death of the martyrs, as they beheld the joy depicted upon their faces, and as they heard their shouts of triumph, were brought to recognize the presence of a supernatural power, and many were so deeply impressed by the dying testimony of the saints that they, too, were led to believe on Christ. They felt that men and women who were willing to suffer the loss of all things for the gospel's sake must have obtained something of priceless worth.

Nothing is truer than that "the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the church," and that self-renunciation is the fundamental law of spiritual life and progress.

Thank God the old martyr spirit still survives! During the recent disturbances in China the native converts, almost to a man, remained loyal to Christ, and thousands chose to be cruelly massacred rather than renounce their faith in a crucified, but risen Savior.

The church has nothing to fear from the bitterest opposition on the outside, so long as her sons and daughters are fully on God's altar, ready to suffer or be used for his glory.

> "Hammer away, ye hostile bands!
> Your hammers break,
> God's anvil stands."

Never was there more pressing need than now of Christians who are willing to present themselves as living sacrifices to God. Our Lord is calling for disciples who are crucified unto the world, as were the saints of old, and who yield to him every power of mind and body, every possession and every ambition. May God give the church men and women who are not afraid of ridicule or of opposition, who love the truth far above rubies, and who, like Moses, would rather suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season!

TRI-STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The third session of the Tri-State has just been held on the Seashore Camp Grounds, Miss., opening on July 31 and closing Aug. 9. Leaguers were in attendance, representing Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee. Many of these are the leaders in League work in their respective States. The object aimed at by the officers of the Tri-State is to promote study of the Bible, and also methods of League work, instead of holding a popular Conference for the general discussion of League topics. The Institute idea was more perfectly and successfully carried out this year than at any previous session.

Rev. J. C. Park, the president, was prevented from attending by sickness in his family, and the government fell into the hands of Prof. Thos. Carter, whose wise planning, dauntless courage, and noble work carried the Conference to a successful end.

Bro. Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee, the blind lecturer, lay preacher, and intelligent and consecrated League worker, had charge of the Devotional Department in the School of Methods, the Quiet Hour services on the beach, and delivered several very entertaining and instructive lectures in his inimitable way of conveying deep truths in the vehicle of humorous anecdote. His wide experience in League and evangelistic work eminently fitted him for the department assigned him. His spiritual life and magnetic personality drew and impressed the entire body of Leaguers and the people summering on the grounds.

Dr. H. W. Featherstun had charge of the Literary Department, and was thoroughly prepared to solve problems and impart knowledge on this important subject. Each day's programme in his department had been mapped out and prepared long in advance, and indicated a master mind and a skillful hand. He occupied the platform on three occasions, lecturing on "Christ in the World's Thought." Each was a magnificent production, not only in comprehension and scholarly grasp of the subject, but also in clearness of thought, beauty of speech, and elegance of diction.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson did splendid work as conductor of the Missionary Department, in which he was assisted by a circle of experienced and gifted workers.

The missionary subject was viewed and discussed from several standpoints, and model missionary meetings were held each day.

A model missionary social was given on Wednesday evening. China was chosen as the subject, and the ladies taking part on the programme—about twenty in number—were dressed in Chinese costume. Red papers eighteen inches long, bearing Chinese characters, were issued as invitations, as is done in the far East, and tea and cakes were served as refreshments. A free-will offering was made for the Laura Haygood Memorial School, and an amount of $21.20 was realized.

Bro. Atkinson, being a pledged missionary himself, and having been a missionary campaigner, together with his executive ability and deep consecration, placed him upon a vantage-ground for this work, which few could have so well occupied.

Special emphasis is placed upon Bible study. This year Prof. Henry Beech Carre, whose training at Vanderbilt and European universities thoroughly equipped him for this special work, taught the class, following the historical line of study. Prof. Carre proved himself a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth."

A Personal Workers' Class was organized, and its members did personal, private, practical work. Mr. J. P. Jackson, secretary of Y. M. C. A. of New Orleans, addressed this class on "God's Messages to Men." His thirteen years of successful work among men enable him to speak with authority and power. He also gave an interesting lecture on "Work for Men," which was full of sound wisdom and practical thought.

The Junior League work was ably superintended by Miss May Mayo, of Baton Rouge, who is a prominent educator, an earnest Christian, and a fond lover of children. She conducted a special service for the children on Sunday afternoon, which was a model, and greatly enjoyed.

Misses Nattie Sutcliffe and Bessie Thomson had charge of the music. These talented Leaguers rendered faithful, cheerful, and acceptable service, and were ably assisted by a number of visiting musicians, vocal and instrumental.

A deep spiritual tone characterized and pervaded the Conference, and harmony of action, love of study, deep earnestness and consecration prevailed throughout.

Prof. Thos. Carter was elected president; Rev. J. F. Cumming, first vice-president; Prof. H. B. Carre, second vice-president; Dr. H. W. Featherstun, third vice-president; Miss Mary Belle Lewis, secretary; Mr. D. G. Pattor, treasurer. The following counselors were elected: Rev. C. D. Atkinson and Miss May Mayo, Louisiana; Rev. H. W. Van Hook and Miss C. S. Foose, Mississippi; Rev. W. P. Dickinson and Miss Makin, Alabama.

The above constitute the Executive Committee. They have already laid plans for the work next year, which promises to far surpass anything yet attempted.

What Our Editors Say.

THE SUNDAY PAPER.

One of the chief foes to the progress of Christianity is the Sunday paper as it is. Should a Sunday paper be published? is one question. Should such a paper as the Sunday paper now is, in size and in some particulars of character of contents, be read by Christians, or admitted to their families on Sunday? is another question. Are spiritual things of such a nature that no spiritual preparation is necessary for their reception and profitable consideration? Is the man who takes up the Sunday paper and divides it among the members of his family before or after his late breakfast acting in harmony with any known law of human nature of mind or heart, that is, if he wishes to derive spiritual benefit from the sanctuary? To fill the mind with business news, fashions, accounts of theatrical performances of the night before, scandal, party politics, comicalities, eccentricities and grave discussion—is this to prepare to draw near to God and seek the light of his countenance? Instead of this, such persons are doing what they can to deter themselves and others, especially young people, from attending church, or, if present in a body, to cause them to be absent in spirit. If persons were compelled to read the Sunday paper, and did it unwillingly, they might, indeed, go to the house of God, and by reaction be well prepared for worship; but if they read with avidity, they go there pre-occupied, pre-filled, and apathetic or antagonistic.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

THE BEST SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

One of our most gifted and observant Georgia preachers said in our presence a few days ago: "I have been about a good deal lately—more than usual for me—and one of the best signs of the times that I see is that our preachers in their preaching are getting down to bed rock." Our brother is right. Our observation directed with specific intent to discern the matter of our modern sermons confirms the brother's statement. Without the least disposition to an unjust accusation of the brethern, we say it is time for a change. We need to go back to the foundation of the prophets and apostles. We venture to suggest that in the campaigns of revival service that will engage our pastors for the next few weeks, they can do no better than to get down to this "bed rock." They can build on this foundation an enduring structure, one that will outlive the earth, be unshaken when the stars have gone out, and bright with earthly glory while our God endures. They can build such a structure on no other foundation. "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid—which is Jesus Christ." On this sure foundation it is wisest to trust the immortal interests of the soul.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

THE EXCHANGE OF BOOKS.

The interchange of books among Methodist ministers is a best civility. The loan of volumes of value to young preachers is a distinct gain to their pulpits. As a rule, these brethren can not at the start compass but a small library. Their education often has consumed their resources, and it is not unusual that they are in debt to a limited amount. It is not a pastime to discharge these obligations out of the revenue of a "hard scrabble" circuit or "a small station" where the proprieties require fairly good clothes, if not a gold headed cane, the cap plated perhaps with thin auriferous metal. It is a windfall to be neighbor to the pastor of a "first church" with a collection of superior books, if not surly, when admiration for a volume hints its loan. The lad on a city semi self-supporting mission, how he hungers for the shelves loaded with choice fruit in the "study" of the divines! It must be confessed that owners of superior treatises have been so often the victims of careless borrowers that they let the longing eyes leave the library ungratified. One unreliable borrower will do untold harm. One forgetful minister, retaining borrowed books, will set a dozen owners of libraries against favoring their brethren possessing a scanty assortment.—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Skeptical writers have much to say concerning the conflict between science and religion. There is no conflict. Not only are the domains of the two entirely different, faith supplementing knowledge, but even in the matter of knowledge, there is, or may be, complete accord when the facts are fully known. Time and again have the historical statements of the Old and New Testaments been attacked and on each occasion, opportune, one might say providential discoveries have shown the absolute truth of the Bible to sources of history not available at the time the attack was made.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

SELF-WORTHINESS.

Men must be their own judges at last, and there is the broad ground of deserts in the now and the hereafter. In the self-consciousness of every man are the law and the tribunal, beyond which there is not need of appeal. This fact gives scope to philosophy, and meaning to faith and the doctrines of conscience, self-approval, and remorse. Within each soul of man is an eternity of judgment and reward.—Epworth Era.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

"BAPTO" IN PROFANE LITERATURE.

"Cironit Rider" has studied Greek, but he disclaims being a scholar. However, acknowledged scholars have compiled and translated every sentence in Greek literature where "bapto" and "baptize" occur B. C., and even those who have no knowledge of the language can supply the sense intended, provided the other words of the sentence are translated. The connection and modifying words contribute towards the sense.

But many of the facts which make up these articles are based upon the statements of reputed scholars, and may be relied upon. As "bapto" is acknowledged by all to be the root of "baptizo," from which we get the word "baptize," and as many immersionists contend that the words are identical in meaning, attention is first called to "bapto" in its earliest known usage outside of the Bible. That will settle the primary meaning, Greek lexicons in placing dip, etc., first, notwithstanding.

Immersionists are very fond of appealing to many of the so-called standard lexicons, but scholars have shown, philologically and chronologically considered, that sprinkling is the primary meaning of the word from which dye, stain, color are derived, while dip is only a late meaning, and much later at that. In fact, no instance in classic literature has been produced in which "bapto" means immersion—i. e., to sink. If it be asked how it is that the first Greek lexicons on "bapto" give dip (which has been mistaken for its primary meaning), we reply:

1. Many of the lexicons were made while immersion was the enforced law of the land, affusion only being allowed when parties were too sick to admit of dipping.

2. They were all based on immersion sources and under its influence.

3. The lexicons simply give the current meaning, and not the primary.

"The first citation Stephanus gives is Aristus, seven hundred years later than its first occurrence in Greek; four centuries later than we meet it in other writers than Homer. If it be contended that such lexicographers were discussing primaries, it destroys their merit utterly as witnesses."

Even many immersionists who have written on baptism paid no attention at all to dates—i. e., they were not quoted chronologically, or in the successive order in which they wrote. Such methods pursued, and the mistaken idea that the lexicons were discussing primaries, account for the erroneous opinion more or less current that immersion is the primary meaning of the word "baptize" in classic literature.

It is but just, however, that the statement be made that several of the more reliable lexicons correctly give as the primary meanings of "bapto," "to stain, dye, sprinkle."

But attention is called to the earliest known passage itself in which the word occurs. As Dr. Carson says, lexicons "are not an ultimate authority. . . . The meaning of a word must ultimately be determined by an actual inspection of the passage in which it occurs." If the statement by lexicographers do not concur with the usage of the word in the earliest passages themselves, their testimony can not be accepted as reliable. Homer (B. C. 1 000 years) is the first writer known to use the word. Of a frog pierced and slain in battle he says, "He fell without even looking upward, and the lake (chapleto) was tinged with blood."

It is not necessary to be a Greek scholar to decide the manner of the lake's baptism. None but those whose heads are full of water, and deeply steeped in immersion prejudice, would translate the word "immerse." To say the lake was immersed, or dipped, with the blood of the frog would be a metaphor or letter, absurd and unknown to rhetoric. "Cironit Rider" is willing to travel many miles to see the performance repeated. The truth is, the effusion of small drops of blood from the veins of the frog baptized the lake. The mode of the baptism was sprinkling, or its equivalent. The result was tinging; tinging by sprinkling.

Now, if, as Dr. Carson says, the passage itself in which the word is used must determine its primary meaning, what is the testimony of this, the first one on record, and as used by Homer?

Other passages could be quoted from the next earliest writers to Homer, proving that sprinkling is the primary meaning of "bapto," but a limited space forbids.

It was many years afterwards that dip came to be a derived meaning of "bapto," as, for instance, when the process of dying by dipping was discovered. From Homer till the birth of Christ, through a period of one thousand years, no instance has been found in which "bapto" means immersion. The earliest fathers of the church, many of whom were learned Greek scholars, translated "bapto" by sprinkle.

SANCTIFICATION—WHAT IT IS, AND HOW OBTAINED.

BY PRESIDENT J. W. BEESON.

There is in the heart of every truly regenerate child of God, who is living up to his light, a longing for something he has not; a reaching out after some experience or state he has never received. This is true with every justified child of God, whether he realizes it or not; and if he will get still before God and examine his heart, he will find it to be true. Moreover, the closer one lives to God, the truer he is in his justified life; the greater is his desire or longing for another experience.

It is often noticed that the very best people in the community are the ones that enter this experience first. This is according to God's plan, for those who are closest to him long most to know more of him and are ready to receive him as their indwelling Savior. "There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God." (Heb. iv, 9.) "Let us, therefore, fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." (Heb. iv, 1.)

There is many a longing, hungry soul—God's chosen ones—all over this land feeling out after God, if haply he might find him in this new experience. Many a one has sought him in an indefinite way for years, knowing his poor heart was hungry for something, but not knowing what it is, nor how to find it. He attends faithfully all religious services; would go a long way to be at a protracted meeting, thinking that these will bring the desired relief: and really he does enjoy these services, and receives much good in them, obtaining "many blessings," as he can attest; but he does not get permanent help; the craving of the soul is not satisfied. He receives blessings, but the Blesser has not come into his heart to abide. Oh, if he only had some one to tell him of this highway, the way of holiness. (Isa. xxxv, 8.) He may have heard of "holiness" or "sanctification," but only in connection with "cranks," "fanatics"—a despised sect that are to be discouraged and avoided as heretics. He did not know he was fighting the very thing his soul was hungering for. Finally, the Lord, through some of his many providences, convicts him of inbred sin, carnal mind (Rom. v, 8; I. Cor. iii, 4), the old man (Rom. vi, 6). He, for the first time in life, realizes that the old tendency to evil can be taken out; that old something within him that made him do wrong when he intended to do right; makes him get angry, speak the quick word, or in some other way trip him in an unguarded moment, can be taken out; that proneness to wander can be replaced by a constant, overflowing joy (I. Cor. i, 4); a perfect peace that passeth all understanding (Phil. iv, 7); that hunger can be satisfied (Matt. v, 6); that thirst can be quenched (John iv, 14); that unrest of soul can find perfect rest (Matt. xi, 29).

What humility! what helplessness comes over the soul of the true child of God when it wakes up to realize that there is an enemy within the heart—the greatest that anyone can have—and that this enemy can be cast out—yes, killed (Rom. vi, 6; Gal. ii, 20)—not simply "kept under," as we have to keep under the natural appetites. The hungering for God is now greater than ever before. People have been known to travel hundreds of miles in ox wagons in the hot Summer to attend a holiness meeting for no other purpose then to obtain heart purity, entire sanctification, rest of soul; to get rid of this great load within, not of sins committed (they have been forgiven of sins), but of something that makes them sin; that they have been carrying for years; that old sinful nature, that bad disposition, inherited evil appetite, sinful temper that they thought they could not get rid of till they came to the river of death.

How may this pearl of great price be obtained? How may one get rid of the sinful nature, the remains of sin, that inherited depravity, and receive in its place the Holy Ghost (Acts xix, 2; Acts ii, 4), the abiding Comforter, the Blesser Himself, who is always present, giving rest, peace and joy even amidst sorrows? This has been the question of the ages among the honest-seeking hearts. Some have tried to get rid of the old man by works, come by doing penance, others in other ways; yet many in all ages, all churches, and some few chosen ones in almost all communities, have found the true way which is open to all; yet it is difficult to tell how to find it, because it is a spiritual way, and can not be intellectually discerned. As one who lives close to God aptly says, "You must lay down your head, and go at God with your heart, and you will find him." One says, "I will never lay down my head." Then you will never find him, if you expect to reason out this experience, or even to understand it.

In seeking this experience, you must first be sure that you are right with God in your regenerate life. You must be truly justified; know that your sins are forgiven, and that you are at peace with God, doing your duty as a child of God. If you are a backslider, or leaving undone known duties, first get right with God, take up your cross and follow him, and he will give you more light. Then you must want this blessing, rather the Blesser, the indwelling Christ, as a sanctifier, more than you want anything else on earth, for it takes all the world to get him. He that found a treasure hid in a field sold all that he had, and went and bought this treasure. He gave all he had, but did not give too much. It was the best trade he ever made. You must "cell out to God," surrender to him, tell him from the bottom of your heart that you will go where he wants you to go, say what he wants you to say, do what he wants you to do, be what he wants you to be. Say "Yes" to every gentle whisper of his Spirit; put your whole life in his hands—possessions, time, talent, ambitions, all you are or hope to be, all you know and all you don't know. Put all on the alter, Christ Jesus, for time and eternity. (Heb. xiii, 10 13; Rom. xii, 1.) Then believe that God does what he says he will do. (Ex. xxix, 37; Matt. xxiii, 19.) It is his will (I. Thess. iv, 3); it is his command (Lev. xx, 7, 8). If you have done your part, believe that he does his (I. John v, 14-15; Mark xi, 24); then confess that he has done his work (Rom. x, 10). Shall I testify that he does the work even before I receive the witness of the Spirit to my sanctification? Yes, accept him as your sanctifier, believe that he has cleansed the heart, and has come in, and begin to act as if he has, even though you have no feeling on the subject, and by and by the realization will come. Don't dictate as to how the witness shall come. Remember that the "feeling" is not a part of the work, but is only a consequence that may come sooner or later. If it does come, it is only "thrown in for good measure." You find no promise in the Bible for feeling. You may have more feeling than you can contain. Some do; but you must not seek another's experience. The realization may come like a flash of lightning, or it may come like the rising of the sun; it may come like a mighty storm, almost sweeping you off your feet, or it may come like a gentle zephyr, softly fanning your soul into a flame; it may be a sudden knowledge that Christ is within, almost taking your breath away, or it may be a gradual settling down of the soul, a restful, quiet feeling; the load all gone and the Comforter within. No more battles within the heart. The fight will still continue with increased vigor, but it is all on the outside. Things will go wrong more than ever; the testings will be greater, the temptations more severe. You will not be perfect, except perfect in love. You will still make mistakes, and people will criticise you and find fault with you; but you will realize in a new way, and more than ever, "My grace is sufficient." You will be like a "fenced brazen wall." (Jer. xv, 20.) People will call your mistakes faults and your weaknesses sins; they will slight you and persecute you, but stand firm, and you will get a blessing out of it all. (Matt. v, 10-12.) The Bible will be a new book to you; service for Christ will be sweeter than before. It will no longer be for duty or for church, but for him. You may not be able to shout. Sometimes the "still water runs deepest." Yet you may have him, and may know—yea, will know—that he is within. There are still higher heights to climb and deeper depths to fathom. Remember that you have only started in this new and living way. When the garden is clean, then the vegetables are ready to grow. Press on. Live much in prayer. Read your Bible and holiness literature. Attend holiness meetings. Testify humbly, but boldly. Never compromise. Keep always in touch with God. If you find yourself growing cold, fly at once to him, and hold on till he returns to you. Keep the fires always burning in your soul, and the Lord will not only keep you in this way, but will use you to lead others into this blessed light, which "shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

The old-time congregational singing seems to be clean gone forever. Why is this? What is the matter? There is no good reason why our people should hang their harps on the willows, and refuse to sing the Lord's songs in this goodly land of ours. We are not in captivity in a strange land, and we are not far removed from Jerusalem—not from our accustomed places of worship.

The singing of the people was once one of the chief attractions of our old-time camp meetings, but it is not so now. It is very difficult in many places to have singing at all. The little we have is done mainly by the young people, and not many of them sing. In most places, at most of our camp meetings, we have an organ and what is called a choir, but often the singing amounts to very little. The people do not open their mouths and pour forth a great volume of song. Have we lost the spirit of song and of singing? Is there no joy, no gladness, no spirit of praise to be expressed in song? Have the people forgotten how to sing?

I have witnessed some experiments of late in trying to get the people to sing. They were very interesting, and would have been amusing if the matter had not been so serious. The young people knew one class of songs and one kind of singing, but the old folk did not know the songs, and could not keep up with the time. The congregation was not supplied with books. There were, perhaps, twenty-five books to one thousand people. No one "parcelled" out the lines as we used to do. The older people do not learn the words of the songs as readily as they once did. Indeed, in many instances the words are not worth remembering. The young people seem to enjoy rhyme, jingles, and choruses; a kind of a "trip-i-ty trip" song; a jingle without regard to the sense or sentiment of the thing. I believe this is natural, and a characteristic of children and young people everywhere. Perhaps they are not to blame for it, and need only to be led in it. The old folks listen to, but do not sing these songs. They do not know them; do not care to learn. They are too wheezy and slow to keep up with such fast time. I try it sometimes myself, and at the end of the second stanza I am panting for breath; I am out of wind. However, I have never had the gift of song.

The preacher calls for one of the old songs, such as we used to sing with so much motion and power. Like as not the organist does not know it, or has not the music, or, perhaps, it is the old hymn to a new tune. If the old words are sung to the old tune, the old folks fall in. Some of them have few teeth and some have none; some of their voices are cracked and badly out of tune; some voices have lain idle so long they are all untuning. Anyway, the old folk fall in and the young people fall out; so that when the young sing, the old do not cry, and when the old sing, the young sit silently by. When this experiment is tried, it is a "see-saw" sort of service as long as it goes on. First one horse pulls, and then the other, while the wagon stands stock still where it was.

Then, too, from two to four new song books come out each year, and the latest is always the best. We do not grow perfect in one till we pass on to another. Some one said, "The old hymn writers wrote hymns for inspiration, and the new hymn writers write for twenty-five cents per copy." It looks as if they were after the money. The main inspiration is the cash to be made out of it. Each great Sunday-school worker and each evangelist must have a hymn book and hymns of his own. These he sells as he goes. Of making many hymn books there seems to be no end.

In all of our churches, so far as I know, we have one hymn book for our Sunday-schools and another for our preaching services. The hymns and hymnals for our young people and for our grown folks are different. The children grow up with the idea that they are to sing out of the children's book at Sunday-school, and the grown people out of their own book at the public preaching services. There is more in this than one might think at first. It comes to be the fixed habit and thought of the young mind. As soon as I pick up the Young People's Hymnal, the young folks start for the choir; and as soon as I take up the Standard Hymn Book, they break for the congregation. One church, service and book for the young, and quite another for the grown folks.

I sometimes wish we had only one hymn book for all our services. I get to some places where they tell me they can not use the hymn book at all; do not know the songs nor the music. Twice within the past year they have handed me "The Christian Science Hymnal." If this thing goes on this way fifty years longer, and I live that long, I think I will wind up a "Psalm singer"—at least, I will favor sticking to one set of songs.

If anyone can explain this singing matter to me, I will be obliged to him. I am not an old man, but I remember how our people used to sing till the air was mellow with grace, and the spirit of inspiration was on the preacher and all of the people. Great revivals of religion were begun and carried on by our singing. Men and women were convicted by singing; were led to salvation by song. It is not so now. What is the matter? Who can tell me?

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

GREETING.

Dr. Boswell has kindly consented to give the Sunday-school workers the use of a column in the ADVOCATE, and has placed me in charge of the department. I accept the trust with a full sense of its responsibility, and I pray God to give me wisdom and an understanding heart; I pray that he will guide me with his Spirit, that I may conduct it for his glory and the best interests of the Sunday-schools of Louisiana and Mississippi. And I ask the workers of the two States to pray for me, as I will ever pray for them. Let us pray that our Sunday-schools may be made a more effective agency in bringing our children and our young people to Christ and training them in Christian service.

It will be my aim to make the column an actual workers' exchange. To do this I will need the co-operation of all Sunday-school workers. If you know any Sunday-school news, or have any ideas about Sunday-school methods and work, please send them to me. I trust you will not leave me to do all the writing. I have attended testimony meetings where two or three did all the talking, and the results, to say the least, were far from satisfactory. Do not let that be the experience of our Sunday-school column.

The Sunday-school is a mighty evangelical force. To reach the greatest efficiency the officers and teachers must be skilled workmen. If this column shall prove effective in sharpening the faculties or in increasing the knowledge and zeal of even one teacher or worker, our labor will not be in vain.

INSTITUTES.

A Sunday-school Teachers' Institute will be held in Jackson, Miss., on Sept. 18th, 19th and 20th. It will be a Methodist Institute, held by the district vice-president, primarily for the teachers of the Jackson district. But Methodists are unselfish, and through the kindness of the good people of Jackson, the invitation is extended to any Sunday-school worker of any denomination and of any place who may wish to attend. Free entertainment will be provided, and the best available talent will be procured. Bro. J. C. Cavett, superintendent at First Church, Jackson, is heartily seconding the work, and will spare no pains to make the institute a success.

So far as we know, this will be the first one of the kind ever held on Mississippi soil, and we trust it will mark the commencement of a new era in the development of her Sunday-schools. The programme is not yet completed, but enough talent has been secured to assure a most profitable session. It will be the aim of those having it in charge to make it instructive both in matter and methods, and we trust those who attend will come prepared to spend three days in hard study.

The invitation is to anyone who sincerely desires to be improved in Sunday-school methods and in Bible study and teaching. Let all such who can do so be present.

We thank Bro. Bachman for the kind words seconding the request for a Sunday-school column. We will endeavor to conduct it on the lines he laid down, and we hope the brethren will thoroughly discuss all the subjects he named.

In the Magazine, for August, Dr. Atkins appeals to the Sunday schools of our church to redeem the pledge he made at the Missionary Conference of $10,000 for the Soochow University. We hope the schools of Louisiana and Mississippi will respond liberally and enthusiastically. It will give the schools new life and power and bring them into close contact with the missionary movement. The Soochow University will have a far-reaching effect on the evangelization of China.

THE SAM JONES CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The meeting on Sam Jones Camp Ground for the current year has passed into history. I regret to say that the indications of good accomplished were not as pronounced as we would like to have them, but only God knows whether the seed sown has fallen upon good ground, or not. It is a source of deep thankfulness and gratulation, however, that the utmost harmony prevailed. The attendance of preachers was not nearly so large as it should have been, as by a united and harmonious effort a work might have been started there that would have spread over the entire district, and brought forth much fruit to the honor and glory of God. Many of the preachers, doubtless, have much difficulty in making ends meet in the matter of daily bread for themselves and families, and these may have felt too poor to pay even the half-fare rate to get to the meeting. It would be a glorious thing for the members of the church to get religion enough to loosen their purse-strings to an extent sufficient to make their faithful pastors comfortable at home, and pay their passage a few miles to a camp meeting.

Dr. Murrah, of Millsaps, was with us the first Sunday and Monday, and did grand preaching, such as he is in the habit of doing; and such should, whether it does or not, convince men of sin and the necessity for righteousness. Bro. Burton, of Whitworth, also did some effective preaching. Bros. Huntley, Hawkins and Robertson, and L. S. Jones, did good work during the meeting.

Our good Brother Crowe, of Friar's Point, North Mississippi Conference, conducted the services after the departure of Dr. Murrah, and it was the universal sentiment and opinion that his preaching had never been surpassed in the pulpit of the Sam Jones Camp Ground. Perfectly plain, logical, convincing, earnest and winning, we have an abiding faith that some of the seed thus sown will spring up and bear fruit unto everlasting life. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days," is the promise upon which we base our hopes that eternity will show much of good as the result of our camp meeting. "Paul may plant, Apollos water, but only God can give the increase."

To these must be added Rev. Jno. A. B. Jones, preacher-in-charge at Gloster, and the president of the association from its organization to this date, and to whom, with Bro. Cassels, it is largely indebted for its success in the past and its hopes for future usefulness. Grand in character, sublime in his devotion to duty and to God, after fifty years of faithful and successful work in the itinerant field of Methodism, he stands to-day "the first among his equals" as a preacher of the gospel and as a man of God. God grant that his useful life may be prolonged, and his years on earth be as "many generations."

Bro. Riggs, late of the Louisiana Conference, but now in the evangelistic field, where he has met with marked success, was also with us for a few days, and did his part towards the success of the meeting.

Rains during the meeting interfered, somewhat, with the attendance as well as the comfort of the cottagers, but the absence of disturbing elements of other sorts made ample amends for these slight annoyances. Aunt Mary, better known as "Aunt Mary Bob," was somewhat exercised by the presence on the grounds of sundry and divers cows that should have been left at home, as we hope they will be next year.

Our good friend and dear brother, Jno Cassels, was prevented from attending the services in the tabernacle by the illness of Sister Cassels on the ground, and the feeble condition of his venerable father at his home, whose sun of life is nearing the western horizon, obscured by clouds of affliction and suffering. Surely our brother has passed through deep waters of sorrow and suffering during the past year. God grant to him and his that measure of sustaining grace their sore trials demand. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

The order and decorum on the grounds and in the great congregation were exceptionally good, and Brother Crowe congratulated the people for this evidence of their good breeding, stating that he had never seen the excellence of their conduct surpassed.

The closing services were very tender, and many tears were shed when the parting hands were taken. There is this consolation to the children of God, that "we'll never say good-bye in heaven," nor will there be in that abode of the blest a parting tear.

Many improvements have been made in the grounds, the hotel and tabernacle, and more will come. The cottages were all occupied, and the future of the association is bright and promising. We were sorry you could not be with us, but presume you had a reasonable excuse for your absence. Yours truly, XXX

HARPERVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: I have just closed my third protracted meeting for this work, which was held at Cantrell Church. We had a good meeting; large congregations both day and night; Christians were abundantly revived and blessed. There was only one accession to the church (Bro. G. W. Gann's son, Marvin), but there is very little material to work up in that community, as nearly all belong to some church. Our Baptist and Presbyterian friends turned out regularly, and took part with us in the exercises, and were very helpful to us, and expressed themselves as being greatly benefited spiritually. Even a good "Hard-shell" family in the community attended and helped us in the meeting.

Bro J. C. Long assisted me in the meeting, and did all the preaching except two sermons. His preaching was very acceptable, and attended with the power and demonstration of the Spirit. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

The meeting closed Thursday with the eleven o'clock services, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was manifest. IRVIN MILLER, P. C.

TUNICA, MISS.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: We are having a great meeting at Tunica. Bros. Norsworthy and McIntosh are here with their tent, and we are having many conversions—genuine, old-fashioned—at the altar, and the preaching is the power of God to the salvation of the people. It is a time of power such as we seldom see.

A FALSE FACE.

When dyspepsia fastens on a man it changes his feelings and it changes his looks. He frowns now instead of smiling. His expression is harsh instead of kindly. He is wearing a false face—a face which does injustice to the real nobility of his nature.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures dyspepsia and other diseases of the stomach and allied organs of digestion and nutrition, and the record of the cure is written both in the face and the feelings of the person cured.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is not a stimulant or temporary tonic. It cures the diseases that are the cause of ill-health and builds up the body with sound flesh.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." The sole motive for substitution is to enable the dealer to make the little more profit paid on the sale of less meritorious medicines.

"Last spring, early, I wrote you my feelings and condition," says Mr. A. J. Vanderwater, of 873 West Division Street, Chicago, Ill., "and you advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and then write how I felt. I am happy to say I am getting to feel fine. In all I have taken six bottles of the 'Discovery' and four or five vials of the little 'Pellets.' They have done me worlds of good. All my friends say: 'Vanderwater, how well you are looking.' The medicines have made the great change in me; from the slow mope of a man that could hardly crawl, tired and sick all the time, could do no work, to a man who can work, sleep, eat, and feel fine, and that tired feeling all gone away. I am very thankful that I wrote to Dr. Pierce. His 'Golden Medical Discovery' and his little liver 'Pellets' have almost made a new man of me. I feel young as I did at thirty years."

It is hardly worth while to indulge hope or talk about salvation in the world to come, unless we strive to make preparation for it in this. To trust in natural goodness, or in the good things we do, is to lean on a broken reed. "There is none good; no, not one." By grace are we saved; "not of works, lest any man should boast."

We have a poor opinion of the quality and efficacy of a man's religion, no matter what he professes, or how earnestly he may insist that he is led by the Spirit of God, if he pays no attention to the important affairs of life by which future generations are to be influenced and made better. Christian parents who fail to train their children in the right way can make the proper application of this remark.

Never allow anything short of a providential occurrence to interfere with your attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting. A good brother testifies in the Western Christian Advocate that he was "cheated out of four years' Christian growth because he gave up the prayer meeting." How many brethren and sisters who started and ran well for awhile can bear a similar testimony! It is a serious thing to neglect the means of grace.

As a rule, the most intelligent, active and useful Christians are those who understand, and love, and advocate the doctrines and usages of their church. The piety of such men is no more to be discounted than are good husbands who love their wives better than they love other women. Nobody blames a man for that. Why should a Christian be thought defective if he loves his church above all others?

It is often said that creeds are unauthorized, and are both unnecessary and harmful—that men ought to stand on God's Word, and make that their creed. We have seen men who held to that view, but we never saw one who did not insist on putting on the Word his own or some other uninspired man's interpretation. There is no difference between printing a man's creed in a book, and preaching it from the pulpit fifty-two Sundays in the year. One is as fully authorized as the other.

THE FAITH THAT PLEASES GOD.

The lowest order of faith is intellectual assent to the revelation of God—a faith so reasonable that none but a fool can fail to exercise it. Even this low order of faith, induced, it may be, by reasoning, or exercised as the direct result of early religious training, is pleasing to God. It includes not only belief in God's existence, but in his government over men. It says: I not only believe that God is, but that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

But the faith that is specially pleasing to God is of a different character—at least, in part. It can not be said to be historical, or purely intellectual. It is this, but far more. It is implicit trust in God, and in Jesus Christ, his Son, as our personal Savior. It is true that such faith can not be exercised unless men are first convinced of the divine existence, and the great historical fact that Jesus is the Son of God. It is, perhaps, this fact that has led many to suppose that intellectual consent, and confession of Christ are quite sufficient as conditions of salvation. Underlying this thought is the erroneous notion that the Spirit operates only through the word, because man is capable of receiving no information except through the medium of the natural senses. If such a notion had any basis in reason or Scripture, we might properly allow the conclusion to which it leads, viz.: that intellectual assent to the truth and obedience to the ordinances of the gospel comprise the whole duty of man, and insure his salvation.

Now, as a matter of fact, the Scriptures teach that faith only is the condition of salvation. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousness." Do these passages, with others that might be cited, mean no more than to say to us: The evidence of Christ's divinity and mission is before you; accept it and be saved? If so, then why are not all men in a state of salvation? There are millions who believe in Christ, and yet they are unsaved—so they feel, and so they testify.

There are two classes to whom we appeal: 1. That large class who affirm their faith in Christ, yet acknowledge themselves unsaved. 2. That other class, equally as credible, who certify not only to their faith in Christ, but to a conscious experience of salvation. What makes the difference? There can be but one answer. The faith of one class is a step in advance of the other, and wholly different in its character. One is purely intellectual, and can do no more than act the part of the schoolmaster to bring a man to Christ. The other calls into exercise the will and the affections. For this reason man is always appealed to, not only as a rational creature, but as endowed with affections capable of loving and trusting God. Hence, in addition to requiring the faith that acknowledges God's being and government, it is demanded of a man that he "love God with all his heart and mind and strength." We conclude, therefore, that saving faith partakes of the nature of loving trust—entire commitment of the soul into the hands of Christ. Such a faith can but be pleasing to God. It is not a blind, unreasoning faith. It is well-founded. True, the man under conviction does not stop to argue with God as to whether he will be merciful to his individual transgressions or not; nor does he make any plea on the ground of personal merit. He sees God in Christ Jesus, recognizes the merits of the Son, and triumphantly exclaims:

> Who died for all mankind,
> Hath surely died for me.

This is sufficient, and he puts his trust in Christ and is saved. With this salvation comes the witness of the Spirit, direct and incontestible, thus showing that God can and does impart information independently of the natural senses. The moral state into which the saved soul passes is spiritually discerned. The natural man can not know it.

That it requires a struggle for a man to exercise such a faith is not denied, and, unaided by the Holy Spirit, it can not be exercised, for, though God is recognized both in his natural and moral attributes, ready and willing to help and save all men, this faith requires the surrender of the will, the denial of self in its entirety. This is the hardest thing for an intelligent free agent to do. But for that very reason it is well-pleasing to God. A faith that stops short of entire trust in God indicates more or less trust in self, and self-trust to any extent discounts divine grace—a thing that God will not look upon with any degree of allowance.

Abraham's faith pleased God, not merely because he acknowledged the divine power and glory, but because he exhibited his trust by leaving home and kindred, and going to a strange country at the command of the Lord, without any questioning or misgiving; going, he knew not where, but feeling that he would be directed and sustained by the unseen arm. His faith was magnified in the divine eye when he offered up Isaac, "accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead." Abraham is the father of the faithful, the type of all true believers. It is only faith like his that makes the promise sure to all the nations of earth. It is the faith that brings man in touch with God, that opens to him the storehouse of heaven, and fills his soul with good. This faith pleases God and blesses man.

THE YOUNG PREACHER VS. THE OLD.

In preparing for the work of life a man must not only get ready for immediate usefulness, but he must also have an eye to the future, and keep constantly in use the means which first led to success. Unless he does, he may expect to drop out of the race and be lost sight of before two-thirds of his life has passed. It is fatal to any man's success after he has past his meridian to presume to operate on the capital accumulated in his young manhood. Is this not the mistake that many make?

We often hear it said that a lawyer is worth more to his clients, or a doctor to his patients, after he has grown old than when he was young. This may be true, but it is not simply because he has grown old. Certainly his experience is worth something, but if he does not grow in knowledge as he grows in years, his experience will not continue to insure success. Any lawyer who ceases to read and study, unless a man of uncommon genius and originality, will lose caste among his brethren as he grows in age, and will be outstripped by younger men. The same may be said of doctors. But let the one or the other put as much time and study and energy into his business after he has passed his fiftieth or sixtieth year, and the probability is he will be more sought after than he was before he reached middle life.

May it not be the same way with preachers? It seems that it ought to be, but it is not always so. Sometimes the very best fail to command place and popular esteem, notwithstanding they remain active and studious, and are generally recognized as men above the average in mental capacity. In a preacher something besides great ability, great learning, and studious habits, is necessary to make him acceptable in old age. We may not be able to tell just exactly what it is that he lacks, but we know he lacks something that keeps the people from running after him like they do younger men. On the other hand, we venture to say that no old preacher holds his own with younger men unless he possesses the qualifications we have named. Keep this in mind.

Let no preacher, therefore, presume to rely upon the capital accumulated in his palmy days. As sure as he does he will come to grief, and then all his lamentations will be in vain. We shall not advise our old brethren, but we venture to say to the younger: Lay your foundation broad and deep, build upon it wisely, and continue to make additions—make full proof of your ministry. And having done your best, leave your case in the hands of your brethren and your Lord. Do that, and you will not be disappointed, no matter what may befall you.

How sad to see an old man standing before an Annual Conference pleading for a place, and affirming his willingness and strength to do anything his brethren may say, when at the same time it is apparent to all that his day of work is ended. Hardly less sad is the case of a brother who for many years has filled the best and most responsible places, but who has reached that age when he must take lighter work—such as he does not want—or retire altogether. Happy the man who can do this cheerfully, and consent to wear out and die in an obscure place.

Not one in a hundred of us can be "still fat and flourishing" in old age. But for our itinerancy many of us would be far worse off in age than we are—we would secure no place at all. We ought to be thankful for the system, and, as it allows no opportunity to gather riches, we ought to do our best while we can, and be worthy in old age of the respect and confidence of the church. Only a fraction of us will continue in the active work down to old age. Fewer still will be the idols of the people after we begin to descend the hill. Let us not complain. It is according to the course of nature!

THE SERMON AS A RELIEF.

Our Sunday congregations are made up of busy men and women whose bodies and minds are tired with the week's work. The preacher ought to bear them in mind, and, though he may not be able to suit his discourse in all particulars to each hearer, he should be careful not to add anything to their burdens. Our people, especially evangelical Christians, care little for ritualism. The simpler the service is the better it suits them. They believe that the sermon is part of the worship, and ought to be made prominent. They believe also that it ought to be an earnest and devout presentation of the gospel. No matter what particular phase of the gospel it is, they gladly hear it. Anything else from the pulpit on Sunday makes them tired. And when they leave church feeling more wearied than when they came, we may be sure that it is an effort for them to get the consent of their minds to return.

Preachers are not always as wise and considerate as they ought to be. They make a mistake in talking Greek and Latin to uneducated people. They simply beat the air. It is just as great a mistake to undertake to please specialists or professional men. The doctor does not feel that the preacher can learn him anything about diseases and their remedy. The lawyer does not go to church to catch a brief. The college professor believes that he knows as much about his specialty as the preacher does. He does not attend preaching to hear dissertations on science. The business man does not care to hear anything about banking, merchandising, manufacturing, etc. The farmer desires to forget his drudgery, and the mechanic the grime and dust of his shop. All go to church to hear the gospel. Preached from a full heart, in its purity, with purpose to do the soul good, tired men and women will patiently hear a long sermon. Otherwise they will fret, and, maybe, next time stay at home. Brethren, let us try to make our sermons a relief to our toiling people.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

We once attended a revival service conducted by a good Christian man whose labors resulted in the conversion of souls. In due time opportunity was offered for membership in the church. Several applicants presented themselves. They related their experience, and were duly approved. The preacher then invited every Christian to come forward and give the young converts the "right hand of Christian fellowship," and added, "After they have been baptized, we will extend to them the right hand of church fellowship."

That put us to thinking: Here are souls who, according to their testimony, have been translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. They have become heirs of the same promise enjoyed by all the older saints, and thoroughly identified in thought and feeling and aim with the whole family of God. The preacher recognized all this by asking Christians to give them the hand of Christian fellowship. They were in the larger liberty of the people of God. But after submitting to the ordinance of the church, fellowship was to be restricted to those only of like faith and order. Can any man give us a reason for this, and sustain his reason by a solid scriptural argument? We often hear it said, "The greater includes the less," and accept the saying without question. It must apply to the blessings of the gospel as well as to everything else. Assuming this to be so, we may venture a step further and say: Admission into the family of God, by which one becomes an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ, is a greater blessing than membership in any local organization that carries with it no blessing or privilege save participation in its own local affairs. And we conclude that the brother who granted the one, basing his action on the unity of believers in Christ, and denied the other until after baptism, and then restricted the fellowship to the local church, was wholly inconsistent.

We readily grant the propriety of restricting participation in local affairs to the local membership; but who has any right to say that, because a man does not see fit to cast his fortunes with a particular organization, he is, therefore, not a member of the church of Christ, and is not entitled to church fellowship? Anything that leads to such action is pure assumption.

THE COAST STORM.

Our readers are doubtless already aware of the great storm that swept the Gulf coast last week. It began some time Tuesday and continued, with short intermissions, until the afternoon of Thursday. It ranged all along from the mouth of the Mississippi river to Pensacola, Fla. It would be hard to say at this writing what particular point suffered most damage. But few lives were lost, the damage being confined to shipping and small houses on or near the water. Several lines of railroad on the coast and the lakes also suffered—the Illinois Central, the Queen and Crescent, and Louisville and Nashville. The latter suffered severely. The damage to the others we have not learned. Communication between New Orleans and the East by way of the Louisville and Nashville road was suspended from Wednesday night until Sunday morning. The time of this suspension was a time of great anxiety to the hundreds of people who left their business on Wednesday and were unable to return.

The damage at the Seashore Camp Ground, which consisted in the loss of the two bath-houses, the wrecking of the electric light wires, and rooting up of three or four trees, amounts to about one thousand dollars—possibly not that much. Not a bath-house, it is said, was left on the coast. We do not know how true that is, but we do know that the dozen or more in sight of the camp ground are all gone.

We have read of storms at sea, and the lashing of the shore by angry waves, and have desired to see the sight—at a distance. We are satisfied. We do not care to see old Ocean in any greater rage than the Gulf was on Thursday last. To a landsman like this writer it is past comprehension how a ship lives through a storm.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, of the Forest district, and his excellent corps of preachers and lay helpers, are doing excellent work for the Master, and are succeeding well. Brother Mellen's short report in another column will be read with interest.

We had a half hour's pleasant conversation last week with Rev. E. N. Evans, of Baton Rouge. He is in fine health and spirits, and gives a good account of the work in his charge. We thank him for a kind invitation to visit his people.

In a short letter from Rev. W. W. Woollard, presiding elder, he says, "I would like to give you some notes of the work, for the preachers of the Aberdeen district are doing well." Let us have them. Good news from the field is always acceptable and edifying.

Rev. J. M. Johnston writes us of the death of Mrs. Godfrey, wife of Rev. C. R. Godfrey, late a member of the Louisiana Conference. She died at Olla, La., Aug. 10, 1901. No particulars are given. We suppose Brother Johnston will furnish an obituary in due time.

Appended to a short business note, Rev. W. M. Young, of the Corinth district, adds encouraging words. He says, "We are having great times; have had about seventy conversions in the past two weeks, with sixty-two accessions." May the Lord bless the people more and more.

A note from Rev. Jno. M. Moore informs us that he is at his post, the Columbia Barracks, a few miles west of Havana, where he has a fine view of the Gulf. He finds the climate fine, and not so warm as it is in Mississippi, especially at night. His hands are full, having "more than fourteen hundred souls in his parish."

A note from Rev. B. H. Sheppard, Downsville, La., informs us of the death of little Bessie, daughter of Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, of the Louisiana Conference. The little one went home on the sixteenth instant. May the good Lord sanctify this bereavement to the good of the afflicted family. The kingdom of heaven belongs to these little ones.

Rev. W. G. Harbin is still working in the interest of the hospital at our Orphans' Home in Water Valley. Cold Water (Miss.) Sunday-school, through our excellent brother, P. T. Callicott, has sent him twelve dollars. That is good. What other Sunday-school will do likewise? He lately attended the Bailey Camp Meeting, and reports that the week spent there was one of the most pleasant of his life. A preacher who can not be pleased at "old Bailey" ought to stay at home.

Blackstone Female INSTITUTE.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

A CHRISTIAN TRAINING SCHOOL for Girls, opened in 1890. Is this school the school for your daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights, water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "Thorough" is the last word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. Growth—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—20, 58, 88, 126, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, six; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000, at present, $95,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

NOTICE.

To Presiding Elders and Pastors of North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The Board of Missions have gone to some trouble and expense to help you in an advanced movement for the cause of missions in our Conference. The statistics and programmes sent out to every preacher recently are full of information and help in bringing this subject before all the people. The success or failure in this work largely depends upon you. If the programme does not suit you, make a better one and hold a service in the interest of missions in every congregation. This is not an impossible thing in any charge in this Conference. One day and night is all you will need to carry out the programme, and it will be a wonderful help to you in bringing up the collections. Take the statistics along with you and give them out, and talk them up. Let the people see what we are doing. If it is education the people need on this subject, it is time some of us were up and doing something.

If you need help, I am sure your brethren near-by will join with you and render any assistance they can; and by swapping work with each other, you can make the meeting more important and interesting. As you hold your meetings, report through the ADVOCATE your success, and this will inspire and help others. We are praying for gracious results from this canvass. Help us.

W. S. LAORONE.

IMPORTANT.

MR. EDITOR: The report of manager and treasurer in regard to the Twentieth Century Thank-offering in Mississippi (No. 9), Holly Springs district, published in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Aug. 1, did not do Waterford circuit justice.

Waterford's Twentieth Century money is as follows:

Subscription list	$33 40
Collected by Rev. R. E. Duke	3 75
W. F. M. Society, collected and paid to the Laura Haygood Memorial	12 85
Collected by myself and paid to treasurer.	10 00
Lost by dividing the circuit	1 75
To be collected yet	3 35
Cash in hand	1 70

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society gave me a receipt for the $12.85 they sent in, and I handed Bro. Park the receipt with the cash I paid him. And Waterford circuit should have credit for it all.

to dose, derange and finally destroy your stomach. At best drugs only furnish relief, and if you persist in their use you will in time become a slave to the habit and in the end find yourself in a physically worse condition than at first. The Medicine Habit is as vicious as the liquor habit and in the end as harmful.

The celebrated Oliver Wendell Holmes, M.D., says: "Except opium, wine, ether and chloroform, I firmly believe that if the whole Materia Medica, as now used, could be sunk to the bottom of the sea, it would be all the better for mankind and all the worse for the fishes."

THE Electropoise

Mrs. A. W. Wilson (wife of Bishop Wilson, of M. E. Church, South), 2408 Madison ave., Baltimore, Md., writes: "I find the Electropoise almost a necessity. I experienced relief from neuralgia, which at one time threatened to keep me a constant sufferer. I take pleasure in speaking for the Electropoise, and I hope these few words will induce those who read them to make trial of this 'cure all.'"

George H. Means, Pastor Scott Street M. E. Church, Covington, Ky., writes: "Last July I was taken with vertigo. I could not study; everything I ate disagreed with me. At last I ate no solid food, but even soups and liquids did not agree with me. I was induced to try the Electropoise. It relieved the brain congestion and the vertigo. I began the next day to study. I ate from that time what I pleased, and since then, about three months ago, I have been a comparatively well man."

Home Circle.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

She was brought up in simple, domestic fashion, her early life in her Danish home being watched over by a thrifty, sensible mother, who never forgot that her daughter was a child first and a princess afterward. This heritage of careful education Alexandra of Wales afterward passed faithfully down to her own family of children. Her betrothal to the Prince of Wales was the result quite as much of a mutual attraction so soon as they had met as a furtherance of royal diplomacy, and not only Albert Edward, but the entire English populace fell a victim to her sweet smile when it beamed upon them. It is close upon forty years since she rode through London the affianced bride of the heir to the throne, but reams of glowing words in print and verbal testimony are still accessible describing the enthusiasm which attended the sight of her at every step of that progress. Queen Alexandra is not beautiful in the sense of possessing perfect features or a form modeled on classic lines, but she is none the less one of the most fascinating women. She has in a remarkable degree that intangible element called charm, which is the greatest gifts the gods can bestow upon any one. She radiates in every line of her figure, in every gesture and motion, an ideal refinement that attracts all who approach her, and an attraction that is quickly enslavement when the winning force of her lovable nature is felt.

Queen Alexandra excels in all domestic accomplishments. She is an admirable housekeeper, her establishment at Sandringham being an estate as well as a house, over every part of which she exercised the most careful control. The model dairy on the place has almost a world-wide reputation, and the princess and her daughters are more than theorists in the art of butter-making. Her attachment for dogs and horses is what might be expected in a woman devoted to outdoor life, and her skill and delight in outdoor sports are in the same proportion. Her musical abilities are of a very high order, and have won for her the degree of musical doctor, deservedly conferred by Trinity College.

History relates that when the question of a bride for her eldest son was discussed, Queen Victoria at first favored the Princess Alexandrina of Prussia, who was prominently mentioned together with the Danish princess as a possible bride for the Prince of Wales. Once under the charm of Alexandra's presence, however, Victoria's prejudice in favor of the Prussian lady quickly gave way, and her eagerness for the marriage was almost as great as that of her son. Through the long stretch of years that the Princess of Wales has been her daughter-in-law this affectionate interest has grown and strengthened. With it, too, has come the most implicit faith and trust in Alexandra's tactful ability to do the right thing at all times in small affairs as well as in the many public ceremonials that the late Queen more and more frequently relegated to her accredited substitute.

One phase of this confidence will be specially appreciated by women. Alexandra's taste in dress was quickly discovered and accepted not only by her mother-in-law, but by her husband's sisters as well. She possesses, indeed, not only taste, but personal skill in bringing about desired effects. This was notably true in millinery, and Victoria not infrequently availed herself of Alexandra's fingers. More than once the Princess of Wales was sent for in haste while Her Majesty was in the hands of her dressers, to give a becoming or more splendid touch to some bonnet that did not at all suit the Queen. The appeal was never made in vain, and the confident air with which the Empress of India would don her head-wear after Alexandra had revised it was as amusing as it was entirely feminine.—Harper's Bazar.

A DOCTOR'S PIGEON TELEGRAPH.

In a little talk we had not long ago in Nature about homing pigeons as messenger boys, you no doubt thought as I did what a pity it was that these beautiful symbols of peace should be used to carry orders and information in the dreadful business of war. A Nebraska doctor has learned how to put them to a much more useful and noble purpose, and the idea, strangely enough, was suggested to him by the use of the pigeons in military operations. This gentleman's name is Dr. Frank S. Morris, and he lives at McCool Junction. A good deal of his practice is in the country districts. It's bad enough to be sick or to have a toothache anywhere, but it's worse when you are several miles away from a doctor or dentist, without even a telegraph or a telephone to tell your troubles over. If you lived in Dr. Morris' district, you would first, of course, have to "connect" with his office by using a horse, but after that his carrier-pigeon service would keep him posted regularly as to how you were getting on. You couldn't guess (right off, at any rate) how, if you were sick, you could be improved by giving a capsule to a pigeon. This is how it is done: Dr. Morris, like other physicians, has numerous patients that he is unable to visit twice daily, but it is necessary that he should know the pulse and temperature range during the day. So when he visits a patient he leaves with him one of his homing pigeons (of which he now has twenty-five) and a little aluminum capsule. At the proper time your pulse and temperature are taken, a record made of them and put into this capsule, the capsule is fastened to the pigeon and the bird released. So away goes the swift little messenger, bound straight for Dr. Morris' loft; your message, as Tennyson says in that beautiful "In Memoriam," "knit beneath the wild pulsation of its wings." The moment it reaches the loft the doctor knows it. And how, do you suppose? For he is too busy to be watching out of the window all the time for his homing pigeons. Why, he has this pigeon loft fitted up with electric bob wires and a bell, so that when the pigeon slips through the hole into the loft a bell is rung in the doctor's house. Even if there should not be anyone at home, the doctor will know when he gets back just when that pigeon arrived. For he has a clock-recording attachment also. The doctor has a station at Blue Vale postoffice, nine miles away from his home. Anyone around there who wants a doctor reports to the postmaster, and the postmaster starts the pigeon after the doctor.—Little Chronicle.

THE LOWER LIGHTS.

"I don't believe I'll go to church today," said Ruth, one Sunday morning, at the breakfast table. "Somehow I don't feel like it, and nobody will ever know the difference, whether I'm there or not."

"My dear," said Aunt Margaret, "I've often heard you sing, 'Let the lower lights be burning.' I wonder whether you know the story that suggested it?"

"No," answered Ruth, "I never so much as heard that there was one."

"Some years ago a steamer in a terrific gale was trying to make the harbor at Cleveland, Ohio. There are two lights at the entrance of the harbor: one the upper light on the bluffs of the shore, the other the lower light on a bar at the other side of the entrance. The pilot peered out anxiously to catch a glimpse of the friendly lights, and presently caught sight of the upper one. But that alone was not sufficient. He must also see the other to know just where to go. But for some reason it was not lighted on time. Beaten by wind and wave, the steamer staggered on as best she could, while the hearts of all on board trembled with fear. If she missed the entrance, there was little hope of her escaping the rocks. Suddenly the lower light appeared; but, alas! it was too late—the steamer had missed the entrance, and in the attempt to turn about, went down with all on board!"

"I suppose," said Ruth, with a little laugh, "you mean that even if I am the most insignificant member of our church, and sit in the very back seat, it is my duty to be there in my place?"

"You remember George Eliot's poem of the violin-maker, who said if he did not make the very best violin possible for him to make, God would miss the music? If we are not each one of us faithfully doing our duty, be it small or great, there is silence or discord where there might have been music. More than that, our lives are bound together—we must needs lift up those about us, or drag them down. We are bidden to sow our seed at all times, for we 'know not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.' The cobbler, as I once heard a minister say, could not paint a picture, but he could tell Apelles that the shoe-tie was not right, and so might help towards making the beautiful picture perfect."

"O, auntie," exclaimed Ruth, "why did I say anything? I might have known you would not let me stay at home in peace. Still, I will try to keep my wee little 'lower light' burning as brightly as possible hereafter."—Kate Sumner Gates, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

THE DINING HOUR.

The dining hour is in many families, and should be in all, one of the pleasantest of the day, not only because it affords opportunity for the gratification of a natural appetite, but because it is also a convenient occasion for social interconrse. While it may easily be made one of the most profitable hours as well, it will be anything but profitable or pleasant if it is chosen as the time for a family quarrel, or for disciplining the children, or for finding fault with the food or the cooking. Nothing should be allowed to interfere with the enjoyment of the occasion, since unpleasant emotions are liable to affect the digestive secretions unfavorably. "Better is a dry morsel and quietness therewith, than a house full of sacrifices with strife." Not strife alone, but all depressing subject of conversation should be avoided. Rightly used, the time spent at the table may be of great educational value to the children of the family, and this object may be attained without formal and wearying instruction, which would be quite out of place.

We spend on an average from one to two hours daily at our meals. How to make the best use of this time is well worth our consideration. From a hygienic standpoint many people find it better to eat in company. Cheerful conversation, the amusing anecdote, the sparkling repartee, have more to do with a good digestion than we realize. An eminent physician says: "A solitary meal should be avoided if possible, for the mere presence of a companion, and still more occasional conversation, acts as a pleasant stimulus." If we have not ennobled our eating and drinking by combining them with love, at least we have improved our appetite and digestion by so doing. Love and good cheer may make the humblest fare a "feast of nectared sweets."

"We are going to lose our kitchens," says Mrs Stetson, "as we have lost our laundries and bakeries." The cook stove will follow the loom and the wheel, the wool carder and the shears." We do not seriously object to this, but pray spare the family dining-room!

From time immemorial eating together has been considered a sign of friendship. In the East it was once a sure pledge of protection. Our Lord made himself known to his disciples in the breaking of bread. Have we not sometimes felt that we knew our friends the better for breaking bread with them? Leave to the dog his solitary bone, but let families and friends continue the time-honored custom of eating together.—The Congregationalist.

SPELLING A COW'S MOO.

Some years ago, when Lucy was a little girl, learning to write, the teacher gave her this to copy: "M—o, moo.'

"What is it?" asked Lucy, looking puzzled.

"That is 'moo,' the noise a cow makes, Lucy."

Then Lucy began to copy "Moo." But she did it in a queer way. She made an M at the beginning of each line, and followed each M with a whole string of o's all across the slate, like this, Mooooo.

"But that isn't right, Lucy" said the teacher, when the little girl showed her the slate. "You must copy the word as I have written it. So—'Moo.'"

Lucy looked at the teacher's copy, and then at her own attempts, and then she shook her head decidedly. "Well, I think mine is right, Miss Jones," she said. "For I never saw a cow that gave such a short 'Moo' as you wrote down!"—Harper's Round Table.

DO THE WORK NEAREST YOU.

The great majority of people will find the work of life near at hand. It may be, perhaps, to correct the faults in one's self, to sweeten the atmosphere of home, to bless the local church, to consecrate one's business, or to purify the political atmosphere. Trite and true as is this statement, it is a difficult one to apprehend. If we set ourselves to master it, the task is soon abandoned, and we are looking far away for some other and greater work to do. The most successful and useful minister is the man whose labors are confined strictly to the cultivation of the one vineyard committed to his care. The minister's best helper is that member of his church who finds duty nearest at hand, and can always be relied upon to sustain the home church in its regular, constituted work.

It is also true that the joy of life is found in consecration to the obligations that lie closest to us. The heart that is always sighing for what is remote and unreachable becomes cankered with anxiety and disappointment. The goal always sought, but never reached, leaves the seeker wearied and disheartened. Happy indeed are those young people who have learned that the most precious jewels of the Christian life be rightly count them, and may be gathered daily by earnest seeking. Very forcefully does Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Chicago, teach this lesson in the following illustration:

"The Persians have a strange story of the Golconda diamond mines. Once Ali Hafed sat with his wife looking out upon the river that flowed through their farm. Soon their children came through the trees bringing with them a traveler. That night the stranger showed Ali Hafed a diamond that shone like a drop of condensed sunshine. He told his host that one large diamond was worth whole mines of copper and silver; that a handful would make him a prince; that a mine of diamonds would buy him a kingdom. That night wealthy Ali Hafed went to bed a poor man, for poverty is discontent. When the morning came he sold his farm for gold, and went forth in search of diamonds. Years passed. Old and gray, he returned in rags and poverty. He found his dear ones had all died in penury.

"He also found that the peasant who bought his farm was now a prince. One day, digging in the white sand in the stream at the foot of the garden, the peasant saw a shining something that set his heart to his mouth. Running his hands through the sand, he found it sown with gems. Thus were discovered the Golconda mines. Had Ali Hafed dug in his own garden, instead of starvation, poverty, and a broken heart, he would have owned gems that made nations rich."—Zion's Herald.

You will notice that in the placid waters of a lake everything which is highest in reality is lowest in the reflection. The higher the trees, the lower their image. That is the picture of this world; what is highest in this world is lowest in the other, and what is highest in that world is lowest in this. Gold is on top here; they pave the streets with it there. To serve is looked upon as ignoble here; there those that serve reign, and the last are first. Any girl is willing to fling away paste diamonds for the real stones. When a man understands what God can be to the soul, he loses his taste for things he used to care for most.—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

JAMES CHRISTOPHER DELOACH was born in Green county, Ala., Dec. 7, 1845, and died in Granada, Miss., July 8, 1901. He was the son of Col. James M. and Cornelia E. DeLoach, who were well and honorably known in the annals of Green county and Choctaw, where they moved when James was quite young, and where he grew to manhood. He was blessed with good opportunities in early life; was a diligent and successful student, as his reports always testified. As a child, he was truthful, honorable, and exceptionably considerate of the feelings of others; as a son, he was obedient; as a brother, tender and loving, a pleasure to all in the home. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church at an early age, which relation he maintained most faithfully during his life. On March 5, 1867, he was happily married to Miss Susan Larkins, of Sumpter county, Ala., and found in her one of the best of wives and truest of helpmeets. They reared nine children. The eldest son, Edwin, died several years ago in the full flush and promise of young manhood. He educated them well, and they all reflect great credit upon the Christian home in which they were reared. He was a true type of a Christian gentleman. Selfishness had no place in his generous heart. He was kind and courtly to everyone. All children loved him and delighted in his company. He was well versed in the issues of the day and in the polity of the church. The church and ministry never had supporters and defenders more loyal than he. No unjust criticism ever fell from his lips with regard to the ministry; neither did he allow it unrebuked in others. Truly could his pastor say at his funeral, "Another good man is gone." I have seldom met a man whose life was more beautiful and well-rounded. He had been in feeble health for two years. In December he had an attack of slow fever, from which he never fully recovered. His suffering was great, but he was always patient, never complaining nor rebellious, often assuring his friends that he was resigned to God's will, and "all was well" with him. He suddenly grew worse only a few days before his death. His absent children and relatives were summoned to his bedside. As we gathered there to bid adieu to one so dear, our hearts were sad and crushed, yet filled with the hope of a reunion in that heavenly city where partings are no more. His end was peace. We pray God to be the comfort and stay of the bereaved family, and as one by one they pass over the river, may they, too, receive that welcome, "Well done; enter thy Master's joy!" S. M. THAMES.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Church in Greenville, Miss., mourn the loss of one of its original members, Mrs. ALICE HUNT JOHNSON. Her mother was the first president, and she the first vice-president of the society, which positions they held several years, till the death of her mother, when she was elected president, and made an efficient officer for a few years, till circumstances forced her to resign, to the regret of the whole body.

She organized the children into a band, and for a long time had them meet in her home. Her wise leadership developed them into effective workers, and the "Home Builders" has continued a flourishing society, still enrolling the little ones as organized laborers in the Master's vineyard.

Her intelligence and tact, combined with sympathy for the poor and unfortunate; her love for humanity that prompted her to stoop to lift the lowest, made her particularly useful in this branch of the Woman's Home Mission Society.

God has called her away in the bloom of her womanhood, when we thought she would labor with us for years to come. We shall miss her wise counsels, her charming personality and her beautiful face when the society meets, but we thank our loving Father for the sweet memory of her life. We praise him that "we mourn not as those who have no hope," but look joyfully forward to meeting her when the workers have all been gathered in the paradise of God.

As a society, we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the sorrowing children, and lovingly pay this tribute to the memory of lamented Alice Johnson. MRS. RONAIR KEMP,
For the Committee.

Died near Campbellsville, Miss., June 27, 1901, ALICE, infant daughter of Frank W. and Lizzie U. Sharbrough. She was born March 13, 1901, and on June 27 was dedicated to God by baptism, the writer officiating. She was always a frail, though fair flower; too frail for the fields of earth, where tempests sweep, where Summer's blight and Winter's chill must fall. Her very delicacy drew her parents' hearts the closer to her, and makes them to feel her loss the more. It has fallen to their lot to be much bereaved. Four little ones have been taken from them. Though sad to yield them up, they constitute a four-fold cord, drawing parental hearts toward that land where "there shall be no more death; neither pain, nor sorrow, nor crying."
M. B. SHARBROUGH.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Happiness does not consist in the enjoyment of the pleasures of the world. Worldly gratification is superficial and short-lived. A man might drink at every fountain of earthly indulgence, and go away unsatisfied and restless. Solomon's experiment attests unto us. The world was at his feet. The empire of pleasure was wide open. He gave himself up to voluptuousness. But in vain. His heart was still disquieted within. The pleasures of life could not reach deep enough. He needed God.—Texas Advocate.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

We can live so nobly, not in despite of the great sorrows and bereavements, but because of them, that our life shall be a gospel, though we can never write or frame one with our lips. —Robert Collyer.

GROCERY MONEY SAVED

Hundreds of housewives are glad they sent for King's Price List. They're saving money every week. You might just as well be saving, too.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest curricula for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses. A corps of teachers, every one of whom is a specialist in his department.

Choral: the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent with the renowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg, one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as its Director, and with no teacher in it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country, has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every Department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent four-story brick building recently named by the Trustees "Roberts Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and affording eight large Lecture Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible, as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. I am a preacher of the M. E. Church, South, located in the town of Verbena, Ala. My brother, Rev. E. E. Cowen, recommended the Lemon Elixir to me Ship me a half dozen large bottles C. O. D.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of a long-standing case of chills and fever by using two bottles.

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

AND

OXFORD, MISS.

High in Grade, Thorough in Scholastic Requirement, and Pre-eminently Religious.

The buildings are excellent, thoroughly equipped and furnished. Modern conveniences, electric lights and waterworks. Large and well-trained Faculty. Advanced curriculum. RATES REASONABLE.

We claim that few schools, if any, in the South offer better advantages for a High Grade Academic and Collegiate Education. For Art, Elocution and Music we also claim equal advantages. Let those who want their daughters accomplished in Music send them to our Conservatory. The latest and best methods are used. New pianos for practice. Ensemble playing is given special prominence, and has awakened much interest in the Conservatory. The Virgil Practice Clavier used. Special instruction in technique given by accomplished teacher, free of charge. LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC ORCHESTRA.

Next Session Opens September 11th, 1901.

Oxford, the seat of THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE, is a school location second to none in the South in point of healthfulness and culture.

RACE PREJUDICE.

An Associated Press dispatch from Archbold, O., says: "A young colored man of this place has appealed to the United States Marshal at Toledo for protection. He was turned over to Attorney-General Sheets, who advised him to appeal to the sheriff of Fulton county. He said he had done so, but had been advised that nothing could be done. Saturday night he was rotten-egged and stoned in an attempt to drive him out of the town, as the citizens of Archbold are determined no colored man should live there. His character is said to be very good." This species of oppression and cruelty toward the negro would not be possible in any Southern community. A well-behaved young negro wanting work is welcome anywhere south of the Mason and Dixon line, and in the great majority of instances he can get what he looks for. There is a marked contrast between the sentiment prevailing in Northern communities where no negro is allowed, and that of the Carolinas and Georgia, where the people violently expelled emigration agents seeking to induce negroes to move to the alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta. Northern communities regard the political race question in the South from a theoretical point of view, and insist on "equality before the law;" but when it comes to personal contact with the negro, they are less friendly to him than is the Southern white. The races, as a rule, in the South approach each other with a mutual understanding and respect for the attitude of the one toward the other that is hardly possible in the North.—Nashville Banner.

LABOR STRIKES.

A great point will be gained if the contention between the United States Steel Corporation and the Amalgamated Union of Steel Workers establishes the doctrine of the equality of rights in the industrial world. Says the New York Sun: "As long as the laws of the States and of the United States are fearlessly and impartially enforced, the right of the American workman to work for his living and for the support of those dependent upon his labor, and to choose for himself his own employment and his own employer, will be vindicated and preserved." Another gain for labor is the determination of large bodies of union workingmen to recognize the sacredness and to regard the inviolability of contract. They positively and rightfully declare that their membership in a union does not release them from their contract obligations with the steel companies, and hence they refuse to obey the order to strike. The Chicago lodge put it in these words: "We do not wish to bring the Amalgamated Association into disrepute with our employers, all labor organizations, or the general public, by breaking a contract at this time." — Christian Intelligencer.

THE MATTER OF LYNCHING.

The New York Times is disposed to question the efficacy of the dissuasive arguments used by Southern papers in the matter of lynching. It says there are many lynchings, despite the moralizing of the newspapers. Our contention is, that there would be many more if the newspapers kept silent or advocated lynching. We modestly refer to home experience, where one uncertain word from the Register would surely have been followed by a lynching. The fact is, that this paper has steadfastly maintained that lynching is wrong in morals, and injurious to those who take part therein, and to the communities where lynchings are permitted. We believe that this course has had good effect. The Times says that the Southern press rarely commends the officials who shoot to kill when would-be lynchers have refused to let the law take its course. Surely the Times has been inattentive, else it would have observed the well-nigh universal praise of Sheriff Smith, of Jefferson county, who "shot to kill," and the sheriff over in Georgia, who, with but two to support him, put to flight a mob, and Sheriff Kyle, of Tuskaloosa county, who, single-handed, defied and defeated those who came to take a negro from his custody. —Mobile Register.

OPENING ADDRESS.

Address delivered at the Arcadia District Conference by the presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Notestine, and its publication requested by the Conference.

This seems an appropriate time to sum up something of the year's work thus far, and to consider some things that encourage us, and some that call for improvement in the district.

We are pleased to note in the beginning that there is a quickening interest among the pastors. Not only is the preacher in charge "the key to the situation;" there is no other that will fit it. If you can not turn him, use him; there is little hope of bringing things to pass. I would not utter a word that could be construed as placing a light estimate upon the consecration or efficiency of the men of God who have given themselves to the shepherding of the Lord's flock; but, brethren, if our work is "Enough to fill an angel's heart, Did fill a Savior's hands,"

we need to give all diligence, both to our Christian living and to those qualifications that are essential to our largest usefulness, if we are to render acceptable service to our Lord and Master. While I can not subscribe unqualifiedly to the saying, "Like priest, like people," our relation to the church and its interests is such that ours is a fearful responsibility. If we see that our people are uninformed, let us ask ourselves who are their teachers. If they have low ideals of Christian life and duty, who gives them their ideals? Let us see to it that we are leaders in every sense, able to teach the truth "as it is in Jesus," knowing the mind of the Spirit, and keeping so near our Lord that our example will teach what we scarcely need say in words, "Follow me, as I follow Christ." It is still true, after all, that God has revealed to us and wrought through us that we need a broader view, a higher ideal of life and service, and a deeper Christian experience. "O thou that bringest glad tidings, get thee upon the mountain!" The mount of heavenly visions! the mount of sacrifice and consecration! the mount of transfiguration into the divine image!

Brethren, I believe you are "going on to perfection," but suffer me to urge you forward. The membership —at least, in part, and that the more representative portion—appear to be seeking more from God, and are ready to attempt more for him and his cause. I have noticed with gratitude that there has generally been a hearty responsive sentiment when the subject of consecration has been presented, and I believe that more is being laid upon God's altar than ever before in the history of the district. The belief that growth in knowledge is an essential in the development of Christian character is growing among the people, and the ministry is assuming more and more the teaching function of the gospel. The people are hungering for information, and instructive preaching is the most popular everywhere, provided it is also spiritual.

Good literature has a growing constituency, whose interest and blessing through it will act as a leaven on the hard and obstinate lump of humanity which has been so difficult to reach and so slow to learn. The pastors are showing a renewed diligence in distributing good books and securing subscriptions to our Advocates, but much more remains to be done, and should be done, in this direction. The hope of a substantial and abiding work lies in the intelligence of our people. The power of the church lies in its spirituality; its permanency in its knowledge.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

The time is past when we can reasonably expect our worship to please God, if it is conducted in a building fit only as a habitation for muddaubers and flying-squirrels, roughly furnished and practically uncared for. Such will do when we can do no better, but under existing circumstances we can and should do better —and we must; can I not say we will? I can, if you, my brethren, will say Amen! to these sentiments.

CHURCH SERVICES.

Our church services are suffering serious loss from a great lack of form and reverence. As a rule, the people have to be told to stand up for the first hymn, or they remain seated without the thought of anything unusual in form. The habit of kneeling in prayer is not as general as it should be, especially in the congregations in the towns. At no place in the district have the congregation, or any considerable portion of them, joined in the Lord's Prayer in the conclusion of the first morning prayer, as directed by the Discipline; and in one or two instances the pastor himself did not do so. Our people seem to be largely ignorant of the form of administration of the Lord's Supper. They do not join in those parts intended for them, and often do not know that they are dismissed, because the benediction is pronounced while they are kneeling.

Our churches are not respected as they should be, or, rather, the Lord is not respected in his house. In some places almost every kind of recreation seems to be allowed, even the smoking of the abominable cigarette. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom"—a foundation stone in the church of God. Let us, as master-builders, have a care to lay it well.

There is not the loyalty to and confidence and pride in the church that there ought to be. Our people need to be taught that our beloved Methodism comes nearer representing the New Testament doctrine and polity than any other church. Its creed does not need constant explanation, lest men's sense of right be outraged. It proclaims a whole gospel for the whole world. It teaches that Christ is the Savior of all men; that "in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Our creed is the Apostle's Creed, and like them, we offer the sacraments to all believers. We do not ask to be tolerated, but lay an indisputable claim to the true apostolic succession: "Fruits unto holiness, to the glory of God the Father."

Another real evil that demands persistent attention is the correction of our vocabulary on the subjects of baptism and holiness. We are willing to have immersion called baptism, but we can not afford to have our people speak of it as such, and at the same time speak of baptism by affusion as "sprinkling," as is often the case. No organization or church has any right to the distinctive title of holiness; not that they may not accept the doctrine and possess the experience, but because this is no distinguishing mark. Methodism is a holiness organization, a holiness church. Every Methodist preacher is a holiness preacher, and every Methodist Christian is a holiness Christian. This terminology that is becoming all too common, in some instances even with the ministry, is doing infinite harm, because the impression made is infinitely false. We owe it to the church, we owe it to the cause of truth, we owe it to a gospel of full salvation which we believe and preach and experience, to correct this evil.

MISSIONARY INTERESTS.

There is inspiration in the fact that the people are awakening to a sense of their divine obligation and privilege in relation to a world-wide gospel. There is not a little hard-shellism in the church in many places, and there has been a degree of indifference on the part of others who profess to believe the whole gospel that was almost scandalous. Many who considered themselves as representative church members have had a clear conscience after contributing twenty-five cents a year to the cause, and there has been scarcely any real self-denial practiced, while a large majority have given absolutely nothing toward the cause. Yet there has been progress that is encouraging. Year before last the district paid less than 21 cents per member. Last year it paid a little more than 25 cents per member. Surely this year we ought to be able to pay 31½ cents, our full assessment; and we hope, by the blessing of God upon a united effort, to do it. Brethren, let us resolve to succeed, whether crops fail or not. God will not fail us. His promises are sure and steadfast. Let us go forward. We are able to take the world for Christ. Lord, give us the courage of faith!

The questions of dancing and card-playing are up for discussion again. They have been discussed for ages past, and, likely, will be for ages to come. These questions will not down at any man's bidding. That dancing and card-playing are diversions inimical to piety is self-evident. Spiritually minded people do not participate in these diversions; they do not sit by and look on while they are in progress, and pious people do not permit them in their homes. There is not an earnest, consecrated pastor in any church in the land who will not verify these statements. These things, where permitted and enjoyed, are the cure and certain signs of worldliness. They are the symptoms of the disease. It is needless to doctor the symptoms and let the disease remain. It will show itself again in this or some other form. The devil seems to have formed a trust or combination against our young people on these questions. If a girl goes to a party and does not dance, or will not play cards, why, she is called "a wall flower," and the boys leave her severely alone. She gets no attention and has no company. She is outlawed from what is called society. The devil is a wise, artful and skillful leader. His devices and machinations show him to be intimately acquainted with human nature. He knows how to come up on the blind side of men and women. Mothers and fathers do not like to have their daughters ostracised from society, nor to hang as "wall flowers" at public gatherings, and so they consent for Mary to dance, and to take a hand at "progressive euchre," and to go all the gaits of the young crowd. From that day on, or, at least, till she is thoroughly worldly minded, Mary is the "belle" of the neighborhood. The devil is a safe and prompt paymaster. He gives his followers what they seek, promptly and in good measure. Mary has gained the admiration of the boys, and she has lost the love of Christ, and all interest in the salvation of her own soul, or the salvation of other souls. She may still sing in the choir on occasions, solos, duets, and quartets, when she can exhibit herself, and her dresses and charms, and gain the admiration of the people; but religiously, spiritually, she is as dead as Hector. The whole thing is a worldly performance by a worldly minded woman to gain the applause of the worldly minded multitude. Vanity is at the beginning, middle and end of it—"all is vanity." Mary, her own dear self, is the main part of the whole service. Woe be to the pastor if he objects to this essentially worldly interlude in the midst of divine worship. I have sometimes thought it might be well for the pastor to say, "We will pause in the worship of God while Miss Mary, of german and euchre fame, exhibits her musical gifts before this audience." In many cases this would state the facts. When the sons of God go up to worship, Satan always goes up among them. He goes into the pew, choir, and pulpit. No place, except a holy heart, is too sacred for His Satanic Majesty. He goes to the communion table; he delights to have rival musicians in the choir. They make things red-hot for the pastor, and often for the whole church and community.

For the purposes for which they were intended, I think I can safely and heartily commend card-playing and dancing. As worldly amusements for worldly minded people, they seem to be perfect successes. There is no discount on them along this line. They are not nearly so bad, vicious and wicked as some other forms of sin; but they are just as sure to kill piety, drive out the spirit of prayer, and destroy all interest in the work of God, as murder, adultery, profanity, or dissipation. Truly pious people never engage in the modern dance, nor do they play cards. Those who love the dance and card-table do not love God's Holy Word, God's house, divine worship, prayer, praise, and preaching. This has always been so, and always will be. They are essentially, inherently, worldly amusements for worldly minded people. No kind of gloss and no amount of 'palaver' will ever change the nature of them. They would be the same, and would lead to the same results, if adopted as a part of the public worship in our churches. The nature of them would remain the same. They are fleshly, sensual, and devilish forms of diversions. It is for this reason the church opposes them. The church is doing right in this. If all the dancers and card-players were to crowd into any one professedly religious organization, they would weight it down with dead weight.

GILDEROY.

SUGGESTIONS.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN, D. D.

"The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear;
Oh, may we all remember well
The night of death draws near!"

How these lines carry me back to the days of long ago; to the days of Wiggins, Peirce, Barton, the elder Featherston, and "Uncle Dilley" (an honored local preacher), when singing was a part of the family worship when the minister was present. Back to the days when I knelt at a fond mother's feet, and said my "Now I lay me down to sleep;" to the days when I was led by a father's hand to my place in the old church, and where many happy hours were spent in peaceful slumber. Yet there remains to this time a consciousness of impressions made at these services, and one sermon from the text, "If a man die, shall he live again?" will never be forgotten. Days of my purest life and truest faith; days when no question of science disturbed my conceptions of God. That God was everywhere, saw and knew everything, and was in everything, I questioned not. "Simple, child-like faith," they say. Well, I've never been nearer to God than in those days.

Yes, "the day is past and gone;" the shadows of another Holy Sabbath have closed in upon us. All is still; every sound is hushed except the whirr of the beetle or the chirp of the cricket. All the world is wrapped in peaceful slumber. What shall be the fruitage of this day in the great eternity?

Three sermons and a drive of twelve miles is most too much this hot weather for my nervous system to recover from quickly, and bid the sleep god welcome. My appointment was for Holly Bush and New Providence, in the flat woods—"hog wallow flats"—of North Rankin; newly worked (at) roads, water soaked from recent rains; pipe clay, prairie mud, corduroyed crossings. Only the initiated can understand, and the inexperienced must needs come and see to have the faintest conception; a testing of the strength and endurance of both man and beast. After such a pull of thirty miles, or more, the faithful nag deserves better than a supper of "cut corn." Surely we traveled together in pain this trip. Good congregations greeted us at all three places. Quarterly Conference well attended, but the response to Question 8 was—well, any respectable farm laborer has received more for his services, and the charge that money is the object of our preaching was given a most emphatic negative. The pastor of this work might give to the brethren some interesting thoughts on economy; lessons on how to live and keep out of debt on next to nothing.

Well, I have let my pen run into a strain unwelcome to your readers, but what I have written, I have written in sorrow. When will our people support their pastors as they pay their laborers? He is as "worthy of his hire" as any other man. That article from the pen of Bro. E. A. Enochs, of Natchez, in your issue of Aug. 15, is worthy of his noble spirit, and should find a place in all of our papers; the honest expression of a true man and generous soul.

Miscellaneous Notes.

Within the past twenty-five years more copies of the Bible have been distributed in China than were distributed in the whole world at the beginning of the nineteenth century.—Review of Missions.

Recently four hundred school teachers from this country were sent by the government to the Philippines. Upon reaching Honolulu, 2,200 miles from San Francisco, sixty of them were married. How many were married after they reached Manila, 5,000 miles further on, we have not heard.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, of Algiers, endorses the pamphlet on missions by Dr. C. W. Carter. In a personal note he says: "I have read it with interest. It is inspiring, instructive, and helpful. Every Methodist should read it and ponder the truths. I pray that it may bring forth an abundant harvest of precious fruit."

Our government paid in way of pensions, during Gen. Grant's administration, $29,000,000 annually. The appropriation annually now is $140,000,000. Our annual expense for pension, army and navy, amounts to over $330,000,000. This exceeds the expense of the standing army and navy of any other military nation except Great Britain, which amount exceeds our own by $13,000,000.—From the Call.

What Our Editors Say.

OUR CONSERVATISM.

The conservatism of Southern Methodism has been its strength in the past. It has been a providential breakwater against not a few extravagances in Methodism, as well as against some dangerous opinions that have been all but national. Its office is to continue such a conservative force, for the need for its service in this particular is not past; prophecy calls for its continued separate existence on the principles held by it in the past. But Southern Methodists must not imagine that their whole existence and the sum of their effort is expressed in conservatism. There is a conservatism which leads to disintegration and death. We must not permit our precedents to leave us stationary. It is not enough to stand for something historically great, or even necessary to the logical present. We must go forward to that which is greater. The kingdom is before us, though honor be behind and about us. We must join issues in the living contests of to-day; we must align ourselves with those who have a mind to press the battle. We can not dwell alone or apart. The world is a community, a fellowship. In the Epworth League, that is in dealing wisely and justly with our young people; in the cause of missions; in demanding a higher standard of culture and efficiency in our ministry, and of consistency in the laity, and in broad fellowship with other Christians, and especially other Methodists, we must take no backward step. We must go forward.—Epworth Era.

LAW ENFORCEMENT.

The motto of the Anti-Saloon League is the correct one. Nothing has so much discouraged temperance work as the fact that the best legislation and the strictest laws often fall dead. They have not strength enough to walk. The whisky business has a fearfully strong spinal column. Cunning, audacious, persistent, unscrupulous, lawless, it will not down at the mere making of the laws. It is lawless. What saloon keeper professes to obey the law? When forced to obey he parades his obedience as a virtue. It is not the law he respects, but police force. No whisky dealer proposes to obey the law unless he is compelled to do it. How desperate, then, is the blind-tiger man, who invades your prohibition community to make your prohibition a dead letter; to decoy your boys, and for a few dollars in his pocket destroy them soul and body. A thief is a man of honor compared with him. Chase him out. After you have made the law what it should be, enforce it. If you find your officers have connived at this accursed business, chase them out. Hold the officers responsible for enforcing the law and never let up until the moral atmosphere is purified.—Arkansas Methodist.

DOCTRINAL PREACHING.

There can be no deep and abiding evangelical spirituality without placing tremendous emphasis upon these fundamental doctrines of the gospel. The fathers of Methodism whose preaching fired America in the earlier part of the past century were doctrinal expounders pure and simple. We need in this day a revival of this sort of preaching. The church is languishing on account of a dearth of it, and our pulpits are producing men of small caliber because of their failure to search into these deeper things of God. Surface preaching, miscalled practical preaching, is giving to us a generation of mediocre preachers and a membership, for the most part, of lean and ill-fed Methodists. We need to return to the old doctrinal paths in order to build up the church in righteousness, develop a higher order of preaching, and to confirm our people in the experience and practice of the deeper things of the Scriptures.—Texas Christian Advocate.

DON'T MAKE THE CHILDREN PAY THE COST.

Because of the drouth there will be diminished incomes to many of our people this year. The plan to build an addition to the house, or to refurnish it, or to buy an adjoining tract of land, may need to be given up. But don't give up the plan of sending the children to school. You will get through this little pressure without permanent harm if you can save yourself and your children from paying the cost in mind and moral character. You will pass this stress with little injury. A year lost from the education of your children would be a life-long injury to them. Relinquish your plans for larger gains and defend yourself against the greatest loss by resolving that the little financial pressure you may experience during the coming year shall not dwarf the mind of your son or daughter, or cut them off from the chances of the best success in the future. —Arkansas Methodist.

TWENTIETH CENTURY REVIVAL.

We have not abated one jot or tittle of interest in the longed-for twentieth century revival. Nor have we changed our judgment that it is the matter of supreme importance. The Thank-offering Fund is indispensable, and we dare not fail in raising it. But far beyond this great cause is the revival of the church of God. The renewing of believers, the reclaiming of backsliders, the regeneration of sinners—these are worth more than billions of gold and silver. As man in value towers high above money, so what benefits him is beyond comparison with all material things. The revivals is the grandest aim of the century. There have been revival in some places. But we must not cease until the tide of salvation rolls from the seashore to the mountain-tops, until city churches and country charges are alive with the power of God.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE EVIL TO BE FEARED.

It is not the bold, brazen temptations that are the most dangerous to the young, but the insidious, persistent influences of evil that are to be feared. Most well-reared young people will resent an open solicitation to sin, but are not on guard against the taint that settles as a mist upon the mind. Without active desire and almost without conscious knowledge the former stays of faith are removed and gradually the whole attitude toward religion becomes changed, and indifference and distaste conquer where flaunting sin had failed. A man must with diligence keep his heart.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

A BELATED DIGEST.

We are puzzled to know why the editor of the Literary Digest should give a whole page of a recent issue to reproducing from an English newspaper, of whose existence the public was hitherto innocent, a rehash of threadbare arguments against missions. The citations are, without exception, from the controversies which raged about fifteen years ago, out of which, as every well-informed person knows, missions emerged triumphant. Enough has been said within recent months to furnish the Digest with quotations, if it feels that it must attack this cause. To rake up the exploded arguments of more than a decade ago is hath gratuitous and futile. To quote the attacks of last year might be equally useless, as they have all been answered, but it would at least exhibit somewhat more of editorial enterprise.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

WITH A SMILE OF INCREDULITY.

The enterprising newspaper reporter from this time until the sitting of the Methodist Sanhedrin in November will print many guesses as to "the appointments." The Methodists know that no one knows, at this time, where the Bishop will assign the preachers. A person with moderate acquaintance with our system is aware that even at the last meeting of the "Cabinet" (the Bishop and the presiding elders) during the last night of a Conference session changes are made—important ones; hence the reporter, however clever, can not know the unknowable. Take his guess with many grains of salt. He is aiming at nothing and hitting it.—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

"BAPTIZO" IN PROFANE LITERATURE.

It is admitted not only by scholars, but by some of the lexicographers themselves, that 'baptizo" is used differently in classic Greek to its use in the Scriptures—that is, in the Bible it is used in a ritual, religious sense, which was not the case in classic Greek. Whatever may have been the primary meaning in classic Greek, the mode as employed among the Jews, and practiced in apostolic times, was sprinkling. Classic Greek really has nothing to do with the scriptural mode of baptism; neither have the lexicons. It is altogether a question of the Scriptures and apostolic interpretation. However, we willingly follow our immersion friends into their supposed stronghold of profane literature, and we discover that "baptizo," like its father, "bapto," primarily means to sprinkle. The family likeness is not only maintained, but "it is a chip off the old block," though grown somewhat stronger.

The same thing said anent many of the lexicons on "bapto" can be said concerning their giving plunge, dip, immerse, as meanings of "baptizo." They were made when immersion was the enforced law of the land, based on immersion sources and influences, and simply give the current meaning rather than the primary. To accept them as discussing primaries prove their testimony as worthless when considered in the light of the earliest known passages —the only way of determining the primary meaning.

It has been shown by scholars that there is not a single passage in Greek literature from Pindar, the poet who first uses the word, down to Polybius (born B. C. 203), and through a period of more than three hundred years, in which "baptizo" means to dip or immerse. In its earliest known occurrences it is applied to bespattering people with abusive epithets, pouring a torrent of invectives. It is so used by Pindar, the Greek poet, and by Aristophanes, B. C. 450, who uses it next. Plato, the great philosopher, comes next (born B. C. 429), and he uses it in the sense of overwhelm when questions are poured upon the subject. Alcibiades, B. C. 400, comes next; used by him in the sense of besprinkle, or pouring bitterest streams of abuse. Demosthenes, B. C. 385, next uses it once, and in the sense of bespatter or asperse, the same as Pindar and Aristophanes. Aristotle (born B. C. 384) is the first known writer to use it literally. Speaking of places near the land inhabited by the Ptoeoniians, he says, "When it is ebb tide are not overflowed (mae baptidzesthai), but at full tide are overflowed (kata kindzesthai)." This is a case where "the element comes upon the object. The land is not dipped; it does not penetrate into the water, nor sink into it; is not immersed, but overflowed by the rushing water." Moreover, he uses "kata kindzo" synonymously with "baptizo." The primary meaning of "kindzo" is "bedash, sprinkle, or infuse water."

In tracing the word philologically and chronologically, scholars have shown that "baptizo" primarily meant "to sprinkle," thence to pour, thence to wash, to saturate, to drench as the effect of pouring water. Then it came to mean to soak, intoxicate, make drunk. From pour came overflow, overwhelm; from overwhelm came sink as a later meaning still; from sink came drown as its effect. Let it be remembered that no lexicon in existence gives to 'baptizo' the meanings of dip or immerse till Polybius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and Plutarch."

The idea more or less current that "baptizo" in classic Greek meant a dipping or an immersion in water is untrue to facts. It is admitted, even by immersionists, that "the idea of water is not in the word," either primarily or generally. Even where there is an "overwhelming" or "dipping," either partial or entire, the element is indifferently wine, honey, vinegar, wax, oil, milk, salt water, water, ointment, fire, etc. Or the pouring upon or dipping into is cares, calamities, debts, crimes, punishments, sorrows, ignorance, etc. "Every time," as one has well said, "in a bad sense."

Whatever else the reader may forget, let him remember that while "baptizo" in classic Greek afterwards came to mean dip, plunge, or immerse, its primary meaning is sprinkle.

FROM OUR MISSION ROOMS.

MY DEAR DOCTOR LAMBUTH: The Brazil Mission Conference adjourned last night after a most delightful and inspiring session. The celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary was a notable occasion. Our capacious and handsome Catete Church was crowded, and the well arranged programme was carried out most admirably. A great advance has been made since I was here four years ago. At this session we received five men on trial, and seven were ordained — three deacons and four elders. The net gain is nearly six hundred, and if the two hundred and fifty candidates in Rio Grande do Sul, now ready for reception, were included, we would report nearly a thousand. The membership of the church, as now reported, is 3,343. Over twenty-three contas of milries, which at present rate of exchange amounts to nearly six thousand dollars, has been contributed for pastoral support. The magnificent offering to the Twentieth Century Fund, when Bishop Hendrix was out two years ago, has been largely paid—probably two-thirds.

It was an occasion of great joy to the Conference to have present the brethren of Rio Grande do Sul. They were received with true Brazilian and Methodist warmth. Bros. Price and Wolling spoke at length and with great strength on conditions in that great and growing State. Facts in detail were given, and incidents related, to show that opportunities there are positively measureless. Think of such items as these: At Sao Lucas, where we have twenty members and forty candidates, they propose to build a church and parsonage, and only ask help in putting on a metal roof. At Tres Capoes, where we have twenty members and thirty candidates, they make a similar proposition. In the one case the cost will be about one hundred dollars; in the other about one hundred and fifty. If I have two friends in the United States who are desirous of roofing these properties, they are hereby authorized to communicate with you on the subject. At Os Vallos, where we have no organization, one hundred "Crentes"—believers—have gathered themselves together, and invited Bro. Price to come up and organize a church. At another large town, the name of which, for the present, is withheld, a Methodist Sunday-school of one hundred meets regularly in a Roman Catholic Church, and by permission. There are large sections in the western part of that most progressive State in which no Roman priest is to be found, and where he would not have a cordial welcome. But these people are without the gospel. Children five or six years old have not been baptized.

In fact, the whole Republic of Brazil is open to the gospel as never before. This report I get from missionaries of all the evangelical churches. Bro. Tucker, the agent of the American Bible Society, says it is absolutely impossible for him to respond to orders for copies of the Holy Scriptures. The Roman Catholic Church in many sections is positively discredited. Now is the long-expected opportunity for Protestantism in Brazil. Providential indications point to speedy and magnificent triumphs of grace, if the church at home will only provide the men and means.

When these facts come to me, and from so many and such reliable sources, I long for an army of peaceful, spiritual invasion to go up and possess this fair land for our Lord.

As further evidence of the rapidly changing sentiment, a petition has been sent up from leading citizens of Juiz de Fora, endorsing the proposition for recognition of our educational work. That is, the department of Federal Education is asked to give Granbery College the right to confer degrees, and they are to be recognized of equal merit with their gymnasium. Only citizens of literary, commercial or professional standing were asked to sign the petition, and it was gotten up by themselves and on their own motion. I will probably accompany the committee to-day in a call on the Secretary of Education. So you see the Granbery has already made a history, and must be better equipped for larger work. The key to our situation here, as in every mission field, is a well-trained, soundly converted native ministry. In a few more years, comparatively, if our colleges were endowed and equipped, we would need no more foreign missionaries in Brazil. But now, as never before, is the time to hurry forward recruits. I shall not be at all surprised if at the next session of the Conference there is reported a net gain of one thousand.

As the mail steamer sails in a few hours, I have not time to write more just now. On account of the slow passenger service between Rio and Rio Grande do Sul, I find it absolutely impossible, much to my regret, to quit that State and meet my engagement at the Ecumenical Conference in London.

Fraternally yours,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

BY DR. H. W. FEATHERSTUN.

Mary McLeod Dantzler, daughter of T. M. and E. M. Dantzler, was born July 29, 1876, in Macon, Miss., and died June 17, 1901, in Moss Point, Miss.

These dates mark the limits of one of the loveliest lives I have ever known. When I came to this pastorate I was told that there was an invalid in that home. In due time I called and found a beautiful woman evidently suffering from a pulmonary trouble, but so bright and happy that the visitor, rather than the invalid, was benefited by the pastoral call. Subsequent calls repeatedly made resulted in the same experience. Although we all saw that the fair form grew daily more frail, and that the end would not be far away, yet no one dared to mention death. It would have been strangely incongruous, for the life that never died was so radiantly manifest, and its beauty so rich, that all thought of death, or of anything else so dark, would have been much out of place; and then we did not need to ask her of her prospects for another life. We read all the beautiful hopefulness for her future in the life she was living. She talked little about religion, and said nothing about her experiences. She lived her religion, and her experiences, like her Lord's on Hermon, shone voiceless, but with positive expression in her face. Yet there was about it all a sweet naturalness that put her visitors perfectly at ease. Though often in pain, and oftener racked with a persistent cough, this brightness never left her. No rosy-cheeked girl with a flower-fringed path of life before her was ever more hopeful in her demeanor than was this frail and fair, but fading flower of womanhood. Thus she brightened other lives that came into the radiance of her own, constantly growing more frail in form and proportionately more radiant in spirit, until one bright June morning, before anyone knew just what was about to happen, the frail chrysalis broke, and the beautiful creature was gone to the realm of fadeless and ineffable beauty. We laid away the fair, broken form in a lovely spot by the flow of the Pascagoula, where the wild flowers blow and the wild birds sing. The beautiful life had passed from us, leaving a radiant memory, itself a rich legacy.

I made inquiry of this beautiful life, and learned a few salient facts: When quite a child her parents came to live in West Point, a hamlet straggling along the banks of the Pascagoula and Escatawpa rivers, and made up of cottages with strips of woodland between; a lovely village, fit-growing place for a beautiful life. At eleven years of age she joined the church. In 1899 she graduated from the I. I. and C. at Columbus, Miss., carrying her A. B. and a teacher's degree, together with the special esteem of the faculty and the love of the student body. She taught school one year before her graduation, and then after that event began as an assistant in the Moss Point Academy. Here in the midst of her work she fell ill, became an invalid, lingered thus for months, and so passed from us.

She had spent years of self-denial and toil to fit herself for life, and just as she enters upon that life's chosen career, and all the future is rich with high hopes and beautiful plans, she pales and fades and dies. Does it pay to toil and strive thus? Oh, yes; "death is only a quaver rest" in the music of such a life. It re-begins yonder just where it leaves off here, and there is nothing whatever lost. But, oh! the translation is so sad to these on this side left in their loss.

As I looked into the open grave about to hide away the fair form whence the chrysalis had flown, and remembered the long months of her invalidism, during which she had been so helpful to others, and the beautiful life thus ended, I thought of her Lord, whose transcendently beautiful life was a very short one, the close of which meant more to the world than all of its wonderful years, and I said: Thus she was like her Lord; she is "a Christed one."

THE SERPENT IN THE GLASS.

Many of the famous advocates of temperance are dying off, but there is one trumpet tongued orator who continues to sound his tocsin in every house that contains a Bible. It is the divinely inspired preacher who utters this tremendous warning: "Look not on the wine when it is ruddy, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it goeth down smoothly; for at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder!" Young man, listen to that loud and loving voice before you touch that glass of champagne; good woman, stop and think what you are about before you mix that big bowl of punch for your party; father, be careful how you put that sly serpent on your table, for some of your boys may get stung to death!

To break the terrible habit, and to shake off the serpent, requires such effort that few are permanently reformed. Some surrender to the inevitable, and go over the cataract with eyes open to their doom. A young man said to a friend of mine: "This awful drink has used up my money, ruined my health and almost killed my parents. It will soon kill me and send me to hell! I know it, and yet the habit is so strong that I can not stop." And he did not stop; yet when he began to sip his wine he never dreamed that he would die a wretched sot. Of all the deceivers that betray body and soul to damnation, none is so alluring and ensnaring as the glass.

It is strange that parents—many Christian parents—will allow it to come into their homes, and will provide it for guests. It is strange that, in spite of all the miseries suffered by drunkards' wives, so many young women are willing to marry young men who are in the habit of taking a social glass; they are playing with a viper; if their hearts are stung with agony, it is their own fault. No young woman should ever accept the hand of any young man if that hand ever touches an intoxicant. This stand resolutely taken by our women would increase the number of teetotalers immensely. If the above-mentioned things are strange, it is stranger still that churches, Sunday-schools and pulpits do not ring out oftener and more vehemently this heaven-sent tocsin: 'Look not on the wine! look not on the wine! it stingeth like a serpent and biteth like an adder!"—Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

Difficult Digestion

It makes life miserable.
Its sufferers eat not because they want to, —but simply because they must.
They know they are irritable and fretful; but they cannot be otherwise.
They complain of a bad taste in the mouth, a tenderness at the pit of the stomach, an uneasy feeling of puffy fulness, headache, heartburn and what not.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

THE INSTITUTE.

As we stated last week, arrangements are being made for a Sunday-school Teachers' Institute, to be held at Jackson, Miss, Sept. 18 19 and 20. The programme will shortly be published. But we wish now to emphasize the fact that the Institute is one of the best means we have for improving our Sunday-school work.

Teachers in day-schools know what an Institute means; that it is a season for study both of the matter to be taught and the best methods of teaching it. That is exactly what our Sunday-school teachers need. As a class, they are among the salt of the earth, and have done a wonderfully effective work in this vineyard. Their labors have been abundant, and will be rewarded at the last great day. All honor to the noble band who, through Summer's heat and Winter's cold, have been instant in season and out of season in leading their little flocks to Christ. And yet no one knows and feels their limitations because of the lack of training more than the Sunday-school teachers themselves. They are busy people, and but few of them have the necessary time for the extended study and training that will enable them to make the most of their labors. But most of them can spend two or three days each year in study at an Institute, where they can get the benefit of the knowledge, the training and the experience of those who have made a special study of the work.

We hope to see the day when every county and parish of our two sister States will have its annual Normal Institute for Sunday-school workers. But let us hear from our workers themselves as to whether they desire Institutes, and their ideas of the best methods of holding them.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

This is one of the youngest, but it is one of the most important branches of Sunday-school work. Possibly we should say that this is one of the oldest branches of the work, because Moses made it obligatory for the Jews to teach their children the Law. "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. vi, 7) That was the origin of the Home Department, but we, under the larger liberty of the Christian dispensation, have drifted away from the family altar, and have allowed worldliness to lead our children away, instead of grounding them in the teachings of the Bible. The woful ignorance of the Word in Christian America led a few consecrated people, less than a score of years ago, to organize our present Home Department to carry the Sunday-school to the homes of those who would not, or could not, attend the regular sessions.

It is a very easy matter to organize a Home Department. All that is needed is some one with a little time and love enough in their hearts to work up a class. And yet we know of only four or five such classes in Mississippi, most of them being in the schools of a sister denomination. Perhaps Louisiana has a better record. At the recent session of the interdenominational convention of Yazoo county, a superintendent of Home Departments was elected, whose duty it will be to arouse interest in the matter, and organize classes in as many schools as he can. Most of the affiliating schools of the county are Methodist; so we hope soon to have them in some of our Methodist schools.

Brethren, let us take hold of the Home Department. It means "going out into the highways and hedges, and compelling them to come in." It is home missionary work. It is a blessed means of sowing the seed of the kingdom.

We again cordially invite our Sunday-school workers to discuss any question of interest to our schools. Let your communications be short and to the point, and let's make it lively. Send in any Sunday-school news current in your section.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

FRENCH MISSION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The Lord has again favored us with a good revival—this time at our Isle Aux Cannes appointment. Our meeting closed there on Friday night, the sixteenth instant, after running a week. I was assisted by my brother, Rev. Wm. Hebert, whose faithful efforts God honored. We were greatly in need of a revival at that place. We had about thirty church members, but many of them had only been converted to Protestantism, and knew nothing about the new birth; but when we preached to them justification by faith and regeneration, the witness of the Spirit and entire sanctification as experiences held out to us by God's Word to be obtained and enjoyed in this life, they began to seek God in earnest, which naturally resulted in many bright conversions, the church being greatly revived and twelve added to its membership. We have hardly an adult member now but what will lead in public prayer, and many family altars have been set up. We feel greatly encouraged. Pray for us. Yours in Him,

Martin Hebert, P. C.

New Iberia, La., Aug. 20, 1901.

MANY, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: On Tuesday night, July 30, we closed a ten days' meeting at Many. Bro. Courtland P. Smith, the efficient pastor at Crowley, reached us on Monday evening, the twenty-second, and conducted the services to the close, preaching a full-orbed gospel in the demonstration of the Spirit and with power. Every service was deeply impressive. Result: Seven accessions to the church, about ten conversions, and the whole church unified and helped forward spiritually. Have had eighteen accessions to date, and have secured missionary collections in full. To God be all the glory.

Yours in Christ,

H. B. Thomason, Pastor.

Aug. 6, 1901.

GUEYDAN CIRCUIT.

Editor of the Advocate: Bro. Daniel Hayes, our Southwest Louisiana evangelist, went to Esterwood, Saturday, Aug. 10, and began a revival. He was assisted by the pastor of the M. E. Church. They preached until Saturday morning, when Bro. Hayes left. Our M. E. brother left the previous day. I arrived there on Friday, and continued the meeting until Sunday night. We had a glorious time. The Lord honored the preaching of the brethren. When I called for candidates for church membership, there were twelve, including one for the M. E. Church. Later I got another. There were six or seven conversions, the church was wonderfully revived, and the town was shaken as never before.

In the work for Jesus, I am,

Your brother,

A. A. Bernard, P. C.

TOPISAW CAMP MEETING.

One of the most gracious revivals ever held on Topisaw Camp Ground closed Friday, Aug. 16. The Lord was present, baptizing his people "with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The whole encampment was vocal with prayer, praise, and shouts of victory. There were more than sixty bright, happy conversions Their testimonies and prayers were an inspiration. A fine class of young men and young women, all converted, was received into the church —six were baptized; also six children. Old troubles in the neighborhood were settled, family altars were erected, and a great many made a complete consecration of themselves to Christ for better service and higher Christian living.

The preaching was done by W. T. Griffin, M. L. Burton, H. C. Brown, J. W. Chambers, B. F. Jones, J. W. Sandell, L. S. Jones, J. P. Drake, F. M. Keen, and C. W. Crisler. It was full of the Holy Ghost, a "feast of fat things," and "good to the use of edifying." It was pointed, practical, convincing, uplifting, and full of the gospel. It proved the power of God unto salvation and sanctification.

I never saw such unanimity of spirit among preachers and people, such brotherly love, such earnest prayer, such intense desire for the salvation of souls, and so many direct answers to prayer. Truly the Lord has gotten unto himself a great name. Let all the people serve and praise him. Fraternally,

Chas. W. Crisler.

Brookhaven, Miss., Aug. 20, 1901.

FROM BINNSVILLE CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have closed my protracted meeting at Binnsville. I was ably assisted by Bro. A. T. Bell, of Shubuta, Miss. He did us some very fine work. His preaching is decidedly scriptural; his sermons clear and logically arranged, and all his arguments are substantiated by the Word of God. We had a number of conversions and six accessions to the church.

In my meeting at Blair's Chapel, Bro. Waldo W. Moore did the preaching. Bro. Moore is a practical gospel preacher, feeding the people on the pure Word of God. He is a man full of the Holy Ghost, and possesses a wonderful power. There were seven accessions to the church, and a genuine uplifting of the entire community. E. C. Grice, P. C.

NEW ALBANY CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor: We have held two of our protracted meetings on New Albany circuit. Bro. T. H. Dorsey was with us the third week in July at Ingomar, his old home. He did some earnest, faithful preaching, which was very effective. The church was greatly revived. There were twenty conversions and fifteen persons added to our church.

The second meeting was at Lynnwood, the new church that we have organized since Conference. We organized with seventeen members. There were twenty-nine members when the meeting began, and when it closed there were sixty-five members at that place. Bro. W. M Young, our presiding elder, was with us in this meeting. We began on Saturday, July 27, with the third Quarterly Conference. There was an immense crowd, but all seemed eager to hear the Word. Bro. Young did some as fine preaching as I have had. The Holy Ghost was present and manifest in every service. The interest grew from day to day. We were unable to accommodate the large crowds. There were at least fifty conversions, and thirty-six united with our church. The Lord be praised.

Yours fraternally,

J. B. Randolph, P. C.

If you will read the letter of Mrs. McKenzie, given below, you will find that she says—"I had uterine disease, also headache and pain in the side." Uterine disease is a common cause of headache, backache, sideache, nervousness and other womanly ills.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures uterine disease, and, therefore, cures the headache, sideache, etc., which result from a diseased condition of the womanly organism. "Favorite Prescription" is the best medicine for women. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult Doctor Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence held in strict privacy and sacred secrecy. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I took two bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and two of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am feeling well," writes Mrs. Dan McKenzie, of Lorway Mines, Cape Breton Co., Nova Scotia. "I had uterine trouble, also headache, and pain in the side. After taking your medicine I got well. You may publish this or use it in any way you think best, as I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Pierce and his medicines."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We call the attention of the preachers of the Meridian district to the fact that our issue of Sept. 12 will be Meridian district number, devoted to the interest of missions. Those who desire extra numbers of the paper will please send in their orders at once. We must know how many to print. Let us hear immediately.

The imaginary troubles of life are often more worrying to soul and body than many of our real ills.

So closely allied are grace and providence that one who is saved by grace is sure also to put his trust in providence, and to rest as securely in the one as in the other.

Human nature is such that under the very best conditions and training, it needs to be brought into subjection to the saving and directing power of grace.

The devil is shrewd and is sure to get the best of any man who undertakes to parry words with him over a question that ought to be carried directly to the Word of God.

The man who feels that he is strong enough to live without God, and good enough to live without grace, is next akin to the man whom the Bible declares to be a fool.

To knowingly and willfully follow an evil habit regardless of warning and advice is an evidence of moral perversity and blindness that God will not let go unpunished.

A Christian man is in great danger when he begins to argue with the tempter over a matter of conscience, for then the battle has already more than half-way gone against him.

There is more hope of an outbreaking sinner who trembles at the call of God, than of one who ignores the merits of the atonement and trusts in his morality as a passport to heaven.

Many disastrous wrecks and failures in life are to be accounted for, not for lack of enterprise and energy, but because the too self-reliant spirit does not listen to the dictates of prudence and good judgment.

Some men, flourishing like "a green bay tree," imagining themselves as good as saints and ready for association with the angels, are only "stall-feeding for damnation," and will have a painful awakening when it will be too late.

WALKING AFTER THE SPIRIT.

With the whole scope of St. Paul's thought before us, there ought to be no great difficulty in determining what he meant by walking after the Spirit. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." That is, those who are freed from the guilt, pollution and dominion of sin through faith in the atoning blood of Christ, are no longer condemned and separated from God, but are in Christ, and live not according to the lusts and dictates of the natural man, but according to the law of the Spirit.

Observe, then, that walking after the Spirit is walking according to the "law of the Spirit." And when we understand that the Spirit is the ruling force in the moral world, infinite in his resources and unrestricted in his methods of operation, we are prepared to appreciate the fact that he can rule in the heart of a good man, and so assist him in directing his course of life as well as govern him by laws written and duly recorded.

We utterly repudiate the idea that the Spirit, in his operations, is confined to the written Word. That would shut us up to the belief that all Scripture was communicated by word of month; that holy men recorded only what they heard. This would leave no room for inspiration, or the theory that "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." We do not for a moment doubt that God at sundry times spoke to the prophets, and through them to the world, but we do not believe that he confined himself to that method of communication. He also spoke in divers manners, and this includes the fact of inspiration.

Now, we argue that, if at any time the Spirit could so reach and inspire men as to enable them to make infallible communications, which for all times were to be the sole rules of faith and practice to men, he can now so reach them as to impress upon them the truth, and their duty to obey it, and also give them such assistance as is necessary to help them in the work. Did not our Lord use such words in reference to the Spirit as can not be satisfactorily interpreted except in accordance with this line of thought? "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." "He will bring all things to your remembrance." "He will guide you into all truth." In accordance with these declarations, St. Paul tells us that the "natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit; they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "The Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God." With these teachings of Christ and the apostle, it is easy to see that a man who has committed himself to God is so directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit as to feel his power, and be relieved of all difficulty in walking according to his law.

We would guard the searcher after truth against the delusion that the Spirit speaks to the soul so clearly and authoritatively that it is impossible to mistake his voice or misunderstand his directions. The Spirit may, and we believe he does, so powerfully impress men with a sense of duty, and mark their lives so clearly, as to leave them no room for doubt. But in every little detail of life, where human discretion and intelligence can safely act, we have no reason to believe that the Spirit speaks and specially dictates. There are some who tell us that they have so fully committed themselves to God that they have absolutely no will of their own, but depend on God to tell them what to do. In whatever they say or do they declare themselves justified by a direct command or permission. This is hard for us to believe, for we see them sometimes do unseemly, not to say foolish, things. It does not seem consistent to attribute folly to the Holy Spirit. One of these deluded creatures, whenever she undertook to talk or to do anything, invariably declared, "The Lord told me." She was seen one day to be prying into a lady's trunk, and when asked why she did it, replied, "The Lord told me."

We do not understand that the Lord, in sending the Spirit into the world, intended that he should supersede the Word, or make revelations to man through all the ages. Otherwise to good men, under the influence of the Spirit, the Word would be perfectly useless. Instead of referring to Scripture for instruction and direction, and exercising his senses under the general guidance of the Spirit, he would have nothing to do but to turn his ear towards heaven and listen to the voice of the Spirit. God's Word justifies no such proceeding. The Spirit is sufficiently watchful and careful of good men, directing and leading them, and guarding, opening their eyes, and helping them to understand the Word, without requiring them to abandon the use of their natural senses.

We should, as Christians, be content to seek to know the mind of the Spirit as revealed in God's Word, and be governed by it. That is walking after the Spirit. In matters that arise in the course of life about which we may be called to act, and which are not specifically mentioned in the Scriptures, we may and ought to seek the direction of the Spirit, and be guided by his leadings. That also is walking after the Spirit.

FILLING THE CHURCHES.

Naturally every pastor desires to preach to a full house. There is nothing inspiring in empty benches, and he knows the Lord's message can not reach absent members. How to secure a full house is a perplexing question. Some try to solve it in one way, some in another. Expedients are not always successful, and at best are of doubtful value.

A sensational preacher thought he had solved the problem by inviting non-church-goers to meet at an odd hour on Sunday, with a promise to leave off the prayers and the sermon, and give them a reading or a lecture by some leading layman. For a few Sundays this brought the curious crowd, but did not fill the pews with worshipers at the regular hours. After a few trials the hit was abandoned as a failure. It was a compromise with flesh and sin, and ought to have failed.

The Sunday evening sacred concert has been adopted in some places. The best singers are secured, and they entertain a full house for an hour. The preacher atones for this misuse of the hour by sandwiching in a little prayer and a sweet little talk between the solos and rag-time music. Of course, crowds of young people attend the sacred concert. They go for no good, and get no good. It does not increase the regular congregation, nor strengthen the people's love for the church or ministry. It does not build up the cause of Christ.

The latest expedient for filling the church of which we read has just been adopted in an English church. An actress has been engaged as the star performer. She does not conduct the service nor preach. The rector attends to all the minor details, omitting the sermon entirely. The actress recites something dramatic, and by her acting powerfully stirs the spectators. It is said that the rush for seats is something like the jam in front of a theatre ticket-office when a great play is on the boards. The rush for that church will last no longer than the actress remains. Then another and a better one must be hired, else the reaction will produce a chill and death. All such expedients are wrong, and will fail in the long run.

A Christian preacher, charged with the care of souls, has no right to adopt doubtful expedients to draw people to his church. The Lord's house is no place for secular lectures, or dramatic recitations; nor is Sunday evening the time for a sacred concert—so called. It would be far better to keep the house closed than to impress the young people that the Lord's house, and the closing hours of the sacred Sabbath, may be properly used for such purposes.

We are fully persuaded that if some of our brethren, who are anxious to fill their churches, would spend as much time and strength in personal effort to secure hearers as singers and choir-masters do to please those who attend their performances, they would have no occasion to resort to expedients of any kind. To us it seems like a confession of weakness or failure to resort to sacred concerts or to twenty-minute talks on popular themes in the hope of drawing people to his church. And, after all, if the house is filled during the concert hour, and smaller than usual at the regular services, harm is done, and the preacher has no one but himself to blame.

TOO MANY CHURCHES.

The multiplication of churches is thought by many to be not only unnecessary, but a real hindrance to the progress of the gospel. Possibly all agree in thinking that the multiplication of denominations is unnecessary, and that in certain communities, already well supplied, the introduction of another is superfluous. To support the churches we find in some communities, weak in numbers and resources, is impossible. In consequence, several churches in different sections unite, and are served by one man. Even then, however acceptable the service, it is inadequate by reason of the long interval between the preaching days, and frequently the churches thus combined fail to give the pastor a decent support.

To remedy the supposed evils, it has been suggested that the various denominations in a given community unite, and thus form one church strong enough to support one pastor and keep him busy at one place all the time. This, it is argued, would exemplify true Christian unity, and answer our Savior's prayer. This looks all right as a sentiment, but utterly loses sight of the great principles by which men are moved in the establishment of churches. On the supposition that such a union is all right, we would find it difficult to effect it. Which of the churches would consent to be sacrificed, or, would all surrender and organize a new one? If the latter, the move would add another to the long list of sects claiming to be churches. To secure the consent of any well-organized church, made up of conscientious and religious members, would be impossible.

Suppose such a move to be undertaken in any town in Mississippi of one thousand inhabitants where the three leading churches are established—Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian. Call the people together, it is likely that, after due discussion, a resolution favoring fraternity would pass almost unanimously, but no church would vote to surrender its charter, nor would the members vote to disband each other's churches.

Not every loyal church member believes that his church is the only one Christ has on earth, but he does believe that in some sense it is necessary to the spread of the gospel, and as long as he believes that, he is not only going to decline to be voted out, but he is going to do everything honorable to maintain its integrity and advance its interests. He will sacrifice much for its promotion, but he will make no concession to its injury. We confess to a deep-seated sympathy with such loyalty. The more men and women of that stripe we have, the better it will be for the gospel.

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS.

We offer our readers this week something unusual in the way of an address. It is by Rev. A. J. Notestine, delivered by him at the opening of the Arcadia District Conference. It is worthy of perusal. He offers suggestions, and calls attention to matters of importance. It is well to heed what he says. He calls attention to the loose and un-Methodistic manner some of the preachers have of conducting public worship, and the ignorance or indifference of the people in regard to our forms. He thinks it unseemly for the preacher to be compelled to tell the people when to stand in singing, etc. Of course, it is unseemly, and it would never be necessary to do so, or to ask them to kneel in prayer, if all our preachers would follow the instructions of the Discipline. But when one preacher follows one order, and another preacher another order, and another follows the Discipline, what are the people to do but wait for the preacher to tell them.

We can not understand how a Methodist with vows upon him, and plain instructions before his eyes, can improvise a form of worship of his own. Our Discipline makes no provision for standing in public prayer. Yet some of our preachers call the congregation to stand in prayer, and lead the prayer standing. We have known one or two of our Bishops to do it. What right has a preacher to ask the congregation to stand and be dismissed with prayer? And what right has a preacher, or anybody else, to dismiss a congregation with a long prayer, when the law requires the apostolic benediction? (II. Cor. xiii, 14:)

We ought to be uniform in our worship. And we can see no good, but evil, in one set of leaders trying to train our young members one way, and another set of leaders training them in quite a different way. If our order of service is all wrong, let us change it. But as long as it stands as it is, let us observe it. We hope Brother Notestine will succeed in his laudable work.

AT CRYSTAL SPRINGS.

It was the pleasure of the editor to attend the Crystal Springs (Miss.) Camp Meeting, which began Aug. 22. We went at the invitation of the Association, which invitation was seconded by Rev. R. J. Jones, of Crystal Springs station. Here the saints have been meeting for twenty-nine years, and God has graciously blessed their labors. Many people from the country round-about were tenters, and large crowds attended the services, especially at night and the middle of the day. Rev. Lewis Powell, of Nashville, and Mr. J. E. Schoolfield (we say Mr., because Brother Schoolfield is not a licensed preacher), of Danville, Va., were the leading preachers. A few sermons were preached by others. The editor preached twice, and we heard Rev. G. W. Bachman once. Rev. R. J. Jones and Rev. J. T. Leggett assisted in the direction of the services. We left a little after noon on Monday, and are, therefore, unprepared to give a full account of the meeting. The prospects were fair for a good work of grace.

We are under special obligation to Brother T. J. Millsaps, whose hospitality we richly enjoyed during our stay on the ground. May the Lord abundantly repay him for his kindness, and also his family, who were so attentive. We hope next year (Providence permitting) to stay on the ground a whole week. We look to Brother Jones to furnish us a full report of the meeting.

PERSONAL.

Persons having correspondence with Bro. N. A. Mott, of our Sunday-school Department, will please bear in mind that his address is Yazoo City, Miss., not Natchez, as we had it in our issue of Aug. 15.

The friends and acquaintances of Mr. Geo. W. Carley and family are informed that they are in distress, and need assistance to get to St. Louis. Mr. Carley is sick and unable to work. Any help given will be duly appreciated.

Rev. T. L. Mellen informs us that Mr. Thomas C. Bradford has been elected principal of the Montross High School, Forest district. He is most highly commended by Dr. Murrah and other members of the faculty of Millsaps College.

Dr. C. W. Carter, presiding elder of the Crowley district, has appointed Rev. A. A. Bernard to supply the Gueydan circuit in place of Rev. T. H. McClendon, who was obliged to retire from the work on account of sickness. Brother Bernard has sent us a report of a gracious revival.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Shannon, North Mississippi Conference, in a note to this office, says: "The protracted-meeting season is over with us. We had good meetings at each appointment. Twenty-three were converted at the altar, and the church has taken on new life. To God be the praise."

Rev. W. L. Anderson, of the North Mississippi Conference, is pursuing the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Course of Study, and endeavoring to organize Circles. The "Chautauqua idea," as it is sometimes called, is widely extended, and the Circles, generally, made up of our brightest and most active young people.

Rev. R. P. Neblett, who will enter the itinerant ranks next Fall, is an excellent leader of song. He had charge of the singing at Crystal Springs Camp Meeting, and gave entire satisfaction. He is much like his sainted father, whom we knew in years gone by. May he be as good and as useful, and live long to bless the world.

Rev. H. S. Johns, writing from Morgan City, La., says:

Prof. T. S. Sligh, of Mansfield Female College, has been with me, looking after the interests of his school. While Prof. Sligh does not profess to preach, yet he preached for me twice, and made a good impression at both Morgan City and Berwick.

Such facts in regard to our school men are worth printing. They are good recommendations.

The press dispatches announced last week the death of Dr. W. M. Leftwich at Los Angeles, Cal., where, but a few weeks since, he entered upon the pastorate of our church. We have heard no particulars of the sad event. We suppose his decease was sudden. Dr. Leftwich was one of our best preachers, and has been remarkably successful in winning souls. We sympathize deeply with his afflicted family.

Mrs. Julia Magruder, a member of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of this city, died at the residence of her son, Dr. H. P. Magruder, 3333 Magazine street, on the twenty-second of August. She was also the mother of Dr. M. J. Magruder, of this city. She was the widow of Dr. A. F. Magruder, of Yazoo City, and daughter of the late Rev. Richard Abbey, D. D, for many years a leading preacher of the Mississippi Conference. The above information comes to us from Rev. R. H. Wynn, her pastor. We hope to be furnished in due time with a suitable memoir.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

Occasionally some one says to me, "You don't go into the country, I suppose." If such an one had been with me the two weeks just past, he would no longer indulge such a conjecture.

Accepting an invitation of Rev. J. W. Ball, presiding elder of Grenada district, to accompany him on an itinerary of his work, I took a seat with him in his phaeton, drawn by his two spanking blacks, on Friday morning, Aug. 9. We drove from Water Valley, twenty-six miles, to Bro. John B. Countiss, where we received a preacher's welcome, and found a traveler's rest.

Saturday and Sunday was quarterly meeting, near by, at Pleasant Hill, for Pittsboro circuit. Rev. D. M. Geddie, P. C., a few officials and a good congregation of people were present. The meeting continued through part of the following week. We remained until Tuesday afternoon. I enjoyed very much these days of reunion with the few remaining ones whom I served as pastor in 1873, '74 and '75. Many of the noble band that worshiped there in those years have gone to their eternal home, others have moved away, while a few devout ones are still holding the ground. May they be "faithful unto death," and leave their beloved Zion in great prosperity.

On Wednesday we drove to Hurricane, where the Quarterly Conference for Ellzey circuit was held. We found Rev. A. A. Martin, P. C., holding a protracted meeting. A large congregation was present, to which Bro. Bell preached in the grove, the church not being adequate to the occasion. After dinner, which was served on the ground, Bro. Bell held Conference in the school-house, while I preached in the church. Both houses were filled with people, and the rain fell in torrents.

Thursday we drove eight miles to Pittsboro through rain and wind, where we found shelter, and enjoyed the hospitalities of kind friends during the next day, while it continued to rain almost incessantly.

Saturday morning we drove to Benela, Slate Springs circuit, where quarterly meeting was to be held, but neither the pastor nor any official member put in an appearance. We heard nothing from them, but suppose they were hindered by high waters.

Sunday morning Bro. Bell preached to a small congregation, and we returned to Pittsboro, where he preached at night.

Monday morning we traveled together to Air Mount, where he was to preach that night, but I availed myself of a conveyance going directly to Coffeeville, where I made connection with the train that landed me at home at midnight.

In these journeyings we preached, talked books, papers and Sunday-school work with fairly good success, and in hope of future fruit-bearing.

Bro. Bell magnifies his office. He is painstaking and diligent in his work, and is in good favor with preachers and people of the district, and is withal a delightful traveling companion.

The Sunday-school Board has engaged a competent man to conduct a series of Sunday-school Institutes during the Fall months—two or three in each presiding elder's district. The "plan" will be perfected and published soon.

Thank you, Mr. Editor, for your good editorials recently, and especially for those in the paper this week.

Sardis District—Nothing.

Durant District—Ackerman: Foreign, $66.

Aberdeen District—Amory circuit: Foreign, $50.

Corinth District—Corinth station: Foreign, $135.

Greenville District—Nothing.

Total for July: Foreign, $472.45; domestic, $9.05.

The smallest per cent. of our best charges have paid nothing. Only eight of the stations have paid anything. Six districts have paid nothing for domestic missions.

We have had several calls for help from brethren who are largely dependent on us for support, and we could do nothing for them.

Brethren, please send in your assessment for domestic missions within the next thirty days, so we can answer these urgent calls for help. "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Will not every pastor try to report something to the treasurer by the first of September? If an effort is made, it can be done.

W. S. LAGRONE.

Forest District Conference.

REPORT NO 2, COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.

DEAR BRETHREN: Your Committee on Missions submit this as their Report No. 2 on missionary campaign in this district.

We suggest that Missionary Mass Meetings be held in each pastoral charge, and at each church when deemed advisable, and that missionary leaflets be freely distributed. To further this we suggest the division of our district into sub-divisions, under the supervision of the General Campaign Committee called for by the recent Missionary Conference at New Orleans, as follows:

R. D. Noreworthy—Laurel, Vosburg, Rose Hill.

W. L. Linfield—Ellisville, Taylorsville, Raleigh.

P. D. Herdin—Montrose, Newton and Hickory, Decatur.

B. F. Lewis—Neshoba, Indian Mission, Carthage, Morton.

W. D. Dominick—Shiloh, Harperville, Walnut Grove.

W. M. Sullivan—Forest, Trenton, Lake.

Your committee do not understand that they are to hold these meetings in person, but co-operate with the pastors in planning and holding them.

We suggest that this committee be required to report to the presiding elder, Oct. 1, the amount paid for missions by each pastoral charge, with the deficit, and what plans are devised for collecting the same.

B. F. LEWIS,
W. M. SULLIVAN,
W. D. DOMINICK,
P. D. HARDIN.

Bernice, La.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: The Lord is wonderfully blessing us up here in these parts. We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Dubach, La., which began Aug. 11, and closed Friday, Aug. 16. During the week about one hundred souls were saved. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and the church revived to almost its highest pitch. At the morning service we would announce prayer service at different places in the town, to be held at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It is principally a saw-mill town, and those who are acquainted with such places know what it means when we say saw-mill town. So we would gather a band of workers and go to mill-town. The ladies who could not go with us would gather in the west end of town and hold prayer service. By so doing everyone so disposed could attend these services. We had glorious times at these evening prayer services.

I had with me the wonderful "boy evangelist," Rev. T. M. Finley, of Abilene, Texas, who is a genius for God, and the most perfect magnet I ever saw in man. People come far and near to hear him. The congregations are always very large and attentive. Men and women fall under conviction under his preaching. The M. E. Church, South, and especially Texas, should be proud of this most wonderful man. He is striving to educate himself, and become more efficient in his work, for which purpose he will enter the Georgetown University at Georgetown, Texas, some time in September. We hope to have Bro. Finley with us again next year during the revival season. We recommend him to all pastors who want a perfect magnet and genius for God to assist in revival meetings.

May the Lord bless all Christian workers and give them a gracious revival of religion during the remainder of this year.

Your brother in Christ.

W. H. JORDAN, Pastor.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE TOAD.

Toads, like frogs, lay their eggs in the water, but unlike those of frogs these eggs are laid in long strings or ropes, which are nearly always tangled and wound around the water-plants or sticks on the bottom of the pond on the edge of the shore. When the eggs are freshly laid and the water is clear these egg-ropes look like glass tubes with a string of black beads inside. This tube is of jelly, like the frog egg-masses. After a rain the black mud or sand on the botton of the pond or stream rises up and sticks to the jelly rope and covers it over.

Tree toads and salamanders lay their eggs in masses or singly in the water, but not in strings. In warm weather the toad-egg hatches out in two or three days. The egg should not be placed in the sun, but in a jar or water in a warm place. You can watch them and see how quickly the eggs change, until the little "polywogs" and tadpoles hatch out and swim away like the young ones of the frog. They live on the tiny plants that grow on the stones and mud at the bottom of the pond, and every week some of these, with the mud and little stones, should be placed at the bottom of the glass jar or little pool where the little eggs and tadpoles are to be watched, and the jar or tub must be filled with fresh water from the pond. The toad tadpoles are blacker than those of the frog. As the tadpole grows larger the tail grows shorter, until at last the legs of the toad appear. The head changes, and so does the body; it grows lighter in color, and when its tail is nearly gone it will crawl out on a stick or stone upon the land, and in a little while a very small toad goes hopping off and begins to snap up flies and the grubs that it lives on, which kill the green leaves of the plants in our garden. The toad is truly a friend of man in the garden.—Exchange.

GOD WILL BE DISAPPOINTED.

In a home where want was staring a family in the face, the father prayed very earnestly one morning at family worship that God would provide them with food for the day.

A few minutes after prayers there was a knock at the door, and when it was opened a man stood there with a large basket filled with provisions.

The address on the basket showed clearly that this was the house, but the father said promptly that there was surely a mistake. The messenger who brought it was confident he was right, but despite all he could say, the man who had just prayed for these very things ordered the messenger to take them away.

At this moment his little boy said: "Papa, I'm 'fraid God will be dreadfully disappointed if you don't take these things, 'cause you said once that he liked to give us things you asked for, and you just asked for bread and butter and meat, and here they are."

This was too much for the father, and he accepted the basket and its contents.

How many of us are sending up our petitions, and when the answers come we are so astonished that we are not prepared to receive the help for which we have prayed!—Selected.

SOCIABILITY—THE OTHER SIDE.

Mr. Perry was an old Southern gentleman, exceedingly polite. He would go out of his way at any time to avoid offending a neighbor or a friend. One day a neighbor met him on the street, with "Hallo, Mr Perry; I was just going to get a drink. Come in and take something."

"Thank you, Mr. ——, I don't care for anything," was the answer.

"But come in and take something just for sociability's sake."

"Now, I want to be sociable, but I can't drink with you."

"All right, if you don't want to be sociable, I'll go without drinking," growled the friend, and he silently walked along in the direction in which Mr. Perry was traveling.

Presently the pair drew near a drugstore, when Mr. Perry broke out with: "Mr. ——, I'm not feeling at all well to day, and I think I'll go into this drugstore and get some castor oil. Won't you join me?"

"What? a dose of castor oil?"

"Yes."

"Naw; I hate the stuff," saying which a chill went over the man as visible in its effect to Mr. Perry as if the ague had seized him on the street.

"But I want you to take a glass of oil with me, just to be sociable, you know."

The friend still refused, when Mr Perry said:

"Your sociable whisky is just distasteful to me as my sociable oil is to you. Don't you think I've as much reason to be offended with you as you have with me?"

The pair heartily shook hands, the dialogue was circulated in Covington, and Mr. Perry was never invited to drink again.—Courier-Journal.

I KNOW A THING OR TWO.

"My dear boy," said a father to his son, "you are in bad company. The lads with whom you associate indulge in bad habits. They drink, smoke, swear, play cards, and visit theatres. They are not safe company for you. I beg you quit their society."

"You needn't be afraid of me, father," replied the boy, laughing. "I guess I know a thing or two. I know how far to go, and when to stop.' The lad left his father's house, twirling his cane in his fingers, and laughing at the "old man's notions."

A few years later and that lad, grown to manhood, stood at the bar of a court, before a jury which had brought in a verdict of guilty against him for some crime in which he had been concerned. Before he was sentenced he addressed the court, and said, among other things: "My downward course began in disobedience to my parents. I thought I knew as much of the world as my father did, and I spurned his advice; but as soon as I turned my back on my home, temptations came upon me like a drove of hyenas, and hurried me to ruin."

Make that confession, ye boys who are beginning to be wiser than your parents.—Selected.

ELMA'S GRADUATION.

It was a pathetic little figure that sat at the end of the long seat which held the Henderson High School graduating class. Every time Miss Miles looked at the drooping shoulders of the pale-faced girl decked out in coarse muslin and cheap lace, so different from the filmy mulls and dainty trimmings of the other girls, her heart gave a quick throb of pity. She tried to forget her, and looked determinedly at her niece, Dorothy, who sat a few feet away, resplendent in her commencement finery, self-conscious and smiling, toying with her be-ribboned essay. But her thoughts and her gaze would come back to the end of the seat.

Presently, as bouquets and baskets of flowers began to be massed upon the table in front of the stage, to be in readiness for the graduates as they made their bows, she found herself wondering if the little hunchback had any friends to give her any. As if in answer to her unspoken query, she heard a voice behind her saying: "Now, if only we could 'a' got Elmie some flowers! All the other girls'll get 'em, most prob'ly. But it ain't any use to think of it: we couldn't 'a' done it, could we, mother?"

To which a voice replied in a whisper: "Now, father, don't you go to worryin' about bouquets. Poor folks can't have everything: and when their girl can look as nice as ours—good as any of 'em—I think they ought to be satisfied. She ought to be satisfied; and she is. She was so pleased with that lace! Don't it look nice? I'm so glad I listened to you and got it!"—Exchange.

DOWN WITH THE SALOON!

Down with the saloon! Let that be the slogan and every voice a trumpet to proclaim it.

Down with the saloon! It is God's relentless enemy, the nation's and yours.

Down with the saloon! It has no respect for home, the church, the Sabbath. It curses the one, blasphemes the other, and tramples upon the third.

Down with the saloon! It breeds violence and ruin. Twenty anarchists were dragged from an apartment of a Chicago groggery the other day. It was a fitting place for them. The two bad things mix.

Down with the saloon! It is pledged by the most infamous means to perpetuate its diabolical ruin. It fattens upon the corruption it breeds, and like the wrecker, enriched by the ruin it works.

Down with the saloon! It multiplies mad-houses and prisons and crowds their cells with brutalized, raving, cursing human wrecks.

Down with the saloon! It controls our politics, corrupts our legislators, intimidates our judiciary and insults every sense of decency with insolent contempt.

Down with the saloon! Its ranks are filled by troops of murderers, thieves, perjurers, tramps, libertines and harlots, who scoff at the restraints of society and thirst for blood.

Down with the saloon! It robs thousands of homes of their most promising boys, and all besotted and ruined, hurls them into drunkards' graves.—Exchange.

A BOY HERO IN PHILADELPHIA.

While a Philadelphia office building was falling down, W. H. Platt, of Glenolden, the elevator boy, kept his car running and saved all the tenants. He first discovered that one of the foundation walls was bulging, and warned the tenants to get out. Some did not heed him until the plate glass windows began to break, and then there was a grand rush. When the boy had brought them safely down, and was about to go himself, he remembered that the janitress on the top floor had not been told, and went to fetch her. As they were speeding down the shaft the building collapsed. Luckily the wall next to the elevator remained standing, and the two escaped through a rear door. It is thought that the building was undermined by some workmen digging in the street.—Little Chronicle.

DON'T GUSH.

The dictionary defines poise as "the state or quality of being balanced, equilibrium, equipoise—hence, figuratively, equanimity, rest." Poise instills grace and symmetry into the working of the mind just as physical exercise does into the movement of the body. It is rarely a natural endowment, but may be cultivated to the point where it becomes second nature. Poise always carries with it a suggestion of reserved force, and the woman who wishes to acquire it must learn to husband her energy as well as her time. She must not fritter away words, moments or emotions. The woman of poise indulges in few exclamations or superlatives, and does not waste enthusiasm over trifles. She is gracious, but never gushing, and she has acquired the habit of listening attentively, not awaiting with ill-concealed eagerness a pause in the conversation to enable her to rush in and take the floor. The woman of poise never lingers after her good-bye is spoken: never, in fact, under any circumstances, talks long while standing. She does not experience the difficulty too many people have of taking leave gracefully. She says good-bye, gives you a bright smile, and is off to the pleasure or duty that awaits her. You do not find out all there is to know about the woman the first time you meet her; you become acquainted with her by degrees and grow gradually into her friendship.—Woman's Home Companion.

ONLY A BOY.

There is a striking story of a certain missionary who was sent for, on one occasion, to go to a little village in an out-of-the-way corner of India, to baptize and receive into church fellowship sixty or seventy adult converts from Hinduism.

At the commencement of the proceedings he had noticed a boy about fifteen years of age sitting in a back corner, looking very anxiously and listening very wistfully. He now came forward.

'What, my boy, do you want to join the church?"

"Yes, sir.'

"But you are very young, and if I were to receive you into fellowship with this church to-day, and then you were to slip aside, it would bring discredit upon this church and do great injury to the cause of Christ. I shall be coming this way again in about six months. Now, you be very loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ during that time, and if, when I come again at the end of the half year, I find you still steadfast and true, I will baptize and receive you gladly."

No sooner was this said than all the people rose to their feet, and some, speaking for the rest, said, "Why, sir, it is he that has taught us all that we know about Jesus Christ!'

And so it turned out to be. This was the little minister of the little church, the honored instrument in the hand of God of saving all the rest for Jesus Christ.—Forward.

LOYAL TO HIS MOTHER.

The mother of a little three year-old had been away from home over night and, on her return, asked:

"And how did my little boy get to sleep last night without Mama?"

"Oh," he replied, "Papa twied to sing to me like 'ou does, an' I des went to sleep weal twick, so I touldn't hear him."

Prayer will in time make the human countenance its own divinest altar. Years upon years of true thoughts, like ceaseless music shut up within, will vibrate along the nerves of expression until the lines of the living instrument are drawn into correspondence and the harmony of visible form matches the unheard harmonies of the mind.—Exchange.

A good Christian and useful life ended in this world when on the fifteenth of June, 1901, in Jackson, Miss., at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. T. M. Merritt, Mrs. ELMYRA JOHNSON breathed her last. Sister Johnson was Miss Elmyra Hampton, and married Rev. Stephen Johnson, of precious memory, in August, 1840. She was born in South Carolina, May 18, 1818, and moved with her parents to Mississippi when a child, and in early life joined the Methodist Church, and lived a devoted member until called to her heavenly reward. Only those who knew her best could appreciate her worth as a servant of God. Being of a quiet disposition, she never paraded her virtues, or even religious feelings; yet we have seen her at times so overjoyed by the presence of her Savior that she give vent to her feelings in shouts of joy. She lived her religion, and was, therefore, a light shining brightly and daily to all with whom she associated. Sister Johnson was the mother of nine children, and no children ever had a better mother, and to those of them who are living may her pious example and earnest prayers ever be in their memory as a support and guide through this life! After the death of her devoted husband she broke up from the old homestead and lived with her children, all of whom were glad to have mother come and make their home her home. She was out driven in this course by necessity of support, for she was blessed with a bountiful supply of this world's goods; but her children having all married, or in business for themselves, she could not live alone. Being at the time of her death with her daughter, Mrs. T. M. Merrill, in Jackson, Miss., sitting on the porch in conversation with her granddaughters, she asked them if she could do anything for them. A disposition of life to do something for some one else was the element in which she lived. The answer was, "No, Grandma, we don't want anything." She said, "Well, I will lie down and rest a little." So she withdrew to her room, and in a few minutes was gone where "there is rest for the weary." Having suffered some few years back from a paralytic stroke, it is thought it returned a second time and took her off. But she rests, never to be tired again; sweet rest to the child of God. She was buried at her old church in Acona, Holmes county, Miss., where sleeps her dear husband and other loved ones.

K. A. JUNKS.

JAMES WAGUING, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Hixson, was born Jan. 22, 1898, and died July 19, 1901. God, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to remove from our midst another sweet little boy, whose bereaved father, mother and little sisters and playmates are now made to mourn his absence. Thank God in such cases we are not requested to suffer loss, but merely to humbly bow to the decrees of a wise Providence, which can only add to our fitness for the Lord's service during our earthly existence, and greatly promote our happiness throughout all eternity. May the Lord, who knoweth the hearts of all his chosen, fulfill his promise to the bereaved family, and comfort them in this, their first and greatest affliction, and help them to fully realize that sweet little "Buddie" is not lost, but simply translated to that home of the soul, beyond the hankering influence of this sinful and wicked world, where he stands waiting to welcome them all as the Master may see fit to gather them together once more forever, where parting never comes!

His loving pastor, J. B. B.

For the Sake of the Living.

So deep is the cloud, so dark the valley into which you have entered, my desolate, mourning friend, that I shrink from touching the wound with even the gentlest hand. There are sorrows which ought to place the sufferers in sanctuary; sorrows which no one can measure and no one can comfort save that One who wrestled with a world's weight of anguish in the solemn midnight and in Gethsemane's lonely garden.

And yet I know something of what a heart may endure when nothing but God's great love keeps it from breaking, and I am sure that there is no passage in the world so obscure that God's light can not illumine it. As our own poet has said:

"Death is but a covered way
Which opens into light,
Wherein no blinded child can stray
Beyond his Father's sight."

For the precious one whom God has taken from you, removing the desire of your eyes at a stroke, there has already begun a new and beautiful experience, full of surprises, full of development, full of the joy of immortality. You do not quite realize this yet, but you will by and by, when the angel of patience has wrought his perfect work in your soul, and you have learned how close and near and intimate is the relation we bear to the other and the blessed life, when we have some of our very own awaiting us there. In the meantime, while the ache is still new, the loss still fresh, and the narrow grave on the hillside still bloom the sunshine of the whole world, let me ask you to put aside your grief a little for the sake of the living.

It is natural in the earliest sudden agony of bereavement to lead a life of torpor, except in one direction. Nerves, acute to the sense of suffering, are blunted to all other feeling. If there be any emotion, it is often one of profound wonder that anybody on God's earth can be happy when we are so sad, and of resentment at the rebound of others from the shock of sorrow. The first laughter in the house, the first gay whistle of a boy running in from school, the first interest shown in business or in politics by the head of the house, seems forgetfulness of the one who has gone, and leaves the heart still absorbed in grief to a sentiment akin to indignation.

Nevertheless, reaction must come, and it argues no lack of tenderness in memory, but only a natural and wholesome state of things, when the song comes back to the lips which have been dumb, and the talk around the table ripples on, undisturbed by the vacant chair. It is a happy thing, too, when the dear one is not dropped out of the talk; when reference is made to her as of old, to him as when he was going in and out among us. We treat our dead very coldly when we never mention their names, never allude to their wishes, act as if indeed they had ceased to belong to us and ours.

For the sake of the earthly living let us always bear in our minds a thought of the heavenly living; our beloved in both worlds still ours, as much ours when there as while here. Those heavenly living people do not ask us to darken our houses, excluding the daylight; to keep our shades closely drawn, to abstain from food, and to refuse pleasant society. They do not ask us to ruin our tears over every pastime, and to furrow our cheeks with the plowshare of grief. For their sakes, and for the sake of our earthly ones who remain, let us try to be brave and cheerful. Let us try.

Do you say, "It is easy to preach, easy to talk, but unspeakably hard to carry out such ideas in practice!" No matter. The difficulty is conceded. It is hard, and the hardness comes when your forces are broken down and you have few reserves. But for just these crises the dear Lord gives us new supplies of strength.

"Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!"

The stars are there, and if you look up, the Lord will show them to your comforted vision.

I have known, again and again, the swathing gloom of a home to shut down so upon the life of its living inmates that young people have been driven from it into exile, and the tempter has found in them an easy prey. Too late it has been discovered that the living have been sacrificed on the altar of a selfish and unreasoning grief. Dear friend, let this not be in your case, in your home.—Margaret E. Sangster, in Congregationalist.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

There are people forever in search of happiness who never find it. Happiness is one of those things by indirection. You are intent on duty and are surprised to find you have stumbled on more than you sought. To make happiness the end of your seeking is an easy way not to find it. It is a coy blessing. It hovers about your path, it yet eludes your grasp. Attempt to put your hands upon it, and like a wild gazelle upon the mountain it bounds away. The search for happiness is like the search for the end of the rainbow; it recedes as you advance. You can not capture it. After all your planning and your straining after happiness you will have to give up the pursuit and content yourself with following the plain and plodding path of duty, and to find your joy in fidelity to conscience and in obedience to the divine will. In attaining this blessing imitate the boatman, who directs his prow above the point of destination, and so makes sure of it. Aim at something higher than happiness, and the higher will be sure to include the lower.—New York Advocate.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Do not be too much discouraged because you can not stumble upon that sweet grace, contentment. It is not received by luck, nor inherited as a legacy. Paul intimates the way to possession of it when he says, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." It is something to be acquired by learning; but though the learning is a long process, the result justifies the labor and the cost.—Exchange.

GROCERY MONEY SAVED

Hundreds of housewives are glad they sent for King's Price List. They're saving money every week. You might just as well be saving, too.

SAVES LIFE

Willard, Ill., August 1, 1900.

I was in bad health this spring and could not sit up in bed for four weeks. When I was confined my child died. When I began to sit up I felt so weak and had such terrible pains in my back and hips. I had kidney trouble and falling of the womb. I also had hysterical spells. I was in a bad condition when I received your "Ladies' Birthday Almanac" and read the advertisement of Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught. Since April 20th, I have taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui and three packages of Thedford's Black-Draught. I feel like a new person now. I can do all my work and can walk out to see any of my neighbors. I believe I would have been in the grave had it not been for Wine of Cardui. IT SAVED MY LIFE.

MRS. ALICE DAVIS.

It is well that women are more patient than men. Few men could bear the bitter pangs, the agony and distress that women endure. Thousands of women have come to look upon suffering as a duty of their sex. But there are many instances of this heroic fortitude which now renders unnecessary. Women need no longer suffer for modesty's sake. Wine of Cardui brings relief to modest women in the privacy of their homes. Many of the best homes in this city are never without this great medicine. It cures whites and falling of the womb and completely eradicates these dragging periodical pains. Mrs. Davis' cure shows you conclusively what you may expect if you follow her example and take Wine of Cardui. Thedford's Black-Draught aids Wine of Cardui by regulating the stomach and bowels. When you ask your druggist for these medicines, be sure you get them. It was Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black Draught that saved Mrs. Davis' life. Never take a substitute.

This is a beautifully printed and well bound book, replete with interest for every lover of our Methodism. To students of Methodist history it is indispensable.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest curricula for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses. A corps of 25 teachers, every one of whom is a specialist in his department.

One of the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent, with the renowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg, one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as its director and with no teacher in it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country, has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every Department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent fourteen-story brick building recently added by the Trustees "Roberts Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and all filling eight large Lecture Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

Eats Clothes

If your washing medium does that, what matters its cheapness or its working power? Is it safe? That's the first thing. Some imitations of PEARLINE are not safe. They eat the clothes, slowly, but surely. Don't experiment. You are sure of PEARLINE; stick to it; it is standard, tested, proved, by years of use and millions of women. 638

DYSPEPSIA NERVOUSNESS CURED.

Nervousness and loss of sleep unnaturally caused by indigestion or dyspepsia. If you suffer from these troubles, there is nothing that will relieve and cure as quickly and permanently as that standard preparation, Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy. For all stomach troubles it is the queen of all remedies. It builds up the appetite, insures easy, splendid digestion, and never fails to benefit.

How She Was Cured.

Mrs. T. F. Meadow, of Atlanta, says: "For many years I suffered with dyspepsia and extreme nervousness. Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy cured me perfectly, and I now enjoy excellent health in every way. I can not recommend them too highly."

Price 50 cents per large bottle. For sale by druggists. Six bottles for $2.50 or sent by express on receipt of price by TYNER'S DYSPEPSIA REMEDY CO., 107½ S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.

They regulate the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Blood as prepared by Dr. H. Mozley, in his Lemon Elixir, a pleasant lemon drink. It cures biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, appendicitis, malaria, kidney diseases, fevers, chills, heart failure, nervous prostration, and all other diseases caused by a torpid or diseased liver and kidneys. It is an established fact that lemons, when combined properly with other liver tonics, produce the most desirable results upon the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Sold by druggists. 50c and $1 bottles.

Rev. John P. Sanders Writes:

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.: I have been relieved of a trouble which greatly endangered my life, by using Mozley's Lemon Elixir. My doctor declared my only relief to be the knife, my trouble being appendicitis. I have been permanently cured and am now a well man. am a preacher of the M. E. FOR IMPAIRED VITALITY

TAKE HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Half a teaspoonful in half a glass of water, when exhausted, depressed or weary from overwork, worry or insomnia, nourishes, strengthens and imparts new life and vigor.

I do not expect to amass a fortune running Mississippi Normal College, but I will help many a young man, many a young woman to an education. I am educating five sons and daughters in the College, and I will give you a chance too; but you must show you are in earnest by asking my plans. A card will bring them, and you will get to college. Address Pres't W. T. Foster, Houlton, Miss.

From Brother S. Q. Bass.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: In order that the brethren may know that I am still "in the faith," will you kindly give me space for a few words in the ADVOCATE? I am still looking to God, who says, "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." God's promises have never failed, and can not fail in my case. I still intend by the grace of God to preach the gospel again.

I have suffered much this year, but I have the precious promise that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and I love God, so that promise is to me.

I love to read of the good meetings going on. Brother, sister, when you read this, pray for me. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

Palmer Camp Meeting.

Palmer Camp Meeting will begin on Friday night, Sept. 20, and continue eight to ten days. Meals will be served at a public restaurant at twenty-five cents, and a sleeping department will be provided for the public generally. A visit to this camp ground will convince anyone of its natural beauty and loveliness, as well as the pure spiritual atmosphere that sweeps like ocean billows throughout the encampment during our great meetings. Good water, beautiful shade, good preaching by the best preachers in the land, and the best people in the world, are some of the characteristics of this sacred old camp ground.

We are praying and trusting in God for the grandest spiritual meeting that has ever been held at old Palmer. We expect to see sinners convicted of sin and converted to God (saved, saved)

Bro. R. B. Bellew, our faithful president and Christian gentleman, is doing all that he can to make the meeting a success, as well as to build up the camp.

Palmer is in close touch with the Gulf and Ship Island railroad (three miles). Visitors to the camp meeting will buy tickets to Wortham, on G. and S. I. R. R. Hacks will meet all daylight trains.

Now, Dr. Boswell, we will be pleased to have you with us in the meeting.

Come one, come all; come to the great meeting.

Industrial Home at East Mississippi Female College.

On Sept. 18 we will open an Industrial Home for Girls in connection with East Mississippi Female College and Conservatory of Music, to be run on similar plan to State Industrial Schools, in which girls can live at much less expense, yet have the same excellent College and Conservatory advantages, and the benefit of the marvelous religious influence of the College. By close economy a girl can get through on $100 a year, board and tuition.

Tuition and board in the College "Annex" or Wesley Hall, $150. Tuition and board in the main building, $175. All buildings within 50 yards of each other. Teachers in all the buildings; same rules and same teachers for all students.

The End of the Deal, by Will Payne. A story of love and business which vibrates between the Chicago wheat pit and an old broker's pretty daughter.

A Most Lamentable Comedy, by William Allen White. A four-part novel dealing with the game of politics in Kansas.

The Fire-Fighters, by H. E. Hamblen. An exciting series of stories of the life of the old volunteer firemen who ran with the machine before the war.

Tales of Old Turley, by Mox Adeler. Six new stories by the author of "Out of the Hurly-Burly"—the first humorous work he has done for twenty-five years. A country town just before the war is the scene.

The Diary of a Harvard Professor, by C. M. Flandrau. A new series of deliciously clever little tales in which the author of The Diary of a Harvard Freshman views college life through the spectacles of Professor Fleetwood.

LETTER FROM BISHOP FITZGERALD.

As I begin this letter to you, Dr. Boswell, I think of my first and only visit to New Orleans in 1855—forty-six years ago. Then Dr. McTyeire was editing our NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Dr. Keener was presiding elder, and Drs. Walker and Parker were city pastors. Only Keener, our venerable senior, is left. I hope to see your city again in December, if not before. Forty-six years have wrought great changes in me, the young missionary on his way to California, and I have some curiosity concerning the New Orleans of 1901 as compared with what it was in 1855. If it so please God, I shall be glad to see the face of Bishop Keener again here on earth. McTyeire and Parker and Walker await our coming beyond the valley and the shadow of death.

This printed note will serve as a reply to a number of brethren of the Louisiana Conference who have written to me with reference to visits to their respective fields of labor and with requests for special service. My physical strength was unequal to the voyage to London, and I had to forego the privilege of attending the Methodist Ecumenical Conference, which begins Sept. 4. That great gathering will get along without me. If I can get to New Iberia in December in fair working order, I will be thankful. God's holy will be done in me, and by me, and for me, in all things. The brethren will remember me in their prayers.

I am pleased at all I hear concerning your work on the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I am pleased, but not surprised. We were fellow-workers at Nashville. I dubbed you "Old Faithful" then, and have found no reason in your subsequent record to change that designation. Your present field of editorial service is a very important one. That you may have the blessing of God, the hearty and well-directed co-operation of your brethren within the bounds of the patronizing Conferences, and all else that will make for success, is the prayer of

Your old comrade,

O. P. FITZGERALD.

BROTHER BEESON ON SANCTIFICATION.

BY "GILDEROY."

Since I was a boy, twelve or fourteen years old, I do not think I ever skipped an article on the subject of sanctification, or holiness, in any paper, magazine, or review; nor have I failed to read every book on this subject that I could buy or borrow. I have read Brother J. W. Beeson's article in the ADVOCATE, of Aug. 22, several times. In the title it proposed to tell how sanctification was "obtained," and this I wanted to know. I understand from Brother Beeson that one must first be convicted of actual sin, must repent of it, must be justified or pardoned, and must be regenerated, or born of the Spirit, in order to be in a proper condition for sanctification. Very well; I think I see my way clear that far. Then he tells me I must be convicted of "inbred sin," of the "carnal mind," of "the old man." He says this conviction comes "through some of the many providences of God." Here my trouble and confusion of mind begins. What kind of sin is "inbred sin"? If inbred, how am I guilty of it, and how can I be convicted for it? I have had an idea that God did not create sin or sinners, and I do not believe he provided for the breeding of sin and of sinners; hence bred sinners and inbred sin are puzzling terms to me. It seems to me God had just as well have created sin and sinners at the first as to have provided for the breeding of sin and sinners at the last. Either would be an impeachment of the moral character, of the holiness of God. God did not create sin, nor did he arrange for the generation of sin. The term, "inbred sin," tends to confuse the human understanding. There is no such sin, and in the nature of things, of both God and man, there can not be.

In my early days I used to read and to hear much about "regeneration as a sovereign act of God, and a condition precedent to conviction for sin, to repentance, faith, and acceptable prayer and worship." Great battles were fought over this ground by the fathers. These fathers all held that regeneration was a change of nature, and that justification was a change of relation. In this day and time there be many who hold that regeneration and justification are meant to put us in an attitude where God can change our natures; that justification and regeneration are a change of relation, and that sanctification is a change of nature. This looks to me like a new way of jugging in an old error, exploded long ago. It is Calvinism, pure and simple. Instead of putting "inbred sin" so damning in its nature, before regeneration, it puts it after regeneration; instead of holding that the new-born babe is liable to damnation on account of "inbred sin," it holds the new-born child of God is liable to damnation on account of the same sin. Of the two forms of precisely the same error, I believe I would prefer the first. In the last case it was adopted to make a "second blessing," or change, appear to be indispensable.

Brother Beeson intimates that one "must lay down his head" in order to attain this blessing. I think so, too. I do not believe that any man with a sound, clear head on top of him would ever accept such a travesty on God as the theory of an "inbred sin"—damning sin—implies. For one, I shall not sacrifice my sense for the sake of a sentiment "baseless as the fabric of a vision." What is "inbred sin"? what the "carnal mind"? what the "old man"? This is not the place to lay down our heads, to lose our sense. Is it true that we get rid of actual sin in regeneration, and of "inbred sin" in sanctification? If this be true, we ought to have a new theological dictionary and new systematic theologies.

Brother Beeson quotes Scripture and refers to other passages, but these quotations and references do not prove the positions assumed by him. I call this "jugging" with the Holy Scriptures. I like to have references to God's Word, and I love to turn to them and read the text and the context, to see if they really mean what they are said to mean. In this way I find that many clever men deceive themselves and mislead many readers by a careless use of God's Word. I think Brother Beeson has done this in one or two instances.

Do the Scriptures teach that "inbred sin" remains in the regenerate, and that new-born souls have the "carnal mind," and that free-born souls are still in bondage to the "old man"? If so, let us have the passages. Don't ask us to lose our eyes, heads and sense on the "ipse dixit" of any man or set of men. Am I to believe that one born of the Spirit is still in bondage to sin? Never. Some tell me, "Oh, you are not in the experience, and, therefore, you do not know and can not understand." Well, I have sense enough and experience enough to know that some things are not true. I know the peace of God, what it is to have a new heart and the direct witness of the Spirit. I know that just as many as were involved in the condemnation of the first sin were included in the justification of life by the one righteousness. But for this I am sure there would have been no generation of the human species. The state of nature is a state of grace. We are what we are and as we are by the grace of God by Christ.

REASONS FOR NOT DANCING.

BY REV. ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

I do not dance, and never expect to do so; not that I have not as much right as anyone else, but because I have good reasons for not dancing, and I shall give them.

1. Dancing does not make people wise nor good. This finds illustration among negroes, Indians, and heathen. Who delight in dancing more than these? And yet it makes them no wiser or better. There is nothing in dancing that will accomplish either. The more heathenish a people become, the more they dance and love to dance. Even monkeys and bears will dance. But strange as it may seem to some, the more educated and religious the negroes, Indians and heathen become, the more is dancing abandoned by them. Indeed, I remember in one town in which I was stationed, some of the white people would shuffle their feet and frisk and whirl themselves in the dance, while the negroes esteemed it too little a business to engage in them at all. One negro informed me that although there were more than 1,200 negroes in that town and community, yet a dance could not be had. What a lesson for some white people!

2. My second reason for not dancing is: I never want a negro, Indian or heathen to get above me as long as I have better advantages than they, and not even then, if God makes it possible for it not to be, and yet, if I dance, they certainly will get above and beyond me, for the religious negroes, Indians and heathen do not dance.

3. My third reason for not dancing is: I am a Methodist, and my church forbids dancing, and I know that it would not forbid it if it were not wrong. The Methodist Church has some of the wisest and best people in it, and, therefore, I know that their judgment in such matters is worthy of respect.

4. My fourth reason for not dancing is: When I joined the Methodist Church, I promised that I would not dance, and, therefore, I must not dance. I would not have been admitted if I had not promised I would not dance, and now, since I have gotten in, I can not afford to dance, for if I were to, then I would not only give the Methodist people, but everybody a right to have no confidence whatever in me, and that never would do. I could not endure that.

5. My fifth reason for not dancing is: I can not afford to put myself out of the company of the best and purest people, and get in company with vow-breakers, thieves, drunkards, liars, and the very filth and offscouring of the world, for they all dance. I never heard of a truly religious person dancing in worldly dances. They do not dance, and hence I would leave their company if I were to dance, and how lonely I would feel!

6. My sixth reason for not dancing is: I have too much that is so much better to engage me.

7. My seventh reason is: God requires me to redeem my time, and if I were to dance, I would become a time-waster.

8. My eighth reason for not dancing is: I could not glorify God by indulging it, and yet the Bible says, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (I. Cor. x, 31.)

9. My ninth reason for not dancing is: It will not help or keep me ready to meet God, and yet our Savior says, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." (Matt. xxiv, 44.)

10. My tenth reason for not dancing is: I believe it would kill me to dance. It might not kill my body to dance, although it has killed the bodies of others—that is, they have dropped dead while dancing—but I fear it would kill my soul, for to dance is to live after the flesh, and Paul says, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." (Rom. viii, 13.) Somehow or the other I believe what Paul says, and, therefore, I believe it would really kill me, spiritually, to dance. I am afraid to risk it.

11. My last reason for not dancing is: It is safer not to dance. There can be no harm in not dancing, but there is such a risk in dancing.

Now, in conclusion, I wish to say that after all the reasons I have given for not dancing, I am open to conviction on this subject, and, therefore, will be quite thankful to any dancer for any light he may be able to give me, and to make what he shall have to say on this subject potent, I want him to be guided by the following conditions:

1. He must write his full name.

2. He must be a member of the church.

3. He must be born again.

4. He must be one who prays three times every day in secret.

5. He must be one who goes regularly to church, prayer meeting, and Sunday-school.

6. He must be one who edifies the saints, and tries to save sinners.

7. He must be one who associates with wicked only to save them.

8. He must be one who is ready daily to meet God to be judged.

Such a dancer will please give me light.

Wesson, Miss.

BAPTIST BISHOPS.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

MR. EDITOR: The copy of the ADVOCATE containing a little item from your pen, which stated that the Baptist Church papers were referring to the pastors of Baptist Churches as Bishops, and spelling it with a big B, was mislaid, or your exact words would be used for my text.

As I read the little item, I wondered if Baptist Church history were going to be repeated; if the editors of those Baptist Church papers were shrewdly preparing the way for the re-establishment of the Baptist Episcopal Church, and expecting to be elected to the episcopacy themselves.

Many of your readers have never heard of Howell's "Early Baptists in Virginia," and as only six hundred copies of the late Dr. W. P. Harrison's "The High Churchman Disarmed" have been issued by our Book Agents, it is not amiss to quote from the pages of the latter book. Pages 78-81: "The experiment of the Baptist Churches in Virginia, in the last century, demonstrated that episcopacy is an impracticable system of government for a large portion of the Lord's people. For several years prior to 1776 the Baptists of Virginia discussed the expediency of adopting an episcopal form of government. The discussion was thorough, and the conclusion was arrived at in 1776 by the General Association of Virginia Baptists. By a unanimous vote they declared that episcopacy had been established in the church by Christ, the Head, and that the office of Bishop 'was now in use in Christ's church.' Having determined this question, they proceeded to establish the office, and fill it by appointment. The Rev. Samuel Harris was elected the first Bishop, and all that part of Virginia lying south of the James river was declared to be his diocese. In the Autumn of the same year the Association was called together, and they proceeded to elect two more Bishops—John Waller and Elijah Craig. The diocese of these coadjutor Bishops was all of the State lying north of the James river. The three ministers elevated to the episcopal office by their Baptist brethren were men of distinction, who had suffered for the preaching of the gospel only two years before this time. Imprisoned for weeks, and some of them for months, they were not men to enter upon any office of the church without careful and prayerful consideration. They were not enacting a comedy, but were in earnest, and went forth into the harvest fields of Virginia as regularly constituted Bishops of the Baptist Episcopal Church.

"The duties assigned to these officers were as follows: 'To pervade all the churches; to do, or at least to see to, the work of ordination; to set in order the things that are wanting, and to make report to the next Association.' 'The revolution in church polity,' says Howell, 'is now complete. It was achieved not without much excitement and discussion, but without any division.' . . . The General Association had assumed powers not exceeded by any previous body of clergy in any age, Catholic or Protestant. Not only had it created and sent forth three diocesan Bishops, under the name of 'apostles, or messengers,' but it had taken them—unlike the English Baptists—from the jurisdiction of the individual churches of which they were members, to whose discipline they were no longer subject; ordination of ministers was removed from the churches and given to the Bishops; it instructed the churches how to proceed in case they should commit offenses demanding their impeachment, and if in this lower court an indictment was sustained, it provided for the organization of a high court, to be called 'A General Conference of the Churches,' which should have power to 'excommunicate or restore them.'

. . . "The new Bishops went forth to 'pervade the churches,' but these loyal sons of independence would not be 'pervaded.' A reaction followed. The principal advocates of episcopacy had failed to secure election to the coveted honor, and before another year had expired, it was discovered that episcopacy belonged to the Jewish temple, and not to the Christian church. The Bishops disappeared from office and from history, and 'gladly resumed their places beside their brother presbyters.'"

Dr. Harrison's book ought to be in the library of every Methodist preacher. It is a treasury and an arsenal. Our Bishops in 1898 put it in among the books of references for our undergraduates, but I hope to see it in the course of study, not only for itinerant preachers, but also for the local.

A GREAT TENT MEETING.

Rev. Thos. J. Norsworthy, recently of the Mississippi Conference, came to the aid of his father R. D Norsworthy, pastor of Ellisville, Miss., bringing his canvas tent. In the rear of the church-building is an enclosed lot, upon which the tent, with seating capacity of over six hundred, was erected. To the worshiper wending his way to the initial service, Aug. 18, curious feelings were experienced: "Am I going to worship God, or to attend a circus?"

The appearance of the structure on the outside was very similar to a huge circus tent. The grass was carpeted with fresh saw dust, church benches and rough planking gave comfortable seats for the audience; oak chairs, on a raised platform in the rear, seated over fifty members, forming the choir.

Bro. Thomas Norsworthy being gifted with musical talent, led the choir with silver cornet, greatly aiding the organist and the congregation in singing. Young People's Hymnal No. 2 supplied the hymns, and the people sang with great heartiness.

Had "Gilderoy" been present, he would have enjoyed the united singing of old and young folks. The people came, and soon found that it was not Satan's meeting, as the young evangelist gave us a fervid sermon upon the personality and office of the Holy Ghost as the first subject under the tent.

Morning and night crowds listened to earnest appeals to repent and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the means of salvation. It was delightful to the writer to witness the fervor, the zeal, the sweet spirit and the terrible earnestness with which the message was delivered, and the gracious results following. The audience soon realized that the young preacher was anointed of God, and gave most respectful attention, responding to the various propositions most heartily.

Sunday, the twenty-fifth, at 4 P. M., with a congregation of some 200 males "only," a cyclone of rain and wind split the canvas in one place that hindered the farther use of the tent, and adjournment was made to the church-building for Monday and Tuesday service, Aug. 26 and 27. As results of the meeting we have many restorations to God's love, a most fraternal feeling among Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists; some twenty conversions and fourteen applicants for membership in the churches. One hundred dollars was raised on our Conference collections, besides expenses of the meeting. Upon the whole, many consider it one of the best meetings held in Ellisville in years.

Bro. Norsworthy, nowise daunted by the mishap to the tent, had it repaired, and hastened away to meet engagements in Northwest Mississippi. He expects to return the last of September, and go west of Ellisville fourteen miles, in the dense pine woods, "Oak Bowery Church" (E. J. Taylor, supply), and hold a meeting for our rural neighbors. This evidences that he is hunting after souls that are lost. May God abundantly bless him in his evangelistic labors! ROBT. B. DOWNER.

ORPHANS' HOME.

As agent for the Orphans' Home, I know it to be in need of some immediate help. Building the much-needed hospital has emptied our treasury, and this is a season when very little cash comes in; so, in the name of these, over sixty children, who are being saved and made useful by this noble work, I ask the brethren to give the people a chance to contribute for this purpose, and help now, when specially needed. Certainly this cause is worthy of one day, as much so as any other claim. Do not let September pass without a collection and remittance. The people will give to the orphans. If any have money for this purpose, do not fail to send it in now. Do not wait until Conference.

Remember these little ones, and do not wait for the agent. He goes all the time, but can not reach all.

Faithfully, W. T. GRIFFIN, Agent.

Summit, Miss., Aug. 31, 1901.

A CHEERING WORD.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The victory is complete. The fifty indictments against the "blind tigers," followed by convictions by the juries, and the just sentence of the court, have freed our growing little city of the only enemy that threatened to hinder us. The triumph for law and order has inspired these good people to greater faith and effort. We are rejoicing with the citizens of Aberdeen in their wonderful victory.

Methodism in Tupelo continues to grow in all directions.

Yours faithfully,

J. A. BOWEN.

What Our Editors Say.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Many persons need encouragement more than reproof. This is particularly true of young people and young Christians. Sometimes a word of reproof or faultfinding will weigh down an honest soul with sadness and discouragement, while a sentence of helpful recognition would have inspired confidence and hope. When a boy, struggling with a call to preach, and not knowing where to turn for light, we were greatly helped by the pastor seeking us out and having a kindly interview. At another period of uncertainty a preacher who had never seen us before laid his hand upon our head and said: "My son, the Spirit will lead you." There was inspiration in those words, and it has lingered to this day. Another gave us kindly counsel and loaned good books, while a fourth discouraged us and sought to hinder. Looking back from this distance, and studying the effect of two different modes of treatment, we feel moved to exhort elderly persons to be always helpful and encouraging in their words to young people who are Christians, and especially to young preachers, who if genuinely called to preach are frequently under a burden that seems intolerable.—Central Methodist.

ENCOURAGING STATISTICS.

The net gain of communicants in all the churches in the United States during the year 1900 were 344,846. Of these the Methodist bodies, of which there are seventeen, are credited with 106,472; the Catholics with 80,432; the Lutherans with 62,269; the Baptists with 32,439, and the Disciples of Christ with 31,586. The advance during the century from 1800 to 1900, including only evangelical churches, was in ministers from 2,651 to 154,228; churches, from 3,030 to 191,348; communicants, from 364,872 to 27,422,025. It is believed that accurate statistics would have increased the number of ministers in 1800 to 3,000, and the number of churches to 3,500. Thus in the last hundred years the number of ministers has been multiplied by 50; the number of churches by 54; the number of communicants by 73; the population of the United States by 14.—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

PULPIT DRESS.

A conscientious, soul-loving pastor should avoid anything in manner or dress that diverts the attention of his congregation from his message. The wearing of gold rings, a diamond pin, and a large gold watch chain by a minister may not be charged against him as a sin, but it certainly diverts the attention of his audience from his discourse. A gold watch, which is worn in the pocket, or a gold pair of spectacles do not come under the head of ornaments, and hence do not attract attention. The idea is this: that a minister, when in the pulpit, should be simply and neatly clad, avoiding the bizarre or anything that would tend to cut off his appeal from the hearts and minds of those whom he desires to impress and conviuce. It takes a very simple thing to divert the attention of a careless hearer.—Editor Green, Midland Methodist.

CHANGING OPINIONS.

In one of our Methodist exchanges there is a collection of letters from preachers in answer to the question, What changes, if any, in your doctrinal views have taken place within the past ten years? The frank statements of some of these gentlemen in reference to their beliefs concerning inspiration, the Trinity, the atonement, and some other vital themes, would have brought down upon them, not many decades ago, the watchdogs of their Conference. We are glad that Methodism is not over-hasty in the matter of trials for heresy. But it should not be forgotten by our ministers that there are a few doctrines which we look upon as fundamental.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

GOSSIPING.

One of the most unreasonable, as well as most thoroughly vicious of the common vices, is gossiping. We have never been able to understand this pernicious interest in the affairs of others, for as like as not, the afflicted party is personally unknown to the one of lynx-eyes and bitter heart. It is one of the mean vices that compel us to believe in the depravity of the human heart.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

A LITTLE TIRED.

Here it is again. Three hundred negroes imported into Illinois as laborers are met by armed white men and driven back. In the South we want negro laborers. In the North they drive them back at the point guns. Yet some of the people of the North have a habit of advising the South how to treat the negro. We get a little tired.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

"BAPTIZO" IN THE SCRIPTURES.

We saw that the primary meaning of "bapto" in classic Greek is sprinkle, or effusion, as an action, and dye, or stain, as its effect or result. It never meant to dye by dipping until three hundred and fifty years B C. No instance has yet been found in classic Greek in which it means to immerse—i. e., to sink.

"'Baptizo' was formed as an intensive of 'hapto' when 'bapto' had but one meaning, viz.: to sprinkle. . . . 'Bapto' constantly occurs in respect to a slight contact; especially the element generally applied is small. . . . 'Baptizo' implies a more copious affusion primarily than 'bapto.' Hence it came more naturally to mean to wash as the effect of descending water; thence also overflow, overwhelm, and from thence to sink. We find really that 'baptizo' never means to dip at all, but sink, 'immergo,' when it does put the object into or under the water."

With these facts in mind we appeal to the use of the word in the Scriptures, and in its Bible use there is something inhering which really no mode, or "all combined," can express. All the modes conceivable "are but actions, not implying necessarily any religious idea or fact, nor the unity, power, or effect of religious truth; nay, not the element itself—water."

There are few, if any, dictionaries which really give the meaning of the word "baptism." Webster may be taken as a sample when he says: "Baptism—The application of water to a person as a sacrament. To administer the sacrament of baptism to." But any one can see that he does not define the word.

"Baptize" in the Bible—the word used by our Lord when he said, "Baptize and disciple the nations"—means something more than mode. It is a religious rite (which it was not in classic Greek), and expresses some fact or effect.

Something is done to the subject, and that something is expressed by the word "baptizo." "Whatever that word may mean, the thing done in water baptism is either done symbolically, and is significant of something more real and important, or it is absolutely without significance beyond what is literally done by the administrator to the subject. . . . If not symbolic, whatever may be the design of baptism, the thing itself is that, and only that, which the administrator does to the subject. If we suppose the word 'baptize' to mean immerse, and immerse to mean what is done by those who substitute it for baptism—a thing it never meant, except in accommodation to their practice—then, to baptize a man is to put him into and take him out of the water—only this, and nothing more."

But in the Scriptures the word has a meaning wholly apart from mode. Mode really is not its thought; is not in the essence. If it had been, our Lord would have used a word by which modality would be unquestioned, and he could have selected from more than a score. But he seized upon a word which, from long-established usage, conveyed the radical idea of fact or effect. In the Scriptures it has no significance, and "can not exist unless there is a real and spiritual baptism on which it is founded, and of which it is the emblem." He seized upon "baptizo," the stem of which, the root of which, had long been firmly established to mean "dye, stain, color," which drives us to the conclusion that it was "because it was itself the most potent symbol of change, and most fitting, therefore, to represent a religion whose foundation text was change—change the heart and change the life."

The gospel which John preached required change, and Christ coming after, preached the gospel of change, "turning the world upside down, and laying change at the very portals of his kingdom."

Wherever the word "baptizo" occurs in the Scriptures it is not only used in a ritual sense—i. e., in connection with ceremonial purification with water—but it is used as symbolizing the more important baptism of the Spirit. Hence the scriptural import of the word is "cleanse, wash, or purify," as will be clearly seen in a subsequent article. Incidentally, the scriptural mode of the baptism is by sprinkling or pouring. The baptism itself—i. e., the effect, fact, or "change"—is purification, and symbolizes the real baptism.

"The meaning of the word 'baptize,' then, must be sought in the real thing of which it is the verbal or written sign, and not the mere symbol of it, for the word gets its meaning from the real thing, and carries it over to the symbol of it."

While "baptizo" lays more force upon the thing signified than the mode itself, it is absolutely certain that "baptizo" means affusion, or that it means something "effected" by affusion. Either view establishes pouring or sprinkling as the scriptural mode of baptism, for we read that the Spirit was "poured out," "fell upon," etc., which the apostles call baptism.

GRENADA COLLEGE.

The opening of our North Mississippi Conference college portends much toward the upbuilding of our church. The success of the future is assured by the success of the past. Having recently made a trip through North Mississippi in the interest of our college, it was with much gratitude to God that we have seen "our daughters" taking helpful places in the church, and doing cheerfully the work most needed in their community, and, with the exception of very few, we have found them endeavoring to put into practice the teachings of the past year. They are trying to give forth what they received while with us.

One hot day in midsummer, while waiting for a delayed train in a stifling waiting-room, one of our daughters came in with a smile lighting up her fresh young face, and after chatting for awhile, I asked, "What are you doing with your life this Summer?" With girlish vivacity she quickly responded, "I have organized a Juvenile Missionary Society; we meet every two weeks, and are doing so much charity work."

At another Delta town, immediately after dinner, one of our daughters began to arrange a dainty tray of tempting delicacies for a sick family, and I was told that she had been like an angel of mercy, carrying fruits, flowers, etc., to brighten the sick-rooms of many suffering homes, and her presence was welcomed with gladness, for she brought a gleam of sunshine into these darkened chambers.

We feel that a greater number of our daughters have recieved an inspiration that will give them an upward spring, and cause them to freshen weary life as the rain refreshes the parched earth.

Thank God for Christian homes and Christian colleges! If we can only thread North Mississippi with helpful, consecrated girls, then we will soon take this section for Christ. When our president put his hand to the helm of our college work, two years ago, he placed the other on the altar.

The prospect for a full opening is flattering. Our president and faculty will not lack for work, nor for an opportunity to impress Christ upon the life of the young womanhood of our Conference. We intend to throw our heart and soul into this year's work; and we feel that the crowning day is at hand for this grand old institution of learning. It is a reflection upon the intellect of our State when we send our girls to other States to be educated. We consider Grenada College the peer of any Christian institution in the land. Our curriculum is broad enough and deep enough to satisfy the demand of the hour. While we believe and advocate the higher education of our daughters, we do not accept the theory of over-education. We give a four years' college course, supplemented by a post-graduate course that enables a girl to take a higher degree. Our work is open for examination and criticism, and if we are not reaching up to the required standard of our church, then our error should be pointed out, for the ambition of our president is to give to our Conference a first-class female school. We can never do this if our representative church members patronize other denominations and schools of other Conferences. We will be crowded next term, and will need the long promised annex. Our Board of Education assures us of its certainty in the near future. Our ministry and laity have been true and faithful, helping us to secure girls, extending every courtesy, and, above all, for recognizing our work as "sine qua non" in every particular. We ask and expect the patronage of our church in North Mississippi. Our work will begin on Sept. 12, 1901, and close May 29, 1902

MRS. M. I. HOSKINS.

ONE REASON.

In a recent issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a short editorial inquires, "Why will some of our preachers ask the congregation to stand and pray, and stand himself to lead"? (grammar aside!) and I notice that some other editors are scratching their pates over the same puzzle. I confess to having lost a few hairs over this conundrum myself, and some current paragraphs sound like echoes of my own standing interrogation points. My Methodist prejudices (?) got some terrible jolts on two almost era-making occasions of my life—the Epworth League Conference at Atlanta, Ga., and the General Missionary Conference at New Orleans, La. At both these great Methodist assemblies the congregation and leader always stood up for prayer. These meetings were under the influence and immediate direction of the Bishops, General Secretaries, and other doctored divines of our church. Where these great brethren developed their indifference to Methodist usage, or when they began to tower above the discipline of their church, are puzzles charity has quietly shelved. But the editoral mind should certainly be able to see in the influence of these meetings and these leaders one reason for the present disorder it bewails. Defects and deformities that accompany greatness are sure to be idealized by the careless observer. But the editors may be sure that it is rare sport for the boys to see them mount their war-horses and dodge the Goliaths with such consummate skill.

H. M. ELLIS.

THE LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I notice with pain that the Epworth League Department has been entirely excluded from the ADVOCATE. I would like for some one to let it be known through the columns of our paper why this has been done. If I am not mistaken, Miss Carrie Schwing, of Jackson, was elected editor at the last State Conference, and we have heard nothing from her yet. Has this department been suspended for want of something to put in it? I am very much in favor of the department, with something interesting from every League; something live, as all good Leaguers want.

If Bro. W. G. Evans, of Grand Cane, will pardon me, I suggest that he give us some of his practical ideas of League work.

Friends and brethren, we can not afford to lose our department. Let us be up and doing, and, with the permission of the editor, re-establish the League column. The Sunday-school Department is a move in the right direction, but it will not take the place of the League.

In the current issue of the ADVOCATE, "Gilderoy" strikes the right chord. No one can tell where so many song books will end.

At the Sunday-school Convention held at Stonewall recently, quite a lively discussion was had over the question, "How Can We Improve the Singing in Our Schools?"—but no one gave a specific remedy. Let us hear from quite a number on this all-important subject.

Yours sincerely, X X

MEMOIR OF REV. JOHN F. EVANS.

BY REV. S. M. THAMES.

The subject of this memoir, Rev. John F. Evans, son of John and Susan Bullock Evans, was born in Wayne county, Miss., Nov. 26, 1832, and died in Vaiden, Miss., July 6, 1901. His boyhood and youth were spent in the eastern part of the State. He joined the Methodist Church at ten years of age, keeping ever before him the highest ideal of what a Christian should be, so that when during a meeting at old Union Church, Clark county, Ala., in 1857, he gave his heart and life to God, it was with no mental reservation, for after a sound conversion he gave himself unreservedly to the Christian ministry. Realising his need of better equipment, he at once entered the male academy at Summerfield, Ala., under the administration of Rev. D. C. B. Connerly, principal, where he remained for two years, preparing himself to enter college at Greensboro, Ala., the next year, but the presiding elder, desiring a young man for the Montevallo station, persuaded him to leave school and take charge of that work.

In 1861 he was received on trial in the Alabama Conference with a large class of twenty-five, most of whom have crossed the last river. He served with fidelity and great acceptability a number of charges in the bounds of this Conference.

He was married Aug. 4, 1866, to Miss Sallie R. Toomer, the accomplished daughter of Major Ben Toomer, of Mobile, Ala. She was one of nature's noble women, highly educated, refined, and cultured. A Christian of the purest type, well fitted to fill any position in life, she linked her destiny with this young itinerant, and together went to their appointment on the Garton circuit, Jan. 2, 1866. After a hard drive over rough roads they reached the hospitable home of Mrs. C. E. DeLoach just before night-fall, and ever found there a home, a place of rest from toil and care, a place of happiness and loving association at all times.

It was that year that I became intimately associated with Bro. Evans. We were work-fellows together, our relations were close and cordial, and a strong personal friendship existed which has lasted all these years. I thank God it was my privilege to know him, to work with him, and to feel the wonderful uplifting of the presence of a man whose face was always in the light, whose faith was so firm that nothing would move it, and who was so Christ-like in his life in all that he did and said. He was strictly a man of one work, and methodical in his work. He did his pastoral work according to rule, not only as to time, but as to the character of work; seldom ever visited a family and left without praying the blessings of God upon that home. His personal devotions were according to rule, and that rule became a habit. Three times a day, as regularly as he took his meals, he retired to his closet to commune with God. He said modestly, "My soul needs food as often as my body." He was peculiarly gifted in public prayer. A friend once remarked, "He did his best preaching on his knees." He was one of the strongest Christian characters I ever knew; always enjoyed a rich Christian experience, the principles of which were demonstrated in every public act of his life. In the forty years that I know him I never heard an unkind word fall from his lips with regard to any one. Truly, he adorned the profession he made by "a well-ordered life and a godly conversation."

As a preacher, Bro. Evans was a man of more than ordinary ability. The themes upon which he loved to dwell were experimental and practical piety. On these subjects I have often heard him when he rose to the highest type of pulpit eloquence. After one of those grand efforts I never succeeded in prevailing on him to repeat the sermon to another congregation. He would decline, saying he feared he would trust the sermon more than he trusted God. Such was his modesty. He was a revivalist of the true type; had no gifts at manipulation, always depending on God's truth and God in his truth to save sinners. Such was the power of his preaching that I have seen hundreds, if not thousands, converted and brought into the fold of God who will rise in the last day and call him blessed.

In 1875 he transferred to the North Mississippi Conference, and was appointed to the Ripley circuit, which he served two years; in 1877 he was sent to Baldwin; two years after he served the Brooksville circuit, Richland and Black Hawk each four years; two years he was presiding elder of the Grenada district, where his work was eminently successful, but an attack of sciatic rheumatism forced him to retire again to the regular pastorate. He served the Vaiden charge in 1890-91, Kosciusko and Durant in 1892-93, Coffeeville circuit in 1894, Carrollton station in 1895; was returned again to Vaiden for the next four years; then filled the Enpora work in 1900. Here he finished his active work. At the last session of our Conference he was superannuated without his knowledge or consent. Such was the shock upon his sensitive nature that he never fully recovered from it, though his meek, submissive spirit never uttered a word of complaint. The good people of Vaiden notified him that they would furnish him a home, which they did. He toiled for six months to make a support for his family until disease fastened upon his tired form, and it was soon discovered that he lacked vital force to rally. His first public work after returning to Vaiden for the last time was conducting the watch-night service (in the absence of the pastor); his last was baptizing two sweet infants—one a daughter of the pastor—on Sabbath, June 23, 1901. Between these dates he preached frequently at different places, but since April he was forced by feebleness from protracted sickness to deliver his sermons sitting. These messages, coming from one even then on the border-land, nearing the eternal city, seemed to produce a good impression, and we trust that seed then sown will yet bring a harvest of souls to the Master's garner. To the very last hour the light burned brighter and brighter, and when the messenger came for him, he was ready.

Of a family of nine brothers and sisters, only two remain: Mrs. D. S. McDonald, whose husband was for a number of years a faithful minister in the North Alabama Conference, and Mrs. S. E. Christenson, now living in McComb City, Miss. Three brothers yielded their lives upon the altar of their country during the Civil War. Many loved ones were waiting beside the beautiful gate to join in a song of welcome when its pearly leaves swung open to admit his ransomed spirit. In his own words, the way was "so beautiful," and beyond were "home and rest."

On the last morning of his stay upon earth he asked that all of his family should come near; then, with one arm lovingly encircling one daughter, a hand tightly clasped by the other daughter, his wife and little son close by him, a smile of heavenly radiance overspread his countenance. After asking of his absent son and others, he seemed to rest, so happy. At intervals through the morning his utterances seemed little short of inspiration. At one time he said to his pastor: "Brother, have you brought the Savior to-day? In him alone is peace and salvation;" then, with beaming face and with index finger up-lifted as if to emphasize the sentiment, he slowly said, "The way, the truth, the life." Soon after noon, as if in answer to a question, he said, "All is well," and spoke to human ears no more. He is not dead, but will live on in the coming years.

His funeral from the Methodist Church in Vaiden was attended by a large concourse of friends, who mourn their loss, and his body laid to rest in the cemetery there to await the resurrection of the just. We pray God to bless and comfort the bereaved wife and four children till, in his own good time, he unites them an unbroken family in heaven.

What are Humors?

They are vitiated or morbid fluids coursing the veins and affecting the tissues. They are commonly due to defective digestion but are sometimes inherited.

How do they manifest themselves?

In many forms of cutaneous eruption, salt rheum or eczema, pimples and boils, and in weakness, languor, general debility.

How are they expelled? By

which also builds up the system that has suffered from them.

It is the best medicine for all humors.

FOREST DISTRICT.

The following is the report of the Committee on Sunday-schools and Education at the Forest District Conference:

Your committee would submit the following report:

1. Sunday-schools.—Eighteen pastoral charges have reported sixty-two Sunday-schools with a total enrollment of 2,883 pupils; 1,304 are members of the church. Only forty-five per cent. of the Sunday-schools thus reported are members of the church.

The Choctaw mission reports one Sunday-school with thirty-eight pupils, thirty-four of whom are members of the church. Only four Sunday-school libraries with 250 volumes are reported. Twenty-two Sunday-schools suspend during the Winter or at some other time.

Only thirteen charges have reported the Children's Day collection, the total of which is $83 94. $2.31 of this amount coming from the Choctaws.

2. Education.—Thirty-four sermons have been preached on Christian education, and thirty-four pupils have gone from the district to church schools.

Seventy-five names have been sent to schools for catalogues. Three young men are reported as needing help to prepare for the ministry, and twenty-three bright boys and girls needing educational help.

W. J. DAWSON.
W. W. MOORE.
I. R ROBINSON.

Bro. Abbey Magruder, of Hattiesburg, vice president of the Seashore district, was in Yazoo City recently, attending the funeral of his mother. There were nine sons and one daughter present, all of whom are members of the church and most of them Sunday-school workers. This is a grand family record.

From a private letter we learn that Prof. Hamil is at his home in Jacksonville, Ill., hard at work preparing the course of study for the Sunday-school teachers of the M. E. Church, South, which the Board proposes to introduce and which Dr. Atkins has already announced. When the course is ready, we trust every teacher in the church will study it.

MAIN STREET, WATER VALLEY.

Main Street now has two preachers at work, besides the regular pastor and Bro. Haines, our standby in the local ranks. In regard to the other preachers: Bro. Benton Tindall felt that God had called him to preach early in the year. In June he was licensed by the Grenada District Conference. When Bro. Patterson's illness left the Poplar Creek circuit vacant, he was sent there by the presiding elder, Bro. Dye. The other preacher is Rev. Emmett M. Jones, formerly of Chicago. A college acquaintance between us ripened with the years into mature friendship. Shortly after his conversion he felt that he could work better in a church that held to the spiritual truths in which he had come to believe so earnestly. The Methodist Church seemed to him to emphasize these truths more strenuously than any other; and so, early in June, he came to see me, his friend of former years, seeking to enter the membership and ministry of the M. E. Church, South. Together we went to the Holly Springs District Conference, and after a conference with Bishop Morrison, he joined the church and was licensed to preach. The brethren received him most cordially, and from all sides came calls to engage in revival meetings.

Bro. Haines preached a strong sermon at Main Street, Sunday morning, on "Regeneration."

We are entering into a very determined and earnest campaign at Main Street. Several people—nearly twenty—have pledged themselves to select one of their neighbors who is not a Christian, and definitely set to work to bring that person to Christ. Besides this, several are setting apart one afternoon a week to visit non-church-goers and get them to coming to church. Bro. Tindall, before he went to Poplar Creek, got a committee appointed, and divided the town—or our end of it—into districts, giving a district to each member of the committee. This committee visited the homes of the people and urged them to send their children to Sunday school.

Our League is moving off nicely. We got out ten books from our library, and had an energetic and responsible young lady made librarian of these ten books. Then they were set to traveling around, not only in the League, but in all our membership. Of course, the success of this plan depends on the librarian, but where a really energetic and intelligent librarian can be secured, almost inestimable good can be done.

Our choir is doing good service. During the Summer months we have had a fifteen-minutes' song service every Sunday evening. These song services have been very pleasant and very helpful.

Saturday night we got home from Bailey Camp Ground, where we spent one of our happiest weeks. Our people welcomed us so cordially that our heart melted, and last night, at eleven, we were wakened by the sweet strains of a mandolin and guitar serenade. We had nothing to "hand out" but butter-milk, but mother put a lamp in the hall, and said, "Thank you," and we trust they were pleased with that.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

INDIAN BAYOU CIRCUIT.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: I began a meeting at Indian Bayou, July 27. Bro. Lester Hoffpauir preached for me on Sunday night, and on Monday night, Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Lake Charles, joined me and preached twice a day, at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M., till Friday night, Aug. 2. Bro. Tucker was at his best, and preached with great power. The eleven o'clock services on Thursday and Friday were noted for the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. Brethren that were at variance with each other were seen to shake hands, and preachers and people were greatly blessed and lifted to a higher plane of Christian living. There were twenty additions to the church and ten conversions, among them some of our most worthy young men. The church, with a seating capacity of 500, needed to have been just twice as large to seat the people that came. I realize there is a great work here that needs to be done. These people must be reached some way. There are at least one thousand souls in reach of this church that are unsaved. Oh, that the Lord may direct me in some way in which they can be brought to Christ. We have some faithful members, and thank God our number is increasing. Our meeting did great good, and I believe the good work will continue.

VERNON, LA.

DEAR DR BOSWELL: We closed a good meeting on yesterday at Wesley Chapel, on this charge. It was begun on Sunday, and closed on Thursday, resulting in three additions to the church on profession of faith, the baptism of one child, and one subscription to the ADVOCATE. I was disappointed in not getting ministerial aid, but the good Lord was with us in awakening power, and, in addition to the above, the church was greatly revived.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

PORTERVILLE, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: It may be interesting to the brethren to know how we are getting along at Porterville. We feel like the Lord has been blessing our labors. We have had revival meetings at four of the churches on the charge. Brother D. P. Bradford assisted me at Union, doing all the preaching after Monday, at 11 o'clock service. Bro. Bradford is an excellent preacher. There were no great outward demonstrations, but we feel that the church is deeply awakened to its responsibilities, and impressions made on the young life that will tell for eternity.

Bro. J. W. Burton, a local preacher from Alabama, helped me in my other meetings. Bro. Burton is a godly man, and preaches well.

We have had 30 accessions to the church; 24 on profession of faith in Christ. We have baptized up to date 25. I have two more meetings to hold, in which I am expecting the presence of the Lord. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the brethren, for I know you can sympathize with those of us who have had no experience. May God greatly bless and prosper his cause this year!

PIMPLES

And other eruptions which mar the skin are more than a disfigurement and annoyance; they are a positive detriment to the business interests and social successes of the man they mark. Other things being equal, the man with a smooth skin and clear complexion will find it easier to get a good position or a good wife than the man whose face shows the impurity of his blood. That's the real point. The blood is bad. And for that very reason any treatment which is designed to cleanse the skin must cleanse the blood.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cleanses the blood from the clogging impurities which breed and feed disease, and so cures pimples, boils, eczema, and other diseases which have their cause in impure blood.

The sole motive for substitution is to permit the dealer to make the little more profit paid by the sale of less meritorious medicines. He gains. You lose. Therefore, accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I have used your 'Golden Medical Discovery' in a case of scrofula, and cured it," writes Mr. Wm. D. Shamblin, of Remy, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Territory. "I took five bottles of it for my blood. I had 'ringworms' on me and I would burn them off and they would come right back, and they were on me when I commenced using 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which took them away, and I haven't been bothered anymore."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1901.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We call the attention of the preachers of the Meridian district to the fact that our issue of Sept. 12 will be Meridian district number, devoted to the interest of missions. Those who desire extra numbers of the paper will please send in their orders at once. We must know how many to print. Let us hear immediately.

If a preacher intends his message to catch men through the wisdom of words, he may rest assured that it will prove a miserable failure.

Contact with plain men of strong common sense will frequently cure bad cases of conceit, if the disease is not complicated with what the people sometimes call "pig-headedness."

If the preacher who is flattered by shallow-pated people into the belief that he is far ahead of the best of his brethren, would take a look inside, and write down an inventory of his mental and spiritual resources, he will find himself sadly lacking.

To retaliate in kind when one brings against another a railing accusation, is not only contrary to the teachings of the Master but is so much like "answering a fool according to his folly," the accuser is persuaded that human spirits are all alike.

The "holy living, tireless labors and faithful doctrinal preaching were the main elements of the phenomenal success" of the pioneer preachers of Methodism and their immediate successors. The same kind of preaching to-day, accompanied by faith, will accomplish like results. The work may be harder, but the gospel is the same to day that it ever was, and just as well adapted to human nature and human needs. God is still behind his Word.

We heartily unite with the Philadelphia Presbyterian in protesting against the cramming of our literature for young people with the interpretation of Scripture from the standpoint of the higher critics. No such practice prevails in the homes of earnest Christians who are careful in the instruction of their children, and to introduce it into our Sunday-schools will certainly create doubt in the minds of the young as to the authority and worth of the Bible. Children and young people are not competent to discriminate, even under an expert teacher, and we modestly suggest that nine-tenths of our Sunday-school teachers know nothing of the processes of higher criticism, and are unable to determine anything as to its results. Better let it alone.

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

The indications at present clearly point to a renewal of the contest over the army canteen in the next Congress. The friends of the canteen appear to be determined to keep the matter before the people, and in the most objectionable light. It is believed and generally circulated that a conspiracy exists, the object of which is to impress the country with the idea that since the canteen was abolished that resorts outside and near army posts have multiplied largely and that drunkenness among soldiers has largely increased. Immediately after every pay-day the Associated Press dispatches treat the country to horrible tales of debauchery and rioting, all because the soldiers make their way to saloons, contrary to orders, and drink as much as they please.

Whether a conspiracy exists or not, we are unable to say, but there is no doubt that notwithstanding statements from reputable sources—from men on the ground, and eye-witnesses—to the effect that no such drunkenness and disorder ensues as reported, the slanders are being constantly repeated. This dirty work is kept up by a certain class of daily newspapers, and certain weekly papers devoted exclusively to the liquor interests. Of course, brewers and liquor dealers generally are engaged in the same business. The object is to make the present canteen law odious, and bring such pressure to bear on Congress as will effect its repeal. The scheme is diabolical, inspired perhaps as much by a desire to thwart the temperance element of the country, as by a desire to benefit the liquor trade. The comfort and morals of the soldiers are not at heart, as these promoters of the canteen pretend; otherwise they would join the temperance hosts and help suppress the liquor traffic entirely.

The Reform Association and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are wide awake, and will not be caught off guard. They should be backed by the Christian sentiment of the whole country. Our Christian men and women throughout the land can have great influence with their representatives in Congress, and they should use that influence for the right. We have an interest in our soldiers and should stand for their protection.

PITCHING TOWARDS SODOM.

We would not be so rash as to say that all men who leave a small city for a large one, or who go from the country to town, are on the way to the bad, but we would be fully justified in saying that they do so for the same reason that Lot, when he separated from Abraham, "pitched his tent toward Sodom," where the land "was well watered everywhere, even as the garden of the Lord; like the land of Egypt as thou comest unto Zoar." Lot had no bad motive in going to Sodom: he simply thought that, in view of the goodness of the land, he would realize financial benefit. It is doubtful if he considered for a moment the social and moral condition of the people, or if he did, he felt amply strong to maintain his integrity. At the same time the risk he took was fearful, and but for the divine interposition and prayers of his faithful old uncle, Abraham, he would have been destroyed when the cities of the plain were burned.

Good men who leave pleasant country or village homes for the city have no idea of adding to the city's evil population, or giving way in the least to the temptations of city life. The city simply offers a larger field and better advantages, and they go to improve their fortunes. This is perfectly legitimate. But there is danger. The great city throws in their way divers and strange temptations, which, however well fortified they may feel, are dangerous things with which to come in contact. Their enlarged field, with its corresponding demand for large capital, together with the demands of society in which they are called to move, have an influence hitherto unknown. Thousands of good people have rued the day they surrendered their pleasant homes and surroundings in the country and moved to the city.

To the older people the danger lies not so much in the liability to be led into actual and open participation in evil ways, as in the cooling of religious ardor and into a backslidden condition. What they are forced to witness from day to day is in nowise adapted to strengthen their faith. Lot, it would appear, endeavored to maintain his integrity, but the odds were against him, and he vexed his righteous soul from day to day with the filthy conversation of his ungodly neighbors. He was an unwilling witness of all their unlawful deeds. It is so with the countryman who moves to the great city.

The greatest danger lies in the demoralization, not to say the corruption, of the children. Young and impressible, it is no great task to lead them off with the error of the wicked. They soon learn that dress is an important item in city life. It must be of a better quality and in greater variety than demanded in the country. The desire for dress must be gratified. With this gratification comes the desire to mingle more freely with society, and society, with its dances, card-parties, etc., too often drives away all seriousness, and the souls are soon wholly given to the world. With parents in an indifferent religious state, and given up to money-making, and the children in the clutches of the world, it really looks as if moving to the city has proved a curse rather than a blessing.

The moral of pitching towards Sodom is this: It is running a great risk to leave a good country home and go to the city merely for the sake of better worldly advantages. If you have good health, pleasant surroundings, and a growing family, better stay on the farm.

A PLEASANT OUTING.

The public-spirited managers of the New Orleans Times-Democrat planned an outing for the poor children of the city, and with characteristic energy kept the matter before the people, pleading for the little ones, and for means to make the outing a success. They generously headed the list of contributors with one hundred dollars in cash, in addition to perhaps fourfold that amount in time and labor necessary to carry out their plan. Citizens responded cheerfully with money and provisions; mattresses and blankets were supplied, and everything was in abundance. There was no lack. Men and women volunteered their services to look after the children. Committees were appointed, and every detail of the outing was carefully laid out and placed under competent supervision. Nothing was overlooked—the management being so thoughtful as even to arrange for a hospital, with a physician and trained nurses. The happy conception of the Times-Democrat materialized, and the outing was a grand success.

Seashore Camp Ground, seventy-eight miles from New Orleans, was selected as the place for the three days' airing, the consent of the Camp Meeting Association having been previously secured, and on Tuesday morning, August 27, with bag and baggage (the baggage in this case consisting of 500 mattresses, an equal number of blankets, boxes and barrels of groceries, a ton of bananas, a ton or two of ice, and other things), five hundred and nineteen children, as happy as ever lived, were transported across the lake and to the pleasant camping ground. They had three days of unrestrained liberty, save the liberty to do wrong, and for three days they enjoyed access to the water and the cool breezes of the Gulf. The children will never forget their stay at Seashore. It did them good. The moral benefit, no doubt, was as great as the physical.

One credit must be given in this connection to the authorities of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, who generously furnished transportation for everybody and everything at a very small cost. This was a kindness to be appreciated. Without it the outing could not have been given, except at a very much larger outlay of money. We heartily commend the railway officers for this act of kindness to the poor little ones, ranging in age from six to fifteen years, very few of whom never before were outside the limits of the city.

We congratulate all concerned on the great success of the undertaking. We are impressed with the words of the Master: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good."

ONE REASON.

Under the head of "One Reason," Brother H. M. Ellis, on page 2, speaks his mind, and, in doing so, re-enforces the position of the editor. We thank him. And we also thank him for calling attention to the slip in grammar. The matter is of more than ordinary importance, and we make no apology for calling attention to it so frequently. There is danger of having our order of service completely set aside. We recently attended a meeting of several days' duration, and at no public service did the congregation know when to sit, when to stand, or when to kneel. The attitude depended on the call or request of the leader. Sometimes the people would be called to "stand and sing" the opening hymn, and at the close the leader would say, "Let all remain standing," and then he would call on some one to lead in prayer, or lead himself. Frequently, at the close of the sermon, a call was made "to stand," and prayer would be offered, and often when the preacher said, "We will be dismissed"—the people, of course, standing—instead of pronouncing the benediction, prayer would be offered; and at least once while we were present, the people were called to sing on their knees. We try to comply with all proper requests on such occasions, but in Methodist meetings we never kneel to sing nor stand to pray.

A MILD REBUKE.

We watched with a good deal of interest the result of the special election for Representative in Warren county, Mississippi, which was held two weeks since. Three men were candidates for the place. Personally, we know nothing about either man. But the records of the court show that one of the candidates was indicted for murder and convicted, and sentenced to the State penitentiary for a long term. For some reason he was pardoned. The Governor may have been fully justified in exercising clemency. We do not know. But the man had not been out of prison more than a month when he went before the good people of Warren county and solicited their votes for the Legislature. He was beaten by a small plurality. Had there been only one man against him, he would doubtless have been beaten by a large majority. The rebuke was sufficient. The wonder is not that the gentleman was defeated, but that he should, under the circumstances, ask the suffrages of the people to help make laws for the State. Modesty, not to say a sense of propriety, should have restrained his ambition for a few months at least. It would have been a terrible blow to the State had he been sent to Jackson to legislate for the people. We are glad the State was spared.

AN INQUIRY ANSWERED.

In reply to an inquiry found in another column we beg leave to say: The Epworth League Department has not been discontinued. Nothing has been printed for the League recently because nothing has been furnished. Up to this time we have published every item of League news that has reached us. True, we have not printed everything sent in, for, as editor, we have omitted some things which we thought were not "good to the use of edifying." We will be glad for the Leaguers to use the ADVOCATE as a medium of communication, but in so doing they must understand that what they send is subject to editorial supervision. We stand guard over that department just as we do over every other department of the paper.

NO LENGTHY DISCUSSION.

A friend in a personal note expresses the idea that, in admitting to our columns an article on Sanctification, we have done the bravest thing of the decade. By this he means we have done an injudicious, if not a silly thing. He thinks we have opened the way for trouble, and will need sympathy before it is over, and offers his in advance. Our brother's fears are groundless. Brother Beeson's article was not intended to open a discussion, and none will follow. Our mind was made up on that point before the article was printed. One reply will be admitted, and that will be the end of it. That reply is in hand, and will be found in this issue of the ADVOCATE. No others need apply.

THE MAGAZINES.

The September magazines are rich in everything that goes to make up good reading matter. Where all are excellent, it would be hard to say which is best. Readers must judge.

Ladies' Home Journal is above criticism. Nothing better for mother, wife or daughter is published in this country. It represents perfection in the printer's art, and it contains reading matter for women in every department of life. It will help any home into which it is introduced. One dollar a year. Address the Curtis Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Century for size takes the lead, and is fully abreast its companions in all other respects. From the first article, "View from a New York Mid-Air Club," to the last department, "In Lighter Vein," it is not only readable, but interesting; and many articles are instructive and edifying. "Gossip of the Switch-Shanty," stories of railroad life and railroad men, is worth the price of the magazine; so is the story of "Isam's Spectacles" to one who enjoys a piece of real good humor. The Century sells at 35 cents a number. Century Co., Union Square, New York.

The Woman's Home Companion steadily grows in the things that make a good companion for women at home. It is a welcome visitor in the home of this editor, and is worthy of a place anywhere. A dollar invested for the Companion will be well spent.

St. Nicholas, conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge, and published by the Century Co., is for young folks. Bright young minds can find in this excellent magazine suitable reading both for recreation and instruction. It will please and do good. Three dollars a year.

McClure's, New York, ten cents a copy, is among the very best of the low-priced periodicals. It is not inferior in mechanical make-up and finish, including the illustrations, to the higher-priced magazines. It is inferior only in size. The experiences of the man who tonsed Europe and "Gave No Tip" is worth the price of the magazine. "Stories and Scenes of Farm Life" will be appreciated by all who have witnessed the scenes described.

Scribner's, by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, 25 cents a number, is not behind any of its predecessors. The table of contents is attractive—the bill of fare varied. The leading article, "The Poor in Summer," ought to be read by every man of heart and means who lives in a great city. It might open the eyes of a few who are blind. There are other papers of great merit, some of them by men of national reputation as writers. "The Beguiling of the Bears" is a good story.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, for September, would be hard to excel. "How Tuskegee Does Its Work," by Booker T. Washington, is a short history of the largest and, perhaps, the best school for the education, and training in useful work of the colored race, in the country. It will be read with zest. It reads like romance. The capture of Aguinaldo is also full of interest. The narrative is by one of General Funston's aides, who took part in the adventure. Frank Leslie's Monthly is still popular. New York. Ten cents a number.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. B. Clifford is engaged for the ensuing week to assist Rev. J. M. Morse, of Hattiesburg, in a meeting. Brother Clifford's services are much in demand.

Rev. L. C. Branscomb, of the North Alabama Conference, and family, after spending a fortnight or more at Seashore Camp Grounds, returned home last week.

Bishop Keener and family at Ocean Springs, Miss., have recently enjoyed a visit from Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Mount, of Baltimore, Md. Mrs. Mount is a sister of the Bishop.

Rev. J. H. Holland, late of Mississippi, but now of California, has changed his address from Stockton to 1712 Francisco street, Berkely, Cal. Correspondents are requested to take notice.

Dr. S. A. Steel is now president of Logan Female College, Russellville, Ky., and busily arranging for the coming session. He reports the prospect as very bright. We wish the Doctor great success in his new field of labor.

Rev. James Chapman, of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, has been named as fraternal delegate to our General Conference, which will meet next May. It is said that Mr. Chapman is the choice of Dr. D. J. Waller, who is a favorite in Southern Methodist circles. This fact will increase the welcome of Mr. Chapman.

Bishop Fitzgerald, of our church, recently had a pleasant meeting with Bishop Foster, of the M. E. Church, at his home in Massachusetts. The Bishop felicitously tells of this visit in Zion's Herald. His health, it appears, has not improved much of late. We trust that as cool weather approaches, he will gather strength, and that he will be able to meet his Fall engagements.

Some of our papers have said that Bishop Galloway failed to reach London in time to preach the opening sermon for the Ecumenical Conference. As these papers were printed at least a week before the opening of the session, we are at a loss to understand. Our information is that he had to cut short his work in Brazil in order to reach London and fulfill his engagement.

Mississippi Conference.

To the Presiding Elders and Preachers in Charge and Sunday-school Superintendents in the Bounds of the Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Your attention is called to the fact that by the action of the Sunday-school Board and the Board of Missions, the third Sunday in October is set aside as Rally Day for foreign missions in the Sunday-school. . . . A programme has been prepared, and will be sent on application," and without charge, if the preacher in charge or the Sunday-school superintendent will write to Dr. W. R. Lambuth, 346 Public Square, Nashville, Tenn., and ask for the number needed for his school—anywhere from ten to five hundred copies.

The presiding elders will please stir up the minds of the preachers in charge "by way of remembrance," and the preachers will stir the minds of the superintendents even more vigorously—if it be necessary so to do. Let Rally Day be observed by all our Sunday-schools.

About one-third of our preachers in charge and very nearly three-thirds of our local preachers in the Mississippi Conference do not subscribe for the Review of Missions—the finest missionary periodical of which this writer has any knowledge. It is only fifty cents a year. It reads well in connection with the Acts of the Apostles.

Let me commend to your careful and cordial consideration our new periodical, Go Forward, a sixteen-page monthly, neatly printed and attractively illustrated, and furnished subscribers at only twenty-five cents a year. Not less than five hundred subscribers ought to be obtained in each district in our Conference.

For $1 a subscriber can get the Review of Missions, Go Forward, and a copy of Mott's book, "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation"—and I know of no better way to invest $1.

Let me suggest that every presiding elder get these two periodicals and the book for himself (if he have not already done so), and encourage the preachers, traveling and local, to do likewise; and that every preacher see that not less than twenty-five copies of Go Forward be subscribed and paid for by the people in his pastorate. In some charges fifty or a hundred, or even two hundred, could be secured with but little effort. Our church in Yazoo City has paid for 176 copies, and every family in that charge has the privilege and pleasure of welcoming the bright visitor each month.

Reports indicate that the Seashore district will again lead the Conference in contributions to foreign missions, and will more than probably pay that assessment in full. The tidings for the Jackson district are also encouraging. The Forest district will be in advance of last year, and ought to meet every assessment in full. The same may be said of the Meridian district, where the presiding elder and the committee are working earnestly together. No late advices from the other districts. I trust they, also, are moving forward.

Waterproof.

MR. EDITOR: We are progressing. On Tuesday night, the eleventh of June, Bro. J. M. Henry, our presiding elder, opened a series of meetings in this place, preaching night and day to increasing congregations, until Sunday, the sixteenth, when we drove to Wesley Chapel, a distance of fourteen miles. Here Bro. Henry preached twice, as we had dinner on the ground. The congregation was the largest since the war. We returned to Waterproof for night services, and continued the meeting until Bro. R. H. Wynn, of your city, came to hold the fort. He reached us on Tuesday, the eighteenth, and carried on services for a week, except on Saturday, the result of which eternity will unfold. We thank these brethren for their good, earnest gospel preaching. It did the pastor much good.

The parsonage is being repaired through the untiring energy of Mr. Guy Hunter, one of our talented young men of Waterproof, with the assistance of his kind and noble mother, Mrs. Lila Hunter. Three rooms were papered, and the ceiling and gallery painted, the doors painted, and also a nice oak grain finish put on several. This work was done by Mr. Shields, of Natchez, a splendid painter and paper hanger. He also painted the mantles, giving them a marble finish. If any of the brethren want a finished workman in the painting line, we recommend Mr. Shields. You, Mr. Editor, can imagine our pleasure in the enjoyment of this fresh appearance of our comfortable parsonage. Though this is our last year, and only a few months to remain, we are glad to present this lovely home, so well improved, to our successor—a better, in our judgment, nowhere to be found.

Harperville Circuit.

I have just closed my fourth protracted meeting, held at Liberty Church, six and a half miles northwest of Morton, Miss. The meeting lasted four days. I failed to get the ministerial help that was promised, and had all the preaching to do myself. God was with us, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon us, the church wonderfully revived, and all Christians attending the meeting greatly blessed. Large congregations were on hand up to the very last service, and good order prevailed from the beginning to the close. There were five accessions to the church. Bro. Franklin (the blind preacher), of the Protestant Methodist Church, was with us and rendered valuable assistance in the meeting. To God be all the praise.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have held two of our meetings. In the first we had no ministerial help, but the Lord was with us, and we had eighteen additions to the church. In our second meeting Bro. V. C. Curtis, of Starkville circuit, did the preaching from Monday night till the close on Thursday night. We had a good time, and closed with eleven additions. Bro. Curtis is one of our bright young men in his first year on trial. He preaches well, and is a fine worker in revival services. I am ready to vote to continue him on trial. He made many friends among our people, and our prayers go with him.

Tunica, Miss.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: We closed a great meeting at Tunica on the fifteenth. Bro. Norsworthy came with his tent, and began preaching on the first Sunday; preaching with power for several days, when Bro. McIntosh came and preached and labored as but few men can do. We had about sixty conversions of the old-time power; not the counting of hands. Twenty-five joined our church; others joined other churches. It was a time of great power.

Fraternally, J. W. HONNOLL.

MR. EDITOR: We closed a meeting at Slaughter last Sunday night, resulting in seventy-five conversions and thirty accessions to the Methodist Church; a few persons joined other churches. Rev. E. E. Riggs did all the preaching.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: Thorough Instruction . . . the Lowest Possible Rates.

A CHRISTIAN TRAINING SCHOOL for Girls . . . Its Home School . . . Its Library . . . Its Literary Societies . . .

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories, and basement . . . building 200x70 feet, with wings 50x40 feet, wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class rooms, music hall, reception rooms, and bed rooms (only two girls in a room). Electric lights, water on every floor, with fire plugs every fifty feet; the celebrated system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building), Low-Hammond system of sanitation (dry closet, evaporation, ferrule of chemicals and sewer); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian. It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose, namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough. There are six Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no sham pretension or show. Thorough is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful. The purpose and work of the school have commended it to patrons. Growth. Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years: 79, 85, 88, 126, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, six; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1891, $25,000; at present $75,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation of the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

Vital Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease - Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

To-day we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence; that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time.

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" to benefit its readers at every opportunity, and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write to-day to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

MISS PRISSY'S PERCEIVINGS.

"Yes, I've been visitin' my married niece, Malviny, in the city," said Miss Prissy, with the air of a traveled person, as she threaded her needle afresh. "I mostly allers go there in February, when there's a breathin' space after makin' folks' Winter clothes, 'nd I kin git an idee of the Spring fashions. Ef she is my own niece, Malviny's as clever 'nd sensible a woman ez you'd find anywhere, 'nd she's bringin' up her children to be a credit to the old stock. She hez a mighty smart boy, her oldest one, Daniel Webster they've named him; he ain't but six years old, but he kin read ez nice ez you please—'nd one day when I wuz there, the garbage man came round the street. City folks hev'n't got no chickens nor pigs to feed scraps to, 'nd so they hev garbage men to come round with their carts. I'd rather hev pigs—they're a sight cleaner, to my mind. But this man he had a new cart, 'nd he wuz a tall, well-lookin' young feller, 'nd he took little Dan'l's fancy, he 'nd his horse, ez he went along shoutin', 'Gar-bage!' loud enuff to reach from here to the Corners; only, owin' to the city noise, you couldn't hear him more'n three doors off in Malviny's street.

"Dan'l he stood 'nd watched him dumpin' out the cans—'nd not half doin' it, either, but leavin' lots in the bottom every time—'nd then he turned round 'nd sez to Malviny: 'Mother, do you know what I'm goin' to be when I grow up?'

"'Why, no,' sez Malviny. 'Spose you tell Aunt Prissy 'nd me.'

"'Well,' sez Dan'l, lookin' ez earnest ez possible, 'I'm goin' to be a garbage man, mother!'

"That's when I realized jest how sensible Malviny is. She 'nd Henry hev the biggest kind of plans for that boy, 'nd yit she didn't look a mite disturbed. She jest put her arm round him 'nd hugged him up.

"'All right, dear,' she sez. 'But I want you to promise mother jest one thing.' Dan'l looked awful interested, 'nd listened with all his might. 'Remember, when you're a garbage man, always to clean out the cans down to the very bottom, so you'll be a good garbage man. Whatever your work is goin' to be, son, do it right.'

"Dan'l promised. He ain't goin' to forgit that idee, either. Ef Malviny hed given him a long lecture on wantin' to be a great man, 'nd not a wuthless one, p'raps he'd hev understood it 'nd p'raps he wouldn't. But she hit the nail right on the head 'nd drove it into his mind, and it'll stay fastened. Whatever Dan'l does he'll clean his cans to the bottom when he grows up.

"Afterwards, when we wuz goin' about the city, I thought over 'nd over again what a wonderful place any town would be where all the folks, so to speak, cleaned out their cans conscientious-like. Ef all the business men hed that sperrit, 'nd all the clerks 'nd the workers, 'nd the lawyers 'nd doctors, 'nd butchers 'nd grocers, 'nd the school-teachers, 'nd the factory hands, 'nd even the street sweepers—I guess that'd be a good place to begin at, judgin' from the way the pavements looked—why, there wouldn't be any need of hevin' to reform every city in jerks, the way they hev to do it now. Folks is too busy bringin' up their children to be ambitious 'nd eager to make money 'nd fame, to teach 'em the root of the matter instid, ez Malviny did to Dan'l.

"We can't most of us choose what we'll do in life, but we kin choose how we'll do it. 'Nd when we're judged by our works, we'll not be asked whether we liked our job or not, but whether we did it right. P'raps most folks would like to hev their daily work different from what it is, 'nd be senators 'nd millionaires 'nd geninses, 'stid of butchers 'nd bakers 'nd candlestick makers; but that doesn't excuse 'em from not cleanin' to the very bottom of the cans that they're responsible fer—no, indeed! I wish Malviny hed hed the trainin' of a good many boys I know, right here in this village, 'nd their sisters, too—fer women are jest ez slack-twisted ez men, when it comes to that, for all they talk about wantin' to do the work of the world.

"It's a poor lesson that you can't take home to yourself, too. I know I got mighty tired the other day of plannin' 'nd piecin' out Mis' Stebbins second-best black silk. It wuz the third time I'd made it over, 'nd I kinder lost interest in it. I caught myself layin' the pattern on it jest any way, 'nd I riz up 'nd sez to myself, 'Clean your cans, Prissy!' 'nd then I screwed up my sperrit hard, 'nd tackled the back breadths. 'Nd, after all, it did come out nice; Mis' Stebbins sez it's the tastiest skirt I ever made her, in all the twenty-odd years I've been workin' fer her. I cleaned to the bottom of the can that time, anyway—fer there wuz fourteen piecin's in that skirt, 'nd every one under the flounces!' And Miss Prissy's eyes beamed with professional pride as she finished laying her hem.—Helen Ross Laird, in Wellspring.

Mother's Wish.

I read a very pretty story the other day about a little boy who was sailing a boat with a playmate a good deal larger than he was.

The boat had sailed a good way out in the pond, and the big boy said: "Go in, Jim, and get her. It isn't over your ankles, and I've been in every time."

"I daren't," said Jim. "I'll carry her all the way home for you, but I can't go in there; she told me I mustn't dare too."

"Who's 'she'?"

"My mother," replied Jim, rather softly.

"Your mother! Why, I thought she was dead," said the big boy.

"That was before she died. Eddie and I used to come here and sail our boats and she never let us come unless we had strings enough to haul in with. I ain't afraid, you know I'm not; only she did not want me to, and I can't do it."

Was not that a beautiful spirit that made little Jim obedient to his mother even after she was dead?—Exchange.

Literature and Child-Life.

As far as any real advantage to mind and thought is concerned, much of the reading done by children might better be omitted altogether. Particularly pernicious is the enervating and tasteless pap usually offered to children under the name of "juvenile literature," which, with its commonplace treatment of commonplace themes, its presentation of the child to itself as a hero, its preoccupation with the immature stage of life and thought, deals with the child on its own level merely, ill exercising the child's mind in real power of thought, and ill preparing it for maturity. The reading given to children should always be of a quality sufficiently high to afford the adult mind entertainment or nourishment. There need be no fear that such reading will be beyond the child's comprehension. The normal child is far keener to appreciate and understand the best in literature than is commonly supposed, and should have it as a necessary part of training. A background of good literature, absorbed at home—not as a task, but as a spontaneously sought pleasure—gives that touch of distinction, that breadth and ease, that denote culture, and that are painfully lacking in the average student.—Kate Holloday Claghorn, Ph.D., in "College Training for Women."

Witnessing by Looks.

A beautiful little story is told of a young lady missionary in Japan whose peaceful face witnessed for Jesus:

Miss B—— was traveling by steamer from one Japanese seaport to another. On the same boat was a Japanese merchant whose business anxieties had so worried and annoyed him that he was seriously contemplating suicide. He noticed Miss B—— sitting quietly by, looking over the water with such an expression of perfect peace upon her face, that he found himself turning to look at her again and again.

He did not know her, but he said to himself: "It must be she is one of the foreign Christians. Perhaps it is something in her religion which makes her face so calm and bright."

Addressing her with profound respect, he made known his strange request and sorrowful reason for asking the way that gave the heart a peace so great that the face spoke of it in every look. He listened to Miss B—— as she told him the Gospel story, and it made such a deep impression upon him that he resolved to accept as his own the Savior, whose gift is peace.

Do your face and mine bear testimony that we have "been with Jesus?"—The Kingdom.

Affection in the Home.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is weakness. They return from a journey, greet their families with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg surrounded by its broken fragments.

There is hardly a more unnatural sight than one of those families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in Nature's scenery than be robbed of the hidden treasure of his heart? Cherish, then, your heart's best affections. Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial and fraternal love.—Miss Mulock.

Close Friends.

A very ordinary-looking farm-horse, harnessed to an old wagon, stood by the curb, and on the board that served for a seat lay a small dog of such mixed blood that no guess could be made as to his breed. As a delivery wagon passed on the opposite side of the street a large red apple fell off. Before it stopped rolling, the dog bounded across the street, picked it up with his teeth, and, with tail wagging, rushed back to the horse. In front of it he stood up on his hind legs while the horse took the apple from his mouth. As the horse munched the apple he made the peculiar little noise that horses make when petted, and doggie replied with throaty little barks which plainly told what a pleasure it had been to go after that apple. Then he went back to his place on the wagon seat.—Youth's Companion.

To the Anxious Hostess.

I pray you, O excellent wife, cumber not yourself and me to get a curiously rich dinner for this man or woman who has alighted at our gates, nor a bed chamber made ready at too great a cost; these things, if they are curious in them, they can get at a few shillings at any village; but rather let the stranger see, if he will, in your looks, accents and behavior—your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, which he can not buy at any price, in any city, and which he may well travel twenty miles and dine sparingly and sleep hardily, to behold. Let not the emphasis of hospitality lie in bed and board; but let truth and love and honor and courtesy flow in all your deeds.—Emerson.

Goose for a Guide.

In a village in Germany a blind old woman was led to church every Sunday by a gander, who used to take hold of her gown with his bill. When he had safely conducted the poor women to her seat, he would go back to the church yard and graze there till service was over. When he saw the people coming out of church he went back to his blind mistress and led her safely home. One day a gentleman called at the woman's house, and when he found that she was not at home he told her daughter that he was very much surprised at her mother having gone out. "Oh, sir," said the girl, "we are not afraid of trusting her out, for the gander is with her."—Presbyterian.

The First Twenty Years.

Live as long as you may, the first twenty years form the larger part of your life. They appear so when they are passing; they seem so when we look back on them; and they take up more room in our memory than all the years that come after them.

Take good care of the first twenty years of your life. On the use which you make of them your happiness and usefulness in after years will very largely depend. See that they are spent in learning right habits and cultivating good tastes.—Selected.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities, and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

RELIGION AT HOME.

As in certain latitudes an absolutely cloudless day is a very rare thing, so it is seldom indeed that one comes into intimate association with any human being in whose character one detects no flaw, or whose bearing and conduct through a long succession of years provoke no feeling save that of admiration and affection. It seems very clear that only as one lives in constant touch with the invisible can one hope to touch the hem of His garments who set the splendid example of perfection in the midst of an iniquitous generation.

Some men and women keep in stock a sort of artificial religion which is used for exhibition purposes alone. In the public service, in the religious convention, in their casual contact with others, they are devout in their attitude and extremely religious in their conduct. They are by no means conscious and intentional hypocrites. But their religion is very superficial. It is a dress-parade affair, and often it vanishes when they are in the privacy of the domestic circle. It is not worth while, they think, to be careful of speech or conduct when only the wife and children, or the husband and children, as the case may be, are present. This contradiction between the public and the domestic life has much to do with the cynical and contemptuous attitude of the children of many professedly Christian people toward the church.

The old colored brother who remarked that he "could say more good in ten minutes" than "he could do in a week," was an exceptionally frank representative of a very large class. There is something about a religious meeting, even apart from its spiritual influences, that impels us to present the best possible appearance, and we are seldom wholly natural when in the company of strangers or casual acquaintances. In the retirement of our own homes our true natures come out. We are both at our best and our worst there, especially our worst. Not that we mean to create an unfavorable impression upon the members of our own household—we desire to enjoy their confidence and their respect—but it is easy to be impatient and surly and discourteous, and there are times when we fall beneath temptation.

While we may not mean to do wrong, the fact remains that disagreeable and inconsistent conduct at home does produce ugly thoughts, and sometimes has a very injurious effect upon the lives of those we really love, but toward whom we sometimes act as though we really cared less for them than for any other persons in the world. The duty before those of us who are conscious that our home religion is not what it ought to be is clear. We need to inaugurate a radical change. We ought to use our best manners and our most gracious courtesies in the home circle. Next to what God thinks of us, the most important and vital thing to us is what the wife or husband or children really think of us deep down in their secret hearts.

It may be a little difficult for some of us to understand that our first duty is to our family. It may require much prayer and thought and effort to get out of the rut of carelessness and indifference in which we have been walking. But it is clearly our duty to make the effort. If we fail to-day, then there is nothing to do but to make another attempt. After a while the habit of courtesy and deference and loving affection for the various members of the household will become second nature, and we will be as solicitous for their well-being as we have hitherto been indifferent. Besides, we do not need to undertake this great work of transforming personal character in our own strength. Divine aid will come to our help for the asking.—Central Christian Advocate.

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. JUDITH MAY BERNARD (nee Crews) was born in New Iberia, La., Nov. 29, 1878; converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, July 7, 1895; was married to Rev. A. A. Bernard, Nov. 28, 1900, and after a long, painful illness of seventy-one days, departed this life Aug. 10, 1901. Sister Bernard's life was one of consecration and devotion to her Lord and church; of modest, timid disposition, yet with a firmness of character and evenness of conduct that made her life of inestimable worth to those who were intimate with her. Her death seemed premature; just as she was entering upon life. There was so much promise; so much, it seems, that would have made life useful and happy. But death comes when we least expect it, and disrobes us of our fondest hopes, our brightest expectations, our dearest treasures, and leaves us so empty, so helpless. But God knoweth best; we can not understand, but all is well. She often told her husband, who watched at her bedside night and day throughout her long illness, that she would not recover; that it would be all right. She was ready for the change, and God took her. We are glad she lived; glad that we knew her life of devotion, patience, and faith; glad that the influence of her life is left me. We were sad when she left us, but the world is better because of her life. May God comfort and console the broken heart of her devoted husband and bereaved lives of her fond parents and relatives! May they feel nearer to heaven because she is there! May each day find them journeying toward the land of eternal day, where no suffering or sadness or death shall ever come!

RORT. W. VAUGHAN.

New Iberia, La.

Near Delhi, La., on the fourth of August, at 5:25 in the afternoon, ELENOR, and on the fifth of August, at 1:30 in the afternoon, ELOISE, twin daughters of Robert and Annie Armstrong, of scarlet fever, after four days' illness, aged three years and two and three days. Like beautiful shadows upon life's changing events come the little darlings to brighten for a brief time the home of the fond parents; but as roses bloom and wither, and violets peep from their leafy nooks for a short period to fade and disappear, so have their little budding lives expanded and passed to a higher life. Memory only is left of their loved forms and prattling tongues and pretty sayings, with the sunshine and happiness they gave. All now is gloom and despair, with empty arms and broken hearts that refuse to be comforted. Time only can soothe the grief that stifles, and ease the heartaches of the stricken parents, and enable them to take up the broken threads, and find in their noble boy, left to them, a comfort and unmotioned pride to live on and nobly work out the lives given to them, realizing that the "power of love" will reunite them to their darlings some day in that beautiful spirit world, and maybap they will think more of the eternal life than the fleeting days of this life. May angel guides help them in their sorrow, and teach them that they have not gone but for a little while from them, and at night "they may feel the touches of little hands!" M. B. F.

NANCY WEBSTER was born April 13, 1820, in Giles county, Tenn. She was married in 1840 to W. H. Riggan, who died in 1861. This union was blessed with seven children—four boys and three girls—two of whom (Mrs. D. B. McKinney, of Smithville, Miss., and Mrs. Amelia E. Wood, of Fort Worth, Texas) survive her. She was married in 1873 to William Webster, who died in 1880. She professed religion when quite young, and never wavered from the path of righteousness; but she has gone, with all her love and affection. Her sainted spirit took its flight from the suffering which she bore for many years with Christian fortitude, July 30, 1900, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wood, in Fort Worth, Texas, where she spent the last twenty years of her life. She is now with loved ones who preceded her above, waiting for others who miss and mourn her. May we follow in His footsteps, and be led into the kingdom above, as she followed in those of our Savior, so that we may be at last united forever! A FRIEND.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

That is a suggestive incident some one gives of a blind man who always carried a lantern when on the streets at night. Some one met him one night, and, observing that he was blind, asked him why he carried a lantern. "I carry the lantern," he said, "that people may not stumble over me." What a lesson in that for every Christian. Paul once wrote to certain professed Christians, "For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ." And Jesus said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Southern Churchman.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Paul was a minister of God, guided by the Spirit of God. Yet at all times he exercised his best judgment as to what he should do and where he should go. There was consultation, the study of all considerations bearing upon the case as it came before him. When he gathered what the will of God was, he promptly and confidently went forward.—Selected.

Wesleyan Female College,

MACON, GA.

Highest curricula for young ladies in this section of the South. Special and Elective Courses. A corps of 25 teachers, every one of whom is a specialist in his department.

One of the strongest Music Faculties on the Continent with their renowned Prof. Edouard Hesselberg one of the world's greatest pianists, a pupil of Rubenstein, as its Director and with no less honor is it who has not had the best advantages that either Europe or America could afford.

Art and Elocution teachers that are unsurpassed. Our new Art teacher, Miss Prosser, after studying and teaching art for years in this country, has just returned from a three years' study of art in Paris, and is, perhaps, the finest art teacher in the South. Every department up-to-date.

A quarter of a million dollars invested in buildings and grounds, and another magnificent four story brick building recently raised by the Trustees "Roberts Hall," just completed, furnishing room for one hundred additional pupils, and affording eight large Lecture Rooms for the Departments of Natural Science and History. An excellent Academy for those not prepared to enter College.

Fall term begins Sept. 18, 1901. Prospective students will do well to apply as early as possible, as our rooms are being rapidly taken, and we can accommodate only 250 in the boarding department.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured by Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. Rev. C. C. DAVIS,
Eld. M. E. Church, South,
No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clark Superior Court, Randolph Co., Ga.

Industrial Home at East Mississippi Female College.

On Sept. 18 we will open an Industrial Home for Girls in connection with East Mississippi Female College and Conservatory of Music, to be run on similar plan to State Industrial Schools, in which girls can live at much less expense, yet have the same excellent College and Conservatory advantages, and the benefit of the marvelous religious influence of the College. By close economy a girl can get through on $100 a year, board and tuition.

Tuition and board in the College "Annex" or Wesley Hall, $150. Tuition and board in the main building, $175. All buildings within 50 yards of each other. Teachers in all the buildings, same rules and same teachers for all students.

For particulars write to
J. W. BERSON, President,
Meridian, Miss.

Notice.

To the Corresponding Secretaries and Treasurers of the W. F. M. Societies of the Mississippi Conference—

DEAR SISTERS: The time for your quarterly reports is drawing near. Please send reports of work to your respective district secretaries, and report all money to Mrs. J. P. Drake, Summit, Miss., by Sept. 10.

Bluff Creek Camp Meeting.

AUG. 9–18, 1901.

When 1,500 people assemble to hear the regular ministry in a section little given to churchgoing, it proves two things: that self-glorifying evangelists are not needed, and the days of camp meetings are not past and gone.

The fifty, or more, tents were packed with people. There is need of a larger, first-class hotel. If it were let out on a three-year plan, and thirty-five cents charged for dinner, double the number would patronize it. As it is, it was over-run with custom.

The singing was conducted by Rev. J. B. Kent; Misses Brame and Schwing, organists, and Mrs. Coburn, leading soprano. They did not have song books enough for the choir. Rev. H. B. Carre lined the hymn on one occasion, and met with magnificent responses from the congregation. May not this solve congregational singing? The so called choir and organ has done its deadly work, and our people have not a religious experience which inspires song. "Be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs; singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." The singing improved wonderfully at Bluff Creek, as they seemed more hymn books and more of God's Spirit.

The preaching of Brothers P. M. Brown, J. I. Hoffpanir, F. S. Parker, and H. B. Carre, was dynamic and inspirational. W. R. Harvell and W. J. Porter saved men in the pulpit and out. These people never heard more fruitful and forceful preaching.

The preachers' tent had only one smoker in it. The instincts of prayer made the services powerful rather than the outstincts of pipes and cigars. It was a set of preachers who prayed.

The 5 P. M. men's prayer meeting, led of the Holy Spirit, sought out many, and the best personal workers went down after clean hearts and Spirit-filled lives. Several effective conversions resulted among the men. The ladies' prayer meeting was well attended and helpful.

At one service 107 testified that the camp meeting had been a great spiritual uplift, and 38 stood up to pray for salvation. There were over 20 conversions at one altar service. The good done sweeps over a vast territory. The presiding elder, after a peculiarly powerful exposition from Jer. viii, 20, the altar was filled. Some were saved. The congregation dismissed. Some, warming up, began to sing. In about fifteen minutes one girl was converted where she stood singing. The grace light flashed in her eyes, the harvest was past, the Summer was ended, and yet she was saved.

The gospel has wrought wonders in this section. It stirred one with pride to note the increasing neatness, politeness, decorum and order of these great multitudes in and out of the services.

The Board of Trustees labored day and night for the comfort and convenience of the tenters. Our hearts were strangely warmed within us at the hospitable communion of saints. The power of God in its moving melting unity was there. It was a banquet of bliss.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

The assassination of President McKinley at the Buffalo Exposition, on Friday last, was as atrocious as any crime of the character on record. Perhaps we would be justified in saying it was more dastardly than the slaying of President Lincoln or President Garfield, for in this case the murderer feigned friendship, and had taken advantage of the privilege of shaking hands with the President to carry out his murderous plot. In the midst of an eager crowd anxious to do honor to the President, and to have the honor of a hand clasp, he approached Mr. McKinley, extended one hand, and with the other bandaged as though it were wounded, but really in which bandage was concealed his weapon, he shot the President, emptying the contents of two chambers of the pistol into his body. One wound, though painful, is comparatively harmless. The other is dangerous, and up to this date has given the attending surgeons and the country at large a great deal of anxiety. Fears are not yet allayed, for while all symptoms are favorable, it is known that the wounds are dangerous, and symptoms may take a turn for the worse at any time.

Of course, the murderer is an anarchist and a foreigner. His name is said to be Czolgosz. Whether he committed the deed on his own motion, or whether he was the agent employed by a society of anarchists, is not yet known. It is thought, however, that he had accomplices, and was selected to carry out their designs. It is well known that anarchists are organized, and are in considerable numbers in our country. It is either a fearful state of things that makes such an organization possible in our land, or else the men engaged in plotting destruction are desperately depraved, and naturally bent to evil. But the laws of our land and the moral sentiment of the people ought to be strong enough to crush out any such organization, and put an end to the assassination of our citizens. If present laws are not sufficient, they ought forthwith to be amended, or superseded by laws that will prove efficient. We think the country is now ready for ridding itself of anarchists.

The Need of a Missionary Conscience.

BY REV. C. S. EMBREE.

In order that we may know as to whether we need a certain article or not, it is first necessary to know whether that article will do what we want, or need to have done; also, is the want lawful and right, or not.

Now, is missionary work lawful and right in the sight of God? Certainly it must be so, for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John iii, 16.) It is evident from this that God did not intend his divine religion for a favored few, but for the world at large. The world at large not having as yet received that knowledge of his love and saving grace, it is evidently somebody's business to convey that knowledge to the world. Whose, then, is the business? Certainly none other than those who have received of this love, for how can we give of that we have never received? Hence it is to the church that Christ gave the command to "go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi, 15.) This not having as yet been fully done, we are led to enquire into the reason why. This, in turn, leads to the enquiry, What is a missionary conscience? Webster defines conscience as being the faculty which decides on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of our actions or affections; the moral faculty, the moral sense, the estimate or determination of conscience; real sentiment, truth, justice, honesty, reason, or reasonability. A missionary conscience, then, is an active, living, comprehensive faculty or knowledge of the lawfulness, justice, truth, honesty, reasonableness of God's command to "go ye into all the world."

That this conscience is needed is evidenced by the fact that we so often hear the remark, "I don't believe in so much fuss about the heathen," and, "We are spending too much money on the heathen now," clearly showing that the church, as a whole, does not possess the knowledge of the lawfulness, justice, honesty, and reasonableness of God's command, 'Go ye;" but in its stead have a narrow, contracted, selfish mind upon the question; thus the reason our missionary collections are so hard to raise.

May God hasten the day when our people will be fully possessed of a missionary conscience in the fullest sense!

The Spiritual Gain in Self-Denial for Missions.

BY REV. R. E. RUTLEDGE.

Spirituality consists in being inspired and led by the Holy Ghost. God uses the spiritual man, and, perhaps, none other, in extending his kingdom, for it is a spiritual kingdom. The more spiritual the man, the more useful he may be in the Lord's vineyard. Spiritual attainment, therefore, should be the earnest desire of every soul. What, in this attainment, has self-denial for missions? We answer, A very important part. When we say missions we do not mean, as a field for operation, China, and not Brazil, or Mexico, or the heathen at our door, but we include the rich and poor, the high and low of all nations, of all classes and tongues, from the rivers to the ends of the earth—"All for Christ." If any man has not the missionary spirit, he is not a follower of the Lord Jesus. Christ possessed this spirit, and this spirit possessed him. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." One of the first impulses that a man born from above has is to help save some one else. When Philip found the Lord, he sought out Nathanael and brought him to Christ. Let that self-denial be made that is necessary to carry these divine impulses into effect, and you have a deeply spiritual man—one whose peace is deeper than the sea, whose joy is full, whose faith is greater than the mountains, and whose love never faileth. Let this spirit of self-denial pervade Christendom, and we will not only have the greatest revival that was ever known, but we will possess the necessary forces, with Christ as our captain, to bring the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In What Respect Am I Engaged in the Work of Saving the World?

BY REV. P. H. HOWSE.

This is a question of vital moment to every professed follower of our Lord; and the answer each of us makes to the question will reveal the conscious relation we sustain to him, as well as show to the world our appreciation of his kingdom on earth.

In studying this question in its relation to the great commission, I realize that to each one of us is given an unlimited parish—one that not only opens every nation, but that also introduces us to each person therein as a claimant upon the redemptive mercies of Christ, and included in our obligations to him. Surely this calls for a cheerful and an immediate response to duty. If I am his, and possessed of his spirit, in some practical way I am engaged in the work for which he gave his life, and to which he has called me.

But how may I engage in this work? What is there I can do, and thus become a worker for him? If there are any about me who know him not, my mission to them is a consistent walk before them, that they may see the power of Christ in me, and turn to him.

But how can I reach those who are away from me, and yet have these claims upon me? Neither the earnestness nor the effectiveness of my prayers are limited by distance nor bounded by circumstances. I can go with each one of them to a throne of grace, and there plead, as for myself, for the mercy so abundantly secured for every soul in Christ.

And while I may not be able to go to every one in person, I can help send those who can go, and thus be represented in the work of every missionary in the field. Thus the Lord has made it easy for me to be personally engaged in the great work to which he has called me, and to hear him say in that last day, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" But what am I doing for the cause of my Lord? And what are you doing?

Paul's Vision.

BY REV. R. H. BARR.

This great scholar and preacher's missionary zeal was voiced in his life and labors. A more illustrious character of deeper piety has never adorned the pages of Holy Writ; a man of untiring energy and heroic courage. The moment he touched the hem of Christ's garment the divine life swept into his whole being, and imparted a towering flame of missionary zeal that brought him into proximity to the true secret of the gospel of the Son of God. While the stars shone above his head, and all nature was clothed in the habiliments of slumber, Paul, tired and weary from continuous labor, yielded to nature's sweet restorer, and soon passed into the land of slumber, and while reposing sweetly, God revealed to him the great need of Macedonia's having a living Christ in a most marvelous manner. A man from that clime calling in tones plain and simple, yet with a solicitude and an anxiety that brought St. Paul from a state of slumber to wakefulness, and raised his missionary zeal to the zenith of its glory and the realization of pushing the gospel to the ends of the earth, that the world might some bright day be baited with the fiery zeal of God's love. And while man and nations are calling to us from other climes, may we be so filled with the Pauline spirit that we may be able to laugh at every opposition and push the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, and then every kindred and tongue can acclaim with one voice, "Hallelujah! hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

Prayer for Missions and Our Missionaries.

BY REV. E. C. GUICE.

The true child of God can not restrain prayer for our missionaries and for their work, for it all not only represents our interest felt in the cause for which Christ gave his life, but the investment of ourselves in that cause. In the eyes of "Our Father" nothing can be more beautiful than a great church before him in supplication that he would glorify himself in the work we are doing for him. And the names of our missionaries, as well as the names of their fields of labor, should be household words in all the homes of the church, so that we can pray for each with that earnest zeal with which we pray for those whom we love. Every true child of God among us must have the salvation of the lost world at heart, and often finds himself in earnest wrestling with God in prayer to that end. He finds the same great love that inspired the life of Christ, as revealed in the gospel, inspiring his own thought and life, and gives expression thereto in his petitions to the Father.

All that is beautiful and ennobling in his own experience, or that he has seen manifested in the lives of others, he recognizes as possibilities in the life and experience of every soul for whom Christ died, and he earnestly prays for the accomplished fact. One can not know the spirit of Christ, and not realize that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." And as he has received the gift of God in his own soul, he nails his colors to the flag-ship of the gospel, and waves it in the strength of prayer and faith.

While we should pray for the work and for the workers, we should also pray earnestly for an increase in the funds so much needed. Let us pray earnestly for the missionary spirit in the church that will inspire every member not only to pray for this great cause, but that will wing each petition made with an offering of our means that shall make our prayers effective. "How, then, shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?"

Incidents from the Field.

While laboring as a missionary in the City of Mexico, I was in our little mission school, now grown into Mary Keener Institute. After devotional service I was attracted by a poor, forlorn woman, who had come in and seated herself on the front seat. She had a young babe wrapped in her "reboco." It looked to be not more than two weeks old. When she caught my eye she said: "Senorita, I have coma for help. I have walked a league with this young babe to ask you for money to buy bread. My children are crying with hunger, and my husband died last night, and is lying on all the blanket we have." I gave her money to buy bread, and sent the Bible woman to look into the case. She soon returned and related this incident: There were two children left in the miserable hut (jacal), the eldest not more than five years old. Being unable to get a response from the father to their cry for food, the eldest had gotten a cup of water, and had the little one trying to hold apart the dead lips while he poured water between them, still pleading with the poor father to give them something to eat. The Bible woman made arrangements for a coffin to put the body in, as he was a member of our church, and reported the case to the authorities, so that the body could be removed. This is one incident of poverty.

I will relate one incident of faithfulness to myself. I had a servant girl named Felix, who was a truly converted girl. She went with me wherever I went in Mr. Weems' absence, and cared for me when alone and helpless. One morning, while alone, I awoke to find myself unable to rise, or even raise my head, while the most terrible nausea and fearful vertigo rendered me perfectly helpless. When Mr. Weems left, to be absent some days, he left me money to pay the printers—as he was temporarily in charge of the paper, with all his other work—and for other needs in the mission, so that I had quite a large sum of mission money in my hands. I had it in a trunk beside my bed, and the keys under my head. When Felix came for money to buy supplies for the day, I appealed to her, as a Christian, to take care of the mission money and of me, telling her the keys were under my head, and that she would find in a corner of the trunk my private purse. From it she could take money to buy supplies for the day for herself. She did as directed; then placed the keys under my head, and locked me in the house, carrying the key with her. She returned as speedily as possible, and did all she could to relieve me. I lay several days in this helpless condition before my husband returned. She was untiring in her efforts to care for me. When I examined into the mission funds, I found that and everything else perfectly safe. Felix remained with me as faithful servant and friend until she married one of our native preachers, and went with him to help him in his labors for the Master.

When Bishop Haygood held our Conference in the City of Mexico, Mr. Weems was so emaciated and feeble it was pitiful to see him, with muffled throat, trying to report his work. When the appointments were read, and the Bishop made some touching remarks explaining the necessity of sending Mr. Weems back to his old Conference to prolong his life, there was a deep groan issued from the preachers of his district, and they arose to their feet, as one man, and lifted him bodily in their arms. Feeling unable to bear the scene, I left the church and went in haste to the mission house, not knowing that I was followed by our Bible woman and some of the wives of our native preachers. They were all greatly excited, claiming that Mr. Weems was theirs. God had given him to them in answer to their prayers, and he could give him perfect health and strength there without having to come back home. They said God gave them my life also, and no one had a right to take us from them. Our leave-taking is a painful memory still. The teachers and pupils of our school went on foot to the depot; our Bible woman, stewards, and many other members of our church. When the last word was spoken and last embrace given, our faithful teacher fainted, showing how intensely they felt our leaving. It was a sad trial, but the Lord doeth all things well. We feel his hand guided us to Mexico, and he brought us back; so that there is nothing for us but to give him willing obedience.

Missions in the Louisiana Conference.

BY DR. JOHN T. SAWYER.

At the last Annual Conference, I was requested by resolution of the Conference Board of Missions to visit each District Conference in the interest of missions. Most of these Conferences were held at the same time as the Shreveport, and so I was not able to reach them. I, however, succeeded in spending two days at the Arcadia District Conference, and, in response to the courteous and urgent request of Presiding Elder Notestine, addressed the Arcadia brethren, and found that young presiding elder and his preachers wide awake on the subject. I feel very confident that the Arcadia district will report at New Iberia somewhat over their assessments for foreign and domestic missions. Notestine, Singleton, and the rest of them over there, are noble workers in the cause of missions.

Information reaching me from other sections of our territory encourage me to expect that two, and possibly three, other districts will pay out this year on both these claims. The grand totals for the Conference will be largely increased. By comparing the reports for Louisiana in the 1900 and 1901 Reports of the Board of Missions, I find that we have gone up the column a little. Louisiana stands now 19 for foreign missions as against 20 in 1900, and her percentage is 68 as against 66. Our percentage for domestic missions is 61 as against 60 in 1900. As a Conference, we have been on rising ground for several years, and we should seek to put Louisiana near the top of each column during this good year. Very much may be done during the few remaining months left us.

Let each pastor see that every Sunday-school on his work observes the third Sunday in October as Rally Day for foreign missions, as planned by the Sunday-school Board and the Board of Missions. Suitable programmes can be had from Nashville upon the application of pastors or superintendents.

One of the best ways in which to disseminate missionary information, and let our people know what their own denomination is doing, is to get our members to send five cents in postage stamps to the Board of Missions at Nashville for a copy of their last Annual Report. That pamphlet contains just what they need to know. Let us urge our people to send for the Report, and the good result will soon be manifest, as they are thus thoroughly posted in regard to the glorious work our church is doing for the salvation of the world.

One thing more: A missionary mass meeting held during October or November on every charge in our Conference would add hundreds of dollars to our amount for missions. It would help where the assessment has not been reached, and where the full assessment has been already raised, it would come in handy to thus have something over for Iagniappe, as they say in South Louisiana.

Shreveport, La., Sept. 3, 1901.

School Openings.

The High School at Poplarville, Miss., on the Queen and Crescent road about seventy miles from New Orleans, opened its ninth session on the second instant with the largest attendance in its history. Pupils are enrolled from all parts of South Mississippi and Southeast Louisiana. We are glad to record the success of this institution—one of the very best of the preparatory schools.

Grenada College has not yet opened, but will in a few days. Our information is that the prospects for a full school are very bright. The president is hopeful. He has done much hard work during the vacation, assisting the brethren in revival meetings and canvassing for the school. The school deserves success, and as it is our own Methodist property, our people in North Mississippi ought to rally as one man to its support. The property will be greatly improved by the addition of the proposed building.

Centenary College, Jackson, La., under the presidency of Dr. I. W. Cooper, began its seventy-fifth session on Sept. 4 with an unusually large number of students on hand. A dispatch we find in the New Orleans Picayune says: "President Cooper called the boys to order on the opening day in the spacious chapel, and, after devotional services, introduced the members of the faculty to the student body and visitors present. Each professor made a short talk to the boys, and thus inaugurated the work of what promises to be a very successful year. A notable feature is the presence of so many of the students of last session, who return with increased zeal. Centenary's past has been a record of fine work, and many notable men have been identified with her history."

The rector of an Episcopal Church in New York gives occasional dances for the purpose of raising funds to pay for the rectory, which is under mortgage. He says he has found that those who object to dancing are usually the ones who enjoy the light and heat of the church the whole year, and never pay a cent for it.—Exchange.

OUR MISSION FIELDS.

BY REV. J. L. REID.

Our foreign mission fields are China, Brazil, Japan, Mexico, Korea, and Cuba. We also have work for Germans and Indians.

China Mission, opened in 1848 by Drs. Taylor and Jenkins; organized in 1886 into an Annual Conference. We now have: Missionaries, 30; native traveling preachers, 12; members, 990—increase, 105; Sunday-schools, 26; scholars, 1,920; Epworth Leagues, 17; members, 582; organized churches, 19; churches self-supporting, 3; boarding-schools, 2; pupils, 357; day-schools, 10; pupils, 132; hospital, 1; dispensaries, 2; patients treated, 15,777; total value mission property, $139,120.

Japan Mission, opened in 1886. In this Annual Conference, organized in 1892, we have: Missionaries (including wives), 35; native preachers, 12; members, 666—increase, 66; Sunday-schools, 46; scholars, 1,315, organized churches, 15; churches self-supporting, 2; boarding-schools, 3; pupils, 258; day-schools, 5; pupils, 264; total value mission property, $42,936.50.

Korea Mission, opened in 1895. Missionaries, 8; local preachers and helpers, 13; members, 163—increase, 47; Sunday-schools, 2; scholars, 40; dispensary, 1; patients treated, 596; total value mission property, $8,215.

Mexico Mission, opened in 1873. We have three Mission Conferences now in Mexico, organized as follows: 1885, '86, and '90. The fruits of the toil of twenty-seven years are: Missionaries, 30, native preachers, 48; members, 5,535—decrease, 185; Sunday-schools, 115; scholars, 3,595; Epworth Leagues, 43; members, 1,335; organized churches, 137; boarding-school, 1; pupils, 75; hospital, 1; total value of mission property, $119,717.52.

In the Brazil Mission, organized in 1866 we have: Missionaries, 21; native traveling preachers, 14; members, 2,356—increase, 355; Sunday-schools, 29; scholars, 1,419; Epworth Leagues, 3; members, 138; organized churches, 31; churches self-supporting, 5; boarding-school, 1; pupils, 60; total value mission property, $86,570.

Cuba Mission was organized in Havana in 1896, and in 1898 Cuba was taken under the control of the Board as a regular mission field. The statistics are as follows: Missionaries, 13; native traveling preachers, 3; members, 248—increase, 193; Sunday-schools, 11; scholars, 350; organized churches, 5; day schools, 8; pupils, 300.

The total receipts for foreign missions for 1899-1900 are $276,044.35. Of this amount the sum of $230,390.24 is from regular collections. The receipts of the Woman's Board amounted to $97,164.94; total from both Boards, $373,209.29. With a membership of 1,476,257, this makes an average contribution of 25 cents per member, or a fraction over 2 cents a month for foreign missions.

May God inspire the whole church with more missionary zeal and a spirit of Christian liberality that will enable us to realize the importance of the mission work, and contribute as God would have us contribute to carry on this glorious work!

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL AS A MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

BY REV. G. W. BACHMAN.

The missionary idea has ever been prominent among true, evangelical Christians, and never more so than at present. The zeal of to-day for the conversion of the world to Christianity is gratifying, but there is much to be done ere "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord." And there remains in the church much ignorance as to duty and indifference to the spiritual needs of the world which must be overcome ere the "earth is filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord."

In order to the growth and perpetuity of this missionary sentiment and work, the obligation enjoined by Christ upon the church to evangelize the world should be diligently inculcated in our Sunday-schools. Accordingly, provision is made for all our Sunday-schools to be organized "into missionary societies auxiliary to the Board of Missions." The purpose of this organization is to align the Sunday-school in spirit and practice with the missionary work of the church. It recognizes the children of the church as important subjects of the kingdom of God, and as capable agents in Christian service, and is designed to instruct them as to the nature, methods and results of missionary work, and to train them in prayer and systematic giving for the cause of missions.

Dr. Atkins, in the Sunday-school Magazine, October, 1900, says: "The children have been used to some extent by the Woman's Missionary Societies, and some churches have cultivated in a measure the Sunday-schools; but this agency, which presents, without any doubt, the best field for operating systematic giving, and for the systematic dissemination of missionary information, so absolutely necessary to the growth of a missionary conviction, is practically untouched, even in this, the closing year of the nineteenth century.

"The General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, has wisely directed that all our Sunday-schools shall be organized into missionary societies. This being true, no pastors or superintendents ever had a better opportunity for making a missionary church."

As to organization, we quote again from Dr. Atkins, as follows: "In order to have a society, is it necessary to elect a separate set of officers and have a separate time of meeting? This might be done under the law, but the consensus of opinion and the suggestions of the Sunday-school editor are against the separate organization. There is no better place than the Sunday-school to demonstrate the fact that the evangelization of the world is the business of the church—the whole church—and that the Sunday-school, as an organic part of the church, is itself a missionary agency.

"Then, again, the superintendent and officers have the Sunday-school in hand, and any separate organization of the same would cause confusion, and often conflict."

By action of the Board of Missions a regulation was made that the collection of one Sunday in each month be devoted to missions, and applied to the regular missionary collection of the church. Any school that does this is a missionary society, and by practically co-operating with the Parent Board in the circulation of missionary literature, and otherwise aiding in advancing the cause, it is entitled to recognition as an "auxiliary."

There are many benefits to be derived from an organized Sunday-school missionary society, but space will allow the mention of but two.

First. As an educational agency, information is imparted, enthusiasm is engendered, and the children are so trained in systematic giving and practical benevolence as to insure a more liberal church in the future than we have in the present.

Second. Financially, the church is aided in raising its assessments in full, and often an excess is added to the revenue for the promotion of the work.

A HOLY CHURCH AND MISSIONARY POWER.

BY REV. R. L. PHILLIPS.

"Is the church in a healthy spiritual state when she is not prepared to send missionaries who are called?"

The voice of Scripture is a negation of this question from beginning to end. These negative statements refer to the vital law and constitutional life of the church.

ITS NATURE AND DEFINITION.

"And gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all."

If the church, spiritually, is the "fullness of Christ," then the church, materially, is of that fullness "of him that filleth all in all." The material wealth of the church is of "these things" which "shall be added unto you," to "supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Therefore, there follows naturally the divine restriction on the doings of the church. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

It is furthermore evident that the Spirit's call for missionaries is God's pledge and proof to the church that her money "need" in sending them has been, or will be, "supplied." The church—"the body of Christ"—if she be not diseased, will not misappropriate this "need" or "supply" money, but as she "does all in the name of the Lord Jesus," she will bring it forth. In proportion to her diseased condition will she divert this "supply" money. If she be very leprous with worldliness, she will divert its bulk into worldly channels.

What shall the bride—"the body of Christ"—betray the sacred trust and treasure into the polluting hands of his arch-enemy? Will she be a zealous and servile patron of the superficial and ever-changing whims of the world? And is she not tainted and polluted in doing thus? What! is this 'she that looketh as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun and terrible as an army with banners?" Nay, but "for Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." Missionary result: 'And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory." "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God." God speed the day.

IMPORTANCE OF EARLY COLLECTIONS.

BY REV. J. B. BLACKBURN.

The fact that "without the necessary means, it is practically impossible to accomplish any purpose whatsoever," and the words of our Lord commending the wisdom in first counting the cost, or making the necessary preparation to meet all emergencies which may confront us in accomplishing that purpose. The command to preach, or carry, the gospel to all nations, when earnestly and prayerfully considered, plainly reveal to the ready and willing mind the vast importance of early and full collections to meet the obligations so wisely and mercifully placed upon those who have received the gospel, to carry it to those who are perishing for want of it.

Not only is it important that we insist upon the earliest possible collections, but from the freely admitted fact that those who make the earliest collections are the ones who, as a rule, report all collections in full.

Now, considering the above is only fair and reasonable, and admitting the same to be founded on truth and sound judgment, we will refer the reader to the following passages of Holy Writ for further consideration in the matter: I. Kings xiii, 13; Malachi iii, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12; I. Cor. xvi, 2.

NOTES FROM OUR CHINA MISSION.

BY MISS L. F. HUGHES.

On resuming the work temporarily suspended because of last year's disturbances, Miss Atkinson and Miss Williams, of the Woman's Board, write: "We found much to encourage and to gladden our hearts on our return after our long absence. The people gave us a cordial welcome, and are more friendly than ever before. We have long since outgrown our quarters at Zang-Taung-Aung, and decided, before beginning work again, to secure another house near, which could be used exclusively for woman's work. Had the house we have chosen been built for us, it could hardly be better suited to our purposes.

"There were about two hundred women present at our opening; many of them from the best families in Soochow. There are always from seventy-five to a hundred present at our women's meetings.

"We are reaching a better class of pupils this year also. The son of an ex-official is in the school, and has become a probationer. Three new promising probationers were received during the quarter. A well-to-do neighbor, whom we knew years ago, came of his own accord, two weeks ago, and asked for baptism. We are constantly being able to get better teachers, both from a literary and moral standpoint. The higher the literary standing, the more they seem to want reform."

Miss Reukin writes of a day-school at Sung-Kiang: "The pupils are evidently from good families, and are as responsive as any I have. The young teacher is one of the most satisfactory, progressive Christian Chinese I know. He takes kindly to every hint given concerning new methods of instruction, and has succeeded, within a month, in teaching the pupils to read the Bible intelligently rather than chanting, as they do their native books."

(Extract from an English daily, published in Shanghai, on the Need of Education for the Chinese.)

It is as certain as anything can be that ignorance is at the bottom of the anti-foreign outrages in China; ignorance at Peking, ignorance in the official yamens throughout the Empire, ignorance in the people themselves. Anything which can be done to dispel this ignorance should be most heartily encouraged, and that is why we have suggested that we forego our share of the indemnity on condition of a good part, or the whole of it, being devoted to the foundation of schools and colleges, for the benefit, primarily, of the Chinese. Everywhere we find the Chinese asking for enlightenment. The ideas of the Emperor, which he was removed from power for entertaining in 1898, have been filtering down through all ranks throughout the Empire, and everywhere we find a consciousness of ignorance and a desire for knowledge.

To educate the Chinese is more satisfactory in every way, and much less costly, than to coerce them with punitive expeditions; and they have, as a people, so much curiosity that they will eagerly avail themselves of every such opportunity to get new ideas. The good work which is being done all over China by missionary doctors, missionary school-masters and professors, and the men who devote themselves to such periodicals as the Wom Kwoh Kung Pao (Dr. Allen's paper) is not rewarded by recognition from kings and governments; but the transformation of China, which is coming on gradually, is the work of these men, and as the transformation of China means the opening of China, it is in the interest of us all to help it on.

HOW TO CREATE INTEREST IN A HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

BY MRS. G. A. GUICE.

Its first mission is to build homes for our preachers; then to rescue the perishing, raise the fallen, and carry the gospel to every creature. This is done by establishing schools and rescue homes, circulating good literature, and ministering to the necessities of the poor.

Now, the question as to how to create interest. On whom does the responsibility rest? First, on the pastor. God has made him the shepherd over his flock, and given him the privilege to lead them "into green pastures and beside the still waters." By fasting and prayer and diligent effort the pastor may lead the women of his church where he wants them to go. They look to him for leadership. The path may sometimes be rough, but by persistence all obstacles can be overcome. Having the pastor's sympathies, prayers, and co-operation, the next duty is upon the president. She must be a woman of deep piety; she must go into the work feeling that it is of God, and that it requires much thought and wise planning, together with consecration of herself to his service. She should preside at all meetings, opening them with devotional exercises, and impress upon the officers their individual responsibilities. She should hold a meeting of the Executive Committee before each regular meeting to discuss ways and means by which to advance the work, and a programme should be arranged for the next meeting. She should always be at her post of duty, and impress upon each member the great need of her presence and her prayers. The business should be dispatched as quickly as possible, without hurrying; requiring written report from each officer and chairman of committees. The literature distributed and read, for no organization can flourish if its members are in ignorance.

There are thousands of our women who turn a deaf ear to this work, if they were informed would become willing workers. Every society should take the reading course, and every member the paper, 'Our Homes," the organ of the society. Then the financial part of the work must be considered, although this should always be looked upon as the smallest part of the work, for wherever there is deep spirituality this problem is solved. When the heart is warmed by the sweet influence of God's love and the mind informed of the world's need, the purse-strings loosen and the coffers are filled. The meetings will then become interesting; the home parsonage will be made more comfortable for the itinerant; the rescue homes will be more numerous; the poor little homeless, friendless vagrants will be gathered into homes, where they will be provided with the necessaries of life, and educated mentally, physically and spiritually. The foreigners on our shores will be brought to the saving knowledge of Christ, and "The wilderness will blossom as the rose."

WHAT IS NEEDED FOR OUR GREAT FORWARD MOVEMENT?

To answer in full is beyond my ability. I can only offer a suggestion. The question implies deficiency somewhere. This can not be in God. He who gave the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," added the promise, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He is all-sufficient. The lack is in us.

What do we need for this great forward movement? A better organization? The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society seems about as nearly perfect as an organization can be made. The Women's Board, Conference secretaries, district secretaries, and auxiliaries—these links form a chain, perfect for the work required.

Is money the great need? Surely the society is not composed entirely of poor women—poorer even than the widow who gave two mites. The organization is all we could desire; there is among us money sufficient to accomplish great things; then what lack we? When the rich young man came to Jesus, claiming, "All these have I done; what lack I yet?" the reply was, "One thing thou lackest; go, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and come follow me." And that young man went away grieved. His need was supreme, all-compelling love, without which all his doing was useless.

What was needed for the greatest of all movements—the salvation of a lost world? "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And that Son commands us, "Love one another, as I have loved you."

When a child, learning to sew, I sat one day at the machine with a long seam to be stitched. Vigorously I worked the treadle; yet, with my most strenuous efforts, I made but slow progress. At last I cried, "Mother, please come here; I am tired out, and have sewed just a little way." Mother came, examined the machine, found it well oiled, correctly threaded, and seemingly in perfect order; but, after watching for a moment my efforts, she said, "No wonder you make such slow progress, and are so tired; your labor is lost, because the band needs tightening." Then she explained to me how the power applied to the treadle was wasted when the band was too loose to carry it to the wheel that moved the machinery. She remedied the defect, and without further trouble the work went forward.

Sisters, to realize indeed this hoped-for great forward movement, do we not need, for one thing, that God should tighten the bands of love binding our hearts to him, so that the full power of his Spirit may be communicated to us?

Remember, 'God so loved that he gave," and such must ever be the divine order of the two—loving and giving. Where we love we will give; the more we love, the more we will give; and, through love, the giving becomes a joy. A. B. H.

SHALL OUR WOMEN ORGANIZE?

Thinking over the appeal made by our missionaries at the General Missionary Conference in New Orleans, I feel constrained to urge the women of our church in the Mississippi Conference not only to read the appeal, but to join the ranks of our Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies, and help us in the great work that appeal sets before us.

The cause of missions is the organized effort of the church to fulfill the last command of Christ; then our fidelity to that cause must be the true measure of our love and of our loyalty to him. The kingdom of heaven is not to be taken by indifference. The violent take it by force—that is, those who love much, care much, work and pray much, are conquerors by the power of God.

The need for workers was never so great. This is a crisis in our home church. Young women are giving themselves to go to the foreign fields by the dozen. The work requires their services. Nothing prevents the church from sending them but the money that the church members should have given, but withhold.

Dr. Griffith John, who has been at work in China for forty-five years, says: "I do not consider the difficulties external to the church of vital importance. The difficulties within the church at home are the ones that trouble me."

Upon the strength of the home societies depends the success of the work in the foreign fields. The home society may be called the brain, the aggregation of many nerve cells; the stations in the foreign field are the nerve centers in which is generated and stored up nerve force that is to distribute vitality and activity to remote parts of our great missionary body.

The work at home and abroad is inseparably connected. We can never expect great results in the foreign fields with a home church half asleep and ignorant of the church's greatest need. The old command of Christ echoes down the long aisles of the ages, "Evangelize!" And during the beginning of the twentieth century a new voice of providence is heard pealing out: "Lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes. I have made all things ready; even the isles of the sea are brought near. I, the Lord, have hastened it in my time. All power is given me in heaven and earth. Go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel to every creature."

Nothing so cripples home work as neglect of the wider fields. To withhold from the farthest is to cramp sympathy for the nearest, and what is often assigned as a reason for a lack of missionary zeal and effort is rather the effect of it. If we but knew it, it is because we have such burdens to be borne in the home work that we need the stimulus and strength imparted by active missionary effort for the most distant and destitute.

Dear sisters, who are not engaged in this greatest of all work—that of sending the gospel to benighted lands—I beg of you to heed the call of our missionaries to you, and may that call to go forward to send missionaries and money to the field help you to understand your duty to this work, and may it lift you out of a lack of expectation arising from looking merely at things seen, to behold and lay hold of the reality of the unseen plan of God.

We need you in this work; need your prayers, your love and sympathy. The responsibility rests alike upon all Christians. Its promotion is no more the duty and privilege of those who go to the mission field, and of those who administer the work at home, than it is of other Christians. This work has come to be such a power and inspiration in the lives of those engaged in it that we feel it our duty to press it upon others. Let us devote ourselves with enthusiasm to its realization, and be not satisfied with the little which we are now doing, but only in doing all that we can. SALLIE SMYLIE.

You may use a child-like confidence in coming to your Father in heaven; you may unbosom before him your smallest disquietudes. With holy habit hasten with everything to God, not merely when the weightier class of calamities oppresses you, but amid the perturbations of ordinary life, the collisions of business, the perplexities of the household, the mutations of health and spirits—nay, the clouds of the sky, which too often carry darkness into the windows of the shrinking and sensitive soul. The very moods which make our wheels drag slowly through the daily task, the tempers of those around us, the petty disappointment and chagrin, the slight, the cross, the look of unkindness, and the silence of rebuke—all are dispensed in season and love. Happy is the soul which, having secured an interest in providence by securing an acceptance in Christ, can roll its burden on the Lord!—James W. Alexander.

We need to pray more for the grace of patience. That was such a tender and appropriate prayer of Paul for the saints to whom he wrote, "The Lord direct your hearts into the patience of Christ."—Southern Churchman.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional disease.

It originates in a scrofulous condition of the blood and depends on this condition.

It often causes headache and dizziness, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, affects the vocal organs, disturbs the stomach.

It is always radically and permanently cured by the blood-purifying, alterative and tonic action of

Hood's Sarsaparilla

This great medicine has wrought the most wonderful cures of all diseases depending on scrofula or the scrofulous habit.

Hood's PILLS are the best cathartic.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

TRAINING COURSE.

Early in October we purpose to begin to utilize part of our column for a training course for teachers. In this we are not designing a series of editorial articles, but we wish to make it a symposium of methods. We, therefore, ask our teachers and others to send us by Oct. 1, to Yazoo City, Miss., short replies to either or both of the following questions:

1. How do you prepare the lessons?

2. How do you secure attention in your class?

If we succeed in interesting our teachers, we will submit other questions each week. Our one aim and prayer is to make this column profitable, and we appeal to the Sunday-school teachers to assist us in this symposium. If any one desires to submit a question for discussion, we will be glad to print it.

Let every teacher who reads this send in a short reply by Oct. 1, and invite others to do likewise.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

One week from the date of this issue, Sept. 18, the Sunday-school Institute will open at Jackson, Miss. The programme was published last week. We again appeal to our pastors and superintendents to urge their teachers and workers to attend. Excellent conductors have been secured, and it will certainly be a profitable occasion. Primarily, it is for the Methodist Sunday-school teachers of the Jackson district, but, through the kindness of the good people of Jackson, the invitation was broadened to include every teacher and worker of every denomination and any locality who desired to attend. We trust a large number will avail themselves of the opportunity.

This Institute is preliminary to one we hope to have Prof. Hamil hold at an early day. His services will be at the disposal of each one of our three Conferences, if they so desire, and not the least important part of his services will be the training of men and women in the very work of holding these Institutes. At present there is a great lack of trained conductors. But we hope the time will soon come when the Institute will be considered a necessity in every county and parish, and when there will be plenty of skilled laborers to hold them. We believe the Institute will be the medium through which the Sunday-schools of our two sister States will be greatly improved, enthused, and uplifted.

RALLY DAY.

Now that the warm weather has nearly passed, the day-schools are opening, and our people have nearly all returned from their Summer vacations, the faithful superintendents are naturally anxious to see their classes fill up and their schools resume their wonted size. No better way has been found to stimulate activity and bring in the stragglers than the observance of Rally Day. An interesting programme widely published and faithfully carried out will give the school a good start on its Fall and Winter campaign. Usually the last Sunday in September or the first one in October is observed.

In country districts the Beat Convocation, whether denominational or interdenominational, will have the desired effect. They are said to be a good antidote against country schools hibernating or going into Winter-quarters. In many village and city schools Rally Day has established itself as one of the landmarks of the year, and has proved to be a powerful stimulant to the life of the school.

In the Magazine, for September, is a statement of the result of the appeal to various schools for $100 for the Yoan fund. The results so far are gratifying. We are not speaking by authority, but we presume offerings from schools not able to give $100 will be accepted. We would urge all our schools, large and small, to contribute as much as they can. Should more than ten thousand dollars be raised by our schools, the whole amount will be well applied. We think our church has projected no enterprise that promises better or more far-reaching results than the Soochow University. It will be a lasting blessing to our Sunday-schools if they will raise a large part of the funds needed.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

PROVIDENCE CIRCUIT.

We have held our round of protracted meetings, and send you an account of them. At Monticello we were assisted from Monday night to the close of the meeting by J. P. Drake. The preaching was good and very entertaining. No accessions, but the Christian people were revived and encouraged. At Providence we held two days the first time, and the rains were so heavy we closed the meeting. H. J. Moore assisted. He delighted our people. He is a coming young man.

Our Georgetown meeting lasted four days, and H. J. Moore and Prof. Haddleston were both with us. The meeting was profitable in a spiritual sense, and the social features were of the finest type. There are few such interior sections as Georgetown neighborhood.

Bahala Chapel meeting lasted four days. Five joined the church, and they promise much good for the future in God's work. F. M. Williams assisted here and preached with great acceptability. Though nearing his seventy-seventh year, he is, if anything, a better preacher than he was twenty or thirty years ago. If his health does not fail, he will never be laid on the shelf.

The third quarterly meeting came Aug. 17 and 18, and we had the presiding elder and M. L. Burton on Saturday and Sunday. They gave us good sermons, and added interest to the occasion by talks and speeches.

On Monday, F. M. Williams came and preached a very appropriate sermon; and we then closed this, the second protracted meeting for Providence Church.

Silver Creek Church having been recently added to this charge, we held a three days' meeting there, closing last Tuesday. There were four accessions, and it was a most pleasant and profitable meeting. Here the pastor did all the preaching.

There is more unity of spirit and practical Christianity than in the two former years.

C. MCDONALD.

WILKINSON CHARGE.

We are still moving along on the Wilkinson circuit finely. We have held our third Quarterly Conference; Presiding Elder Adams on hand as usual, looking after the interest of the church. The collections this year are ahead of what they were this time last year. Pastor's salary about 25 per cent. We lack about 10 per cent. of having our Conference collections up in full, in cash and subscription. We expect soon to have all up in full on these collections.

We have just closed a fine meeting at Hopewell. One accession by profession, several conversions, and backsliders reclaimed. The last service was a glorious victory. A general handshaking, Christians embracing one another—father and son, mother and son, mother and daughter, and brothers and sisters. To God be all the glory. I was assisted by Bro. M. Farrell. He is good help in revival work. More anon.

Fraternally,

C. C. GRIFFIN, P. C.

Gloster, Miss.

DE KALB, MISS.

DEAR DOCTOR: We have just closed a meeting at New Hope Church of some power. Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Enterprise, did the preaching. Better help I have never had. The church was greatly strengthened. There were more than twenty-five conversions; eleven accessions on profession of faith.

Fraternally,

H. MELLARD, P. C.

WALNUT GROVE

DEAR ADVOCATE: Walnut Grove circuit is enjoying a sweeping revival. Perhaps never before has the entire circuit been so mightily stirred. Such has never been the case; so the old members tell me. We expect to bring this work out on top.

Your brother,

C. M. CROSSLEY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

BAKER, LA.

DEAR DOCTOR: We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Deerford, on the Baker circuit. It was a glorious time in the revival of the church; all who attended were graciously blessed. Bro. R. W. Tucker, of Lake Charles, was with us and did the preaching, doing good plain, gospel preaching, and with great power. There were two accessions and some conversions, with many reclamations.

Yours truly,

ROBERT RANDLE.

ALEXANDRIA, LA.

The Alexandria District Training-school, under the auspices of the M. E. Church, South, began a promising session on the second instant. Rev. S. J. Davies was elected principal, with Mrs. B. F. White, assistant teacher. This school is in harmony with the action of the last session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, recommending, through its Board of Education, that such institutions be founded.

Bro. Davies requests that his friends address him at Alexandria.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, the presiding elder, writing of Columbus district, says:

"Crops in my district have been hurt by both drouth and rain. But the situation is far better than a year ago. Peaches, melons, poultry, eggs and cross-ties are sources of considerable revenue. Our people in this section made no corn last year, had all to buy this year, and most of their meat; so it will consume the gains of this year to pay out. The people ought to inquire whether these material losses are not due to the neglect of the Lord's cause. Faithful service to him is man's security, and saves him from spending so much on secular life.

"The preachers are making strong effort in this district to bring up all the collections. They are a faithful band of noble men of God. Many good meetings have been held, nearly altogether by the preachers themselves, assisted by some of their brother pastors. Members have been revived, sinners converted, and all interests advanced."

Just a glimpse of a woman's face is often all that is needed to tell the story of her daily suffering. No woman can endure for long the pangs of womanly diseases without falling off in face and form.

Women who have been cured of womanly diseases by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, frequently refer with pleasure to the gain in appearance as well as in feelings, which has come with their cure.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence treated as sacredly private and confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Your medicines have done me so much good I feel like a different woman," writes Mrs. Mary Murphy, of Mutton, Trimble Co., Kentucky. "Six months ago I began to think I would not see another well day, but had made up my mind to follow your advice and give Dr. Pierce's medicines a thorough trial. I have taken six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' six of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' four vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, two bottles of 'Smart Weed,' Also some 'Lotion Tablets.' Have gained five pounds since last August. I will tell the good news to all suffering invalids, for it was a 'Heavenly message' to me when I found out what to do for relief."

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well. Accept no substitute for the medicine which works wonders for weak women.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NUMBER.

According to previous arrangement, almost the whole of this issue of the ADVOCATE is devoted to the Meridian district, the object being to arouse interest in behalf of our foreign mission work. A large number of extra copies will be distributed through the district, and we trust great good will be accomplished. Brethren who have favored us with communications will understand that everything gave way, as far as needed, to Meridian.

Our Lord inaugurated the missionary work of the church, and exemplified it by going throughout Judea and preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

The old adage, "Charity begins at home," is a great favorite with those whose sympathy for needy men is never extended beyond the yard of their next-door neighbor.

Men in darkness and ignorance know not their needs, and would live and die without the gospel had not the Lord commissioned his church to send it to every creature.

The question for a Christian man to settle is not whether the heathen will be lost without the gospel, but whether he can be saved unless he does his best to give them the gospel.

A man ought to be ashamed to call himself a Christian, or to acknowledge himself a member of the church, unless he is in full sympathy with the Master whose heart yearns for the salvation of all men.

The gospel is so thoroughly missionary in its spirit and demands that it binds every man who accepts it to cherish the spirit of missions, and to join his fellow-Christians in sending out the light and truth to all the world.

The brother who declines to give for the support of our foreign work on the ground that many sections of our own country are just as much in need of the gospel as the heathen, should be requested to double his contribution to our home mission work on the spot.

The believer in divine sovereignty who persists in saying that if God wants the heathen saved, he will save them in his own good time, and in his own way, ought to remember that now is God's time, and that he is ordained of God to assist in the work.

THE MISSIONARY CONSCIENCE.

The Master said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The Christian man who accepts this command as authoritative does not stop to consider whether the command was intended for the church, and to be obeyed through the church, or whether the duty was laid on the apostles as individuals. He finds in it the method by which the Lord would have the world evangelized, and takes to himself the command as though it was issued directly to him. He feels responsible to the full extent of his ability for its execution. The matter is put upon his conscience.

He is so fully persuaded of the truth of the gospel, and its inestimable benefits to the world, that he can not rest while the world is in ignorance of Christ. He does not puzzle himself over the question whether God can save the heathen without the gospel, for he sees very clearly that his own salvation is endangered, unless he does what he can to give the gospel to the unsaved millions of his race, and exerts himself to carry out the purposes of his Lord. This does not necessarily mean that every Christian man and woman who has a missionary conscience feels under obligation to go to the heathen nations in person. That is not practical, nor is it required. It was not possible for the few disciples who heard the Lord's command to go to all the world then known and inhabited, and we do not suppose that each one understood the command in a literal sense. But it was possible for them to so separate themselves, and to go to different sections, and multiply, as in due time to reach all the world. Upon this principle the apostles and the early converts acted.

As the disciples multiplied—and they multiplied rapidly—they were possessed with the desire to carry the Word into other parts, and yet all could not go. A few could go, and these were sent out, followed by the prayers and well-wishes of those who remained at home. Read the Acts of the Apostles for further information. If the reading does not convince you that the early church had the missionary conscience, and the missionary spirit, and the missionary way, then we are mistaken in the meaning of the history.

The command of Christ as given to the apostles has never been countermanded. It is still in force. And yet all can not literally obey it. If it was impossible, then how is it possible now for every Christian to leave his home for a foreign field? That some are specially called, and are under obligation to go, we do not doubt. It was so when the Holy Ghost said to the church at Antioch, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." It is so now. Some are called and go. But, what of those who remain at home? Have they no missionary conscience? We are not to say no because they remain at home, but yes, because while they can not go they send. With no special call to a foreign field, or perhaps impossible for them to go, they make it possible for some one else to enter the work. They thus ease their conscience, and are quite as obedient to the Master as the one who says: "Here am I, send me."

The missionary conscience is not as thoroughly quickened as it should be nor as it will be when the church fully realizes its obligation to the heathen world. That the church is slow, appears to human sight to be a fact. Nineteen hundred years have passed since the command of our Lord was given—ample time, it seems, for the salvation of as small a world as ours, but still one-half the world has not yet heard the gospel. Why, it is useless to say further than that the church has not been, since the early days, thoroughly aroused to the needs of the work. Had apostolic zeal been kept up, long since the world would have been filled with the knowledge of the gospel.

But the church is arousing: conscience is at work. Forty years ago we did not think that women could do anything—to send them out as missionaries to foreign lands would have been out of all question. But we have learned that they are necessary to success in the work, and they are now being employed by the hundreds. Twenty years ago the young people had no employment in the church. They simply had their names on the church roll, and were expected to be quiet and obedient. Now they are an army of workers—home missionaries, and actively engaged in promoting the work abroad. And everywhere, in all evangelical churches, men and women, young and old, are engaged as never before, and as never before, in modern times, is the gospel making its way. The recent persecutions bring to mind the days of stripes and imprisonment and death in the early church, and again is verified the saying: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." The harvest is great.

We can not account for this wonderful revival in missionary zeal except upon the principle that God has laid the work upon the consciences of the people, and that they are responding to his call. Men and women are answering and going, and those who can not go are giving, and the work is enlarging.

God's purpose is the universal spread of the gospel. He will have it so. He has promised his Son the heathen for his inheritance and the nations of the earth for his possession. This promise fulfilled, the world shall be covered with the knowledge and glory of God as the waters that cover the sea. If the church is faithful and active, with the facilities of the twentieth century at hand, this generation will not pass away until all these things are fulfilled. Amen!

THE ASSESSMENT FOR MISSIONS THE MINIMUM.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

It was my privilege to be present during the meeting of the Board of Missions in Nashville, Tenn., June 13-15. Bishop Candler, who has charge of the Cuban Mission, and Dr. Carter, the superintendent, had made very careful estimates of the amount actually and urgently needed for that most inviting and most promising field. They had been over the ground. They had studied the work. They knew the cost of living in Cuba—food, clothing, house-rent, lands, buildings, etc.; and where houses of worship ought to be built at once. Items were furnished, and the aggregate was $76,506. But the Committee on Estimates had considered not only Cuba, but also China, Korea, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, the Indian Territory, and the Pacific coast; and they knew too well that the treasurer of the Board had received during the year 1900-1901 from regular collections only $262,850.72; for specials, $4,233.50; total, $267,084.22, from which had to be deducted $4,959.08 interest on $36,000 of annuities and short loans, and $20,235.08 collected and used in the field. This left only $241,890.06 subject to appropriation. And the Committee on Estimates recommended $11,400 for Cuba, instead of the $76,506 asked for and sorely needed. The Board could only ratify the committee's estimate, for China wanted $40,856 besides the specials for Soochow, and could only get $33,116; Japan needed $16,930, but could only get $36,751; Korea sorely needed $19,377, but could only be allowed $10,802; Brazil called for $97,100, but could only be granted $36,800, and the three Mexican Conferences, and the Indian Territory, the Denver, the Montana, the Western, the German Mission, the Pacific, the Los Angeles, the Columbia, and the East Columbia and the New Mexico were asking for more men and more money. Altogether, $425,288 were asked for, but the appropriations could not exceed the collections of the year just closed, and so $239,216 only could be promised or appropriated. Open doors everywhere. Men and women offering to go. Opportunities such as we have never had before. And yet the hands of the Board are tied. How can any preacher be satisfied with raising one cent less than the assessment? How can any church member be content to dole out nickels and dimes to the great cause of missions—the getting the world ready for the coming of the Lord—and spend dollars upon dollars in needless and ofttimes hurtful self-indulgence? Forty-seven young men and women have offered themselves for the foreign field. The Board could find places for a hundred where there are cries for help. The assessments in full would send the helpers! The churches are able to pay five times the assessments. What does God expect us to do?

THE ITINERANCY THE GENIUS OF THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT IN THE CHURCH.

BY REV. G. S. HARMON.

This was true at the incipiency; has been true all along; is true now. Jesus itinerated from heaven to earth itinerated while on earth. He was tremendously in earnest in his missionary labors, and inspired his followers with the same spirit, "As ye go, preach."

"Go" is the dynamic force, the impelling power of the gospel. The ascending Lord emphasized it, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." It was re-emphasized at Pentecost. The divine impulse received with the coming of the "promise of the Father" sent forth a band of Spirit-filled itinerants with "power" to preach, teach, suffer. On they went, preaching Christ everywhere, and "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Paul had the itinerant spirit and enthusiasm. On and on he went, piling up huge missionary labors, proving at home and abroad that "the gospel of Christ was the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believed."

It was true of the early fathers. Undaunted by monarchs, prisons, lions, fagots, they went hither and yon telling a lost world of a Christ mighty to save.

John Wesley was a living exponent of this truth. No limited sphere of action for this apostolic man. "I look upon all the world as my parish." This heroic utterance was inspired not only by fiery zeal and unquenchable love, but was the voice of prophecy, for his indomitable itinerant spirit, transmitted to his sons and daughters in the gospel, has won the world for a parish. Glory to God! the sun never sets on the laborers called Methodists.

Asbury and his preachers possessed this spirit. They saw a continent to be won for Christ. Onward they went, a militant, conquering host. Six million Methodists to-day witness to their herculean missionary labors.

The itinerancy is the life of missions. Let the itinerancy die, and the missionary spirit in the church dies with it. But the itinerancy will not die. Triumphant in the past, there are yet greater victories ahead. The air is pregnant with mighty events. Vast opportunities are before us: they must be grasped. Doors are opening; they must be entered.

That the church may be "thoroughly furnished" for the work, God grant her a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost, a renewal of the old-time power. May she, re-enthused with the missionary spirit, "go forward" in solid phalanx, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," preaching the gospel: "A great Savior for great sinners," "Christ the power of God unto salvation," until "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." And this not in her own sufficiency, but in the strength of him without whom she can do nothing.

"Ye shall have power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." "Go—preach; and, lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

THE SUPREME AIM OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

It is only found in what our Lord declared to be the end of all evangelism—to glorify the Father. In every parable he spoke, as in every miracle he wrought, as well as in the doctrines he taught, and in the things he suffered, this one thought was the inspiration. And nowhere did he reveal that the success of the effort to glorify the Father lay in the effect it produced. If the offering of his life had not resulted in the salvation of a single soul, his desire and aim to glorify the Father would have been just as complete and as acceptable as it is in the great multitude of the saved John saw.

And this is the aim and the inspiration of the church to-day. It is neither the fact, nor yet the condition of the multitudes who have never heard of Christ, that appeals first to the heart and life of the church and of the individual. The glory of the Father must be the first thought of every true child of God, while that of the neighbor is ever recognized as standing most closely related. At this point it is impossible to think of one expecting the approval of the Father in the last day, who totally discards, or even half-heartedly supports, this great central thought in Christian life.

Nor is it the first thought with the church, nor yet the individual, as what will be the effect of the effort upon the heathen, nor yet that of its cost. Our Lord held back no part of the price, though much of it seemed to be wasted. And where this great law of life is written in the heart, the effort will not cease to be made and the expense incurred regardless of results. Let us not infer from this, however, that we are to be prayerless over results. We can not neglect the duty to our neighbor without, at the same time, vitiating that which we seem to perform to the Father. He who gives, and fails to pray the divine blessing upon the gift, has no more the Spirit of Christ than has he who refuses to give and yet thinks he prays.

A GOOD CASE.

A saved man is a missionary at heart, and he is not saved until he is. This has been a part of my creed for some years, and I see no reason in my growing experience for discarding it.

Not long since I went to help a brother in a meeting, and at the close of the Sunday morning service he read out the assessments that he and the stewards had made on the individual members for the cause of missions, to which there was general agreement. At one of the mid-week services a middle-aged man came to the altar in great distress as a penitent. At the close of a second prayer he responded, with beaming face, to the proposition of trust in Christ as his personal Savior. When the benediction was pronounced I saw him hurry over to his pastor, and, being interested in him, I stepped closer to hear what he had to say, just in time to catch his eager words: "Brother, I want you to double my assessment for missions. I'll pay you the money just as soon as I can." H. M. ELLIS.

PERSONAL.

The many friends of Dr. S. A. Steel in Mississippi will be glad to hear from him through the ADVOCATE. We will have a letter from him next week.

Rev. G. W. Bachman sends news of the sickness of Rev. R. I. Allen, of the Carrollton circuit. As no particulars were given, we trust the sickness is not serious.

Rev. B. W. Lewis, writing from Chunkey, Miss., says: "We are in the midst of a grand revival at this place. Brother Foreman, of Rose Hill, is doing the preaching." We are glad to chronicle such good news.

Dr. Hoss, of the Christian Advocate, was sensible and pertinent the other day at the Ecumenical Conference when he said it would "be an impertinence for the Conference to dictate to England what she ought to do in South Africa."

Rev. W. M. Williams, of Columbia, Miss., informs us of the death of Mr. J. P. Starr, his wife's father. He died at Fannin, Miss., Aug. 28, in the seventy-third year of his age. The bereaved wife and children have the sympathy of many friends.

We learn from Brother J. F. Sexton, of Crystal Springs, and president of the Camp Meeting Association, that "the camp meeting closed gloriously." There were nine additions to our church at Crystal Springs, and four other churches will receive some new members.

Bishop Galloway reached London several days in advance of the opening of the Ecumenical Conference (so we learn from Rev. T. B. Holloman, of Jackson, Miss.), and the press dispatches say that he preached the introductory sermon, as had been previously arranged.

Brother Geo. C. Willson, one of the oldest members of our church in North Mississippi, died at his home in Abbeville, Aug. 25. Brother Willson was born Dec. 18, 1810. Rev. R. G. Porter, who gives us this information, says "Brother Willson was not sick, but died of old age."

Rev. W. F. Hamner, pastor of First Church, Jackson, Tenn., is resting a while at Ocean Springs, enjoying the cool breezes and salt atmosphere of the Gulf. He ran up to the Seashore Camp Ground last week, but we failed to see him, as our duties called us to the city. We hope to meet him yet.

We are glad to learn that Gov. G. D. Shands, who was kept from attending the Ecumenical Conference at London by a sudden attack of sickness, has recovered. He has reached his home, Oxford, Miss., and will be ready to resume his place in the law faculty of the university at the opening, Sept. 12.

Dr. J. M. Weems, of Meridian, has been sick recently, but, notwithstanding, he has rendered efficient service in preparing matter for the Meridian district number of the ADVOCATE. The larger portion of it came to us edited by his careful hand. We are glad to say that his health has about been restored.

Rev. B. P. Patterson, of the North Mississippi Conference, after two months of illness, is able to be up and move about, but not able to resume work. He will be compelled to be quiet for the remainder of the Conference year. Brother Patterson says he owes his life to the kind attention of his people and physicians at Poplar Creek. We rejoice with him that he is on the way to recovery.

We had the pleasure, last week, of a few moments' conversation with Rev. H. C. Brown, of Terry station, Mississippi Conference. Brother Brown happened a short time since to a very painful accident. A sudden jerk of a rail-train just as he was entering a car threw him violently against the door, one of his hands and a large part of his body going through the glass, cutting his hand severely. He is now on an enforced vacation.

The Value of a Mite in Missions.

BY REV. A. T. BELL.

The value of money is not intrinsic, but comparative and representative. It represents labor, skill, desire, and sometimes even life itself. A coin is worth just what it represents or produces. Hence, remembering that Christ wants the spirit of his gospel to enter and control every human heart, we can well believe that he estimates the value of money gifts by what they represent, rather than by weights, measures, or figures.

A thousand dollars, contributed with flourish of trumpets by a wealthy Pharisee, inflates him with self-complacent pride, while a mite, given by a heart of love and self-denial, begets in that heart deeper love, more earnest desire, and greater sacrifices. It represents affection, zeal, and devotion, and produces these qualities in a greater degree.

So the first and, perhaps, the greatest value of our missionary mite is not the number of Bibles it will purchase, nor of missionaries it can equip, but this subjective, educative effect on the donor. Nor does its worth stop there. The blatant Pharisee, learning the proportionate wealth of the smaller donation, may become ashamed of his niggardly gift of $1,000 (a cheap enough advertisement of himself), and may gain some perception of the reflex benediction which the mite produces, and also some disappointment that he does not participate in its blessing. And thus the gift of the poorer contributor—a gift so rich in love and productive of such ardent devotion—will stimulate others of greater opportunities to larger gifts.

The influence of the widow's mite in Mark xii is not yet exhausted, nor will it ever be. Many have been—many shall be—the larger gifts bestowed by fervent Christian hearts in response to her example who loved her Lord so devotedly as to give for his sake "all her living."

Do you suppose that every young man or young lady will, on reading this notice, ask W. T. Foster, President Mississippi Normal College, Houston, Miss., how exceedingly cheap he can put the session's expense for the pupil? Those in earnest will, especially if they know the value of a dollar, and this is one time inquisitiveness will pay.

Rally Day.

CHUNKEY, MISS.

September 3 was observed as Missionary Rally Day for Chunkey circuit. It came in the midst of our revival. Bro. Foreman, of Rose Hill, who is assisting me in the meeting, preached at eleven o'clock on "Home Missions," and Bro. L. F. Alford, of Meridian, preached in the afternoon on the text, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." It was a day long to be remembered in Chunkey. Many people renewed their vows, and promised to do a better part for the Lord's cause. The influence of that day's work will not stop in time, but will go on through eternity.

I expect to go up to Conference with a much better report than I have heretofore. Pray for us.

B. W. LEWIS.

Vimville.

We held our Missionary Rally on the day appointed (the sixth of August). Neither of the brethren appointed to hold this meeting could come; so it fell to the lot of the pastor. We had a good congregation at Coker Chapel on this occasion, and believe that good was accomplished. Our collection was not as much as we think it should have been.

R. E. RUTLEDGE.

What Part of Our Income Belongs to the Lord?

BY REV. B. W. LEWIS.

I would say all, for we are commanded to consecrate everything to the Lord, and then we are his, and all that we have and are belong to him.

The subject we wish to discuss is, What part of our income should be placed in the Lord's treasury? This, as all Bible readers know, is one-tenth. God wrote this upon the heart of man, prior to the appointment of the Levitical tithes, under the law, for Abraham presented the tenth of all his property, or, rather, of the spoils of his victory, to Melchizedek, and Jacob, after his vision at Luz, devoted a tenth of all his property to God, in case he should return home in safety. The first enactment of this law is the declaration that the tenth of all produce, as well as of flocks and cattle, belongs to Jehovah. We are not lawless beings left to live at random; nor has God given us a law, and left it optional with us to observe or not. But it is imperative with us; we must do it, or inherit a curse for omitting to do it. Since the fact that the tithe law has been established, the question is, whether the gross or net proceeds should be tithed. The Bible is plain on this subject: "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year." (Deut. xiv, 22.) While this has reference to the second tithe, yet it teaches what should be tithed.

If you would please the Lord, cease robbing him, and bring ye all the tithes into his store-house, that there may be meat in his house, and prove him now herewith, and see if he will not open unto you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough in your small vessel to receive it.

"Should the Poor Feel Any Obligations to Help in Missionary Work?"

This subject requires a great deal of thought, and the use of a pen with a wider range of knowledge and a longer experience than this scribe has at present.

Who are the poor of our churches? Is it those who are in meager circumstances? The answer to this question, I think, will be hard to solve, because of the fact that we will have to determine who the poor are. Then, if the poor are to feel no interest in this great work, we will have to look to the wealthier members of our churches, and a great many of our churches haven't this class of people to look to for help. Besides, it would be depriving some poor members of the privilege of helping in a work that they do feel an interest in.

When we consider the fact that a goodly part of our congregations are made up of members of meager circumstances, then I feel impressed to say that the poor should, and do feel an interest in this great work. The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, . . . and the poor have the gospel preached to them. (Matt. xi, 5.) If the poor have been benefited by this gospel, they ought to be more than willing to give of their substance, be it ever so little, to help in saving the heathen. No help is acceptable to God; neither does his approving smiles rest upon the helper or giver, unless given from a heart full of love for the Master's cause. "It is better to give than to receive." "God loveth a cheerful giver." "She hath given more than all they which hath cast into the treasury," was said in commendation of the poor widow. Let the poor give; let the rich give; let us all give to the glory of God.

Lauderdale Rally.

Tuesday, July 2, was the appointed time for our rally here, but, owing to the illness of the brethren who were to have been with us, we postponed it to Monday, the eighth. Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, of Canton, who was with us in a revival, delivered an address on missions—one of the best we ever listened to; a forceful, helpful, Spirit-filled utterance. We have reason to know that much good was accomplished. The congregation was not as large as we had hoped.

It is our purpose to hold a missionary rally at each church on the circuit.

G. S. HARMON, P. C.

Lauderdale, Miss., Aug. 10, 1901.

The Missionary Rally for the Enterprise charge was conducted by Dr. J. M. Weems, and that at Stonewall by Bro. A. T. Bell. The sermons were excellent and much appreciated by the congregations. They will certainly tell in the year's results on the charge.

Missionary Rally Day.

Our Rally Day services were held Tuesday, Aug 20. Bro. G. S. Harmon, of Lauderdale, gave us a very forceful and impressive address on missions at 11 o'clock A. M., and at 3 o'clock P. M. Miss Bettie Hughes gave us a striking talk that embodied some very exceedingly impressive experiences in her work in China. I desire to say that these servants of God have greatly helped our people in the mission work. We are dead sure to report every cent in full. We took a collection which amounted to $60 55.

Mr. Editor, we expect to look the Bishop in the face and report everything in full. God bless this great cause. P. H. HOWSE.

Blackstone Female INSTITUTE

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

A CHRISTIAN TRAINING SCHOOL for Girls, opened in 1890. Is this school the school for your daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement, main building 50x90 feet, with wing 30x70 feet, wide verandas, large and airy study halls, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights, water on every floor, with fire-class every fifty feet, Pyle-Hammond system of heating (each air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building), Pyle-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough. There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph Macon Faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. Thorough is the last word and the first word in the work of the school.

III. Successful. The purpose and work of the school have commended it to [illegible] Growth. Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—39, 58, 85, 126, 115, 145, 156. Number of officers and teachers in 1890, six; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1891, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHERS' COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. The mental and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President South, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

The Cigarette.

The following recommendation of its Standing Committee on Temperance was adopted by the General Assembly, and come to the Permanent Committee as part of its instruction for the coming year:

"Inasmuch as the cigarette habit among the young people of our country has reached such alarming proportions as to demand decisive action on the part of our General Assembly, we recommend that our Permanent Committee be directed to call the attention of our churches to this great evil, and to use their utmost endeavors to counteract the same."

Relative to this subject a widely known Ohio pastor writes us, making kind reference to an article recently published by us, but saying that he had always been at a loss to know why the cigarette has been singled out for special attack, when chewing is more disgusting and the smoking of the pipe or cigar more injurious.

My Dear Dr.—Your favor of recent date is before me, and I will do what I can toward making a satisfactory reply to its implied inquiry.

Your surprise at singling out the cigarette for special attack is no doubt shared by many. There being in the cigar and stogy, and in the tobacco ordinarily sold for either chewing or smoking, more nicotine poison than the cigarette contains, it might naturally be expected that reformers would make their first and principal attack on what seem to be the more dangerous enemies.

I have no doubt, however, that this very fact that the cigarette is milder and less poisonous has been a special reason for the prompt and vigorous effort to drive it out. The mild cigarette is regarded as the thin edge of the wedge. It is like the glass of beer, very mildly alcoholic as compared with distilled spirits. "It can't hurt anybody," we are told. "Let the boys have their beer." "Is it not a little one?" said the refugee from Sodom. But, said Solomon, "Take up the foxes, the little foxes that spoil our vines."

The tobacco habit, always expensive, useless, disgusting and injurious, is especially pernicious in its influence on growing youth. The form of tobacco indulgence which is by far the most prevalent among our boys is cigarette smoking, because the cigarette is milder and cheaper and is now the fashion.

But the cigarette is charged with being peculiarly injurious. Cigarette paper often contains arsenic, and some brands of cigarettes contain opium—in small quantity, of course, but enough to begin its insidious work and lead on to the opium crave.

The most important contention against the cigarette, however, is that the smoke is inhaled and retained till a larger quantity of the poison is absorbed by the system than in any other method of using tobacco. This practice would not be possible with the more pungent smoke of tobacco in its stronger forms.

If we would hopefully combat this poisonous narcotic, which is not only itself so fearfully destructive and demoralizing, but also leads on to drink and opium, we must begin with the young; and if we would try to save our boys, we must especially assail that form of tobacco indulgence which they most affect.—Selected.

"My Place."

For several days past I had been discontented. This morning I was especially uneasy, telling over to myself my grievances. I could not go to missionary meeting nor to prayer meeting, nor did I hardly find an opportunity to run into a neighbor's. For five years, now, I had been "tied" at home, with babies to care for, to say nothing of my Fred's old decrepit mother to wait upon and read to.

"My life is one continual round of homely duties," grumbled I, and the frettings of my heart hid just then even the brightness of duties well done.

"It is hard, hard!" said I. "I wish I could get out into the world—into the church—where my place surely is." I fretted until the cloudiness of my face was but a reflection of the shadow on my heart.

As I glanced from the window I saw the postman coming up the walk, and in a moment I held in my hand a package from a dear invalid friend, who had but recently gone home.

Hers had been a singularly hemmed-in life, even denied the blessed comfort of a father's or mother's love and care since a young child. Helpless, she was dependent upon strangers (in a sense), being cared for in turn by different members of her church, yet she was one of the blithest little bodies I had ever met. She had been a constant inspiration to me; and, because I was her dearest friend, her meager belongings had fallen to me.

I undid the package eagerly. On the top were papers. I opened the first I touched. How the familiar handwriting stirred my heart! Through fast-filling eyes I read these words written in my friend's dear hand:

Yesterday, in a somewhat despondent mood, I wished I could cast off this infirmity of the flesh, go out into the world and claim my place among the workers. Suddenly this thought came with almost startling distinctness: "Why, you have no 'place' out in the world. This is your place, just where the Lord has put you; and even if it were possible for you to leave it and seek to fill another, it would not be one of the Lord's ordering, and you could not expect his blessing to attend you. You do not wish to be in a place of your own choosing." "No, no!" my heart responded. "If this is the place where the Lord wants me to be, it is just the place where I truly wish to be." Since I am here, it must be the place and the only place where I can do the work he has given into my hands. "What is my work?" I sadly questioned. "I see no fruit." "Loving is serving," came the renewed heart's answer. "Be receptive of all good influences; filled with the Spirit; and the overflow of your soul's riches will bless all who come near."

"Being dead, she yet speaketh," I sobbed, and I thanked God for my lesson—and my place—and took courage.—Lizzie Young Butler, in American Messenger.

The Atheist Silenced.

Some time ago a woman delivered a lecture in Lancashire against Christianity, in which she declared that the Gospel narrative of the life of Christ was a myth or fable. One of the mill hands who listened to her obtained leave to ask a question. "The question" said he, "I want to ask the lady is this: Thirty years ago I was a curse to this town, and everybody shrank from me that had any respect for himself. I often tried to do better, but could not succeed. The teetotalers got hold of me, but I broke the pledge so often that they said it was no use trying me any longer; then the police got hold of me, and I was taken before the magistrates, and they tried; and next I was sent to prison, and the wardens tried what they could do; but though they all tried, I was nothing better, but rather worse. Now you say that Christ is a myth. But when I tried, and the teetotalers, and the police, and the magistrates, and the wardens of the prisons all tried in vain, then Christ took hold of me, touched my heart, and made me a new man. And now I am a member of the church, a class leader, a superintendent of the Sunday-school; and I ask, if Christ is a myth, how comes it that that myth is stronger than all the others put together?' The lady was silent. "Nay, miss," said he, "say what you will, the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation."—Exchange.

"I Gave Them Myself."

Said a mother to me one day: "When my children were young I thought the very best thing I could do for them was to give them myself. So I spared no pains to talk with them, to read to them, to teach them, to pray with them, to be a loving companion and friend to my children. I had to neglect my house often. I had no time to indulge myself in many things, which I should have liked to do. I was so busy adorning their minds and cultivating their heart's best affections that I could not adorn their bodies in fine clothes, though I kept them neat and comfortable at all times.

"I have my reward now. My sons are ministers of the gospel; my grown-up daughter is a Christian woman. I have plenty of time now to sit down and rest, plenty of time to keep my house in order, plenty of time to indulge myself, besides going about my Master's business wherever he has need of me. I have a thousand beautiful memories of their childhood to comfort me. Now that they have gone out into the world, I have the sweet consciousness of having done all I could to make them ready for whatever work God calls them to do."—Life and Faith.

Listening to Evil Reports.

The longer I live the more I feel the importance of adhering to the rules laid down for myself in relation to such matters.

To hear as little as possible to the prejudice of others.

To believe nothing of the kind till I am absolutely forced to it.

Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.

Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed toward others.

Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given the matter.—Carus.

How Nellie Got Right.

Nellie, who had just recovered from a serious illness, said:

"Mama, I prayed last night."

"Did you, dear? Don't you always pray?"

"Oh, yes; but I prayed a real prayer last night. I don't think I ever prayed a real prayer before. I lay awake for a long time. I thought what a naughty girl I had been so often. I tried to reckon up all the bad things I had done; there seemed to be lots of them. And I tried to remember what I did in one week, but there seemed to be such a heap: then I knew I had not remembered them all. And I thought what if Jesus had come to me when I was ill? Then I thought about Jesus coming to die for bad people, and he delights to forgive them.

"So I got out of bed and kneeled down and tried to tell Jesus how bad I was; and I asked him to think over the sins that I could not remember. Then I waited to give him time to think of them; and when I thought he had remembered them all, I asked him to forgive them. And I am sure he did. Mama, because he said he would."—Selected.

There is a world of dramatic pathos in a little scene that took place a few days ago at the office of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. An elderly man, who had evidently worked hard all his life and was not giving from a comfortable superfluity, came into the office and, holding out a clipping from a newspaper mentioning the need, always pressing in Winter, of money for fuel, asking if he was in the right place. Tears were in his eyes, and his hands trembled as he held out a crumpled and soiled envelope, and said there was something in it for the poor. He would not wait for a receipt, but, shaking his head slowly and drawing his hand across his eyes, he went slowly out of the room. The secretary opened the envelope with modest expectations, and was startled to find $200 in gold certificates lying before him on the desk. "We see many phases of human character in our work," he said, in telling his experience; "not all of them are elevating in their influence, but an incident like this makes one's faith in the sympathy and kindness of men stronger than ever."—Southern Churchman.

I crossed the ocean in a powerful steamship, which weighed more than twenty thousand tons, and pushed her way against wind and wave at the rate of over twenty knots an hour. I could not see the propeling force; that was hidden deep down in the glowing furnaces, helped constantly with fresh coal. That illustrates the spiritual life of every strong, healthy, growing Christian; his strength is measured by the inward supply of divine grace. The spiritual force and progress of a growing Christian prove that his life is hid with Jesus Christ. Happy are you if your neighbors, who can see you every day, can know by your outward conduct that your inner life is fed by an unseen Christ.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

Industrial Home at East Mississippi Female College.

On Sept. 18 we will open an Industrial Home for Girls in connection with East Mississippi Female College and Conservatory of Music, to be run on similar plan to State Industrial Schools, in which girls can live at much less expense, yet have the same excellent College and Conservatory advantages, and the benefit of the marvelous religious influence of the College. By close economy a girl can get through on $100 a year, board and tuition.

Tuition and board in the College "Annex" or Wesley Hall, $150. Tuition and board in the main building, $175. All buildings within 50 yards of each other. Teachers in all the buildings; same rules and same teachers for all students.
